Four distinct races inhabit Hungary—the Sclaves, the most numerous; the Germans, who are for the most part a mixed breed; the Magyars, and the Roumanians. There are also a great many Jews, who have increased and multiplied exceedingly of late years. For instance, in 1870, Pesth had only 40,000; now it is believed to have 50,000.

In Rutland, Vt., the Congregationalists refuse to partake of the holy sacrament from the same cup with their colored brothers and sisters. One cup was passed around to 101 white men and women, one of whom sat in the same pew with the four colored persons, and then another cup—a pewter one—was served to the two men of African descent.

Trustworthy statistics regarding the recent famine in India show that out of 1,668,000 inhabitants in the district of Bellary, 14,000 died of starvation in March alone, 1877. In that of Cydarah, out of 1,300,000, there died in February 11,442; in Kurnaul, out of 950,640, those that starved in January numbered 6,253. Out of 29,000,000 in Madras there died in February 105,175, and by the end of June over 500,000. Bombay lost over 165,000 in the first three months of the year, and it was anticipated that before relief came a total of 2,500,000 would die.

Ireland, or perhaps we should rather say the English aristocracy in Ireland, has had some narrow escapes. A writer in the Edinburgh Review, in 1807, says that in 1798 nothing but the dispersion of the French fleet by a storm saved that kingdom from conquest; in 1798 the plot by which the city of Dublin was to have been revolutionized was not discovered or counteracted until a few hours before the time appointed for its execution; in 1803 a distinguished nobleman was assassinated in the metropolis, and by this act, committed by the rabble contrary to the wishes of their leaders, the plan of another revolution was disconcerted.

Much alarm has been created at Moscow by the appearance of the Siberian plague. One day a laundress at the university, who was suspected of having died from it, was subjected to a post-mortem examination, with the result that the suspicions of the authorities were confirmed. Since then several other persons have succumbed to the same malady, which is more disastrous than either small-pox or cholera, and the police are now taking energetic measures to prevent the disease from spreading. It is believed that the seeds of the plague were brought from Tiflis either by Turkish prisoners or Russian invalids.

The Belgian Horticulturist states that there are mentioned in the Bible about fifty clearly distinguished plants, and some fifty others in more general terms. The works of Hippocrates mention 234 vegetable species, and those of Theophrates about 500. Pliny, in his natural history, gives the names of 300 plants. From the Renaissance botany, in common with so much else, took a vigorous start. In the sixteenth century one could find 600 plants in the works of Gesner, 1,400 in those of l'Escluse, 2,731 in Dalechamp's "General History of Plants," published in 1587, and 6,000 in a work by Bauhin. Further progress was made in the seventeenth century, and in the eighteenth Linnæus defined 7,294 vegetable species, distributed into 1,239 classes. In the nineteenth century, according to Person's "Synopsis Plantarum," from 25 to 26,000 vegetable productions were known in 1805. In 1853 Lindley, in his "Vegetable Kingdom," estimated the genera at 8,031, and the species at 92,920.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also proclaims as the means to the end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and "Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the possession of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a living faith of the Gospel, repentance, or a turning from sin to righteousness to the fact, the necessity of obedience, and a Holy life as essential for final salvation.

Theory Unsustained Will Not Answer --Restitution February 6.

That is from Facts versus theory, always! Writing of the sea beast, the revelator says (xiii. 3,) "I saw one of his—seven—heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed." (verses 11, 12,) "I saw another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, . . . and he causeth them—the people—to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed, . . (verse 14) saying they should make an image to (i. e. of. See verse 15) the—first—beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live." In chapter xvii. 7, the angel said to John, "I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, on whose forehead was written the name, Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth, (verse 5) and the beast (the scarlet colored beast of verse 3) that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns." (Verse 8.) "The beast that thou sawest carrying the woman, (verse 3) was, and is not: and shall ascend out of the abyss,' . . . (verse 11) "even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

Now I open my RESTITUTION (of Feb. 6) and read: "These two forms—Imperial and Papal—were each universal, and during their times each exercised controlling power over the entire body of this fourth or Roman beast, extending down to the close of the last century, when the last (the Papal) was killed by a sword and carried into captivity. . . . When this was fulfilled, then, and there, ended the seventh form."

Very well, that's good theory and may be fact. Suppose we grant it; then what? If the papal form be the seventh head, and is ended, it cannot be revived and live! Now, where does the eighth head come from? The angel told John, (John xvii. 11) that the eighth is of the seven. I. e. The eighth is the seventh revived, or it is some one of the seven, or it partakes in its characteristics of all the seven! or else it is all of the seven combined in one, constituting another, which would be a distinct eighth head, and this is an impossibility, for the ten horned, scarlet colored beast has but seven heads only, all told. Therefore the eighth head of the beast must be one of the preceding six revived, if so be that the seventh is ended. Here is a point that cannot be moved. But read on! We will. The article of Feb. 6, says next, "What form of government has ruled . . . the parts of the Roman kingdom since the killing and carrying into captivity of the papal head (1798) and will fulfill the two horned beast of chapter xiii. 11-18?"

To this inquiry I answer: Not the allied powers of Europe surely, unless the allies are of the seven preceding forms, according to chapter xvii. 11, and xiii. 11, and one of those allies—Russia—never was even a fractional, much less an integral, part of the Roman earth, out of which the two horned beast arose. Nor can it be the two horned beast, if so be that it is the eighth head that has ruled since 1798, for the eighth form, of head, is on the scarlet colored beast, and has ten horns instead of two. (Chapter xvii. 3, 7, 11, 12, 15, 17.)

The alliance was never formed at any time as against the papacy—the Pope—by the potentates of Europe; but as against Bonaparte, and not against him as citizen, nor as General, nor yet as Consul, but against Bonaparte as Emperor, head of the empire, and that empire not France alone, but as claiming by right:

1. As king of Italy and Rome its capital.
2. By conquest.
3. By treaty with Francis of Austria, after Austerlitz, to be the head; i. e., Emperor of the Roman Empire restored.

It was for this lust of power, for this mad combination, for this exercise of unlimited dominion, for this claim of universal empire, that sovereigns of Europe leagued together and swore to crush him, and for this only that the Great Powers in 1815 signed a first treaty, in which they proclaimed Bonaparte an outlaw, and pledged their faith to exterminate him from the face of the earth.

QUERIES.

1. If the papacy was the seventh head, and was ended in 1798, (or thereabouts), how could the Vienna congress restore it in 1815, or at any other time?

2. Allowing that the Vienna congress did restore the papacy—the seventh form—in 1815, is it not self-evident that the papacy itself in a restored state, with its deadly wound healed, is the eighth head going into perdition?

3. In as much as the Vienna congress refused to give back to the papacy the temporal power which Napoleon took away, granting sovereignty over the states of the church only, did not that congress restrict, instead of restore the papal power and dominion?

4. As the affirmed restordition continued only to 1871, does it not follow that the eighth head has already gone into perdition?

5. When did the head of the Protestant church, or the head of the Greek church ever combine to compel the dwellers in the Roman earth to worship the papacy?

6. If the fact of France being one of the original ten horns of the sea beast makes against her becoming a head, why does not the same argument hold good as against England being the two horned beast?

7. When did papal intolerance become the precepts of the Christian religion, agreeable to which Russia and England are pledged, by the allied compact, to govern?

8. If that intolerance has not been adopted as the ruling principle, where is the image made?

9. If the two horned beast is the power that succeeds the seventh form of the ten horned beast, constituting an eighth, and came up this side of 1798, how is it that the ten horns are not associated with the two horned beast in the compulsory worship of the restored head and image as required in chapter xvii. 13, 17, instead of hating her as they do and are required to in verse 16?

10. If the allies constitute the two horned beast, how is it that Victor Emanuel is styled the first king of Italy?

When these queries shall have been answered, and discrepancies harmonized, we shall have something to present relating to another beast, and also of an image, showing that the two horned beast never carried the woman.

The True Calling.

The word of God declares the Christians calling to be definite. We are entreated to "walk worthy of God, who hath called us to his kingdom and glory." This is the only calling through which we may hope for immortality, and is declared to be the "high calling of God in the name of Jesus Christ." The first step a seeker after the true calling must take is to understand the things concerning it as defined by the prophets and apostles; an understanding will beget belief and belief is the groundwork of salvation. We are called to the kingdom of God and to his glory. It is evident from the reading that we can share in the glory of God only through his kingdom; how essential then is a knowledge of this kingdom and how utterly futile are our systems of worship if they contain no principle of this teaching.

Will a man be chosen unless called of God? and will not his calling be the mere vision of fancy if he understand not the kingdom to which we are called of God? The teaching of both prophetic apostles and the blessed Savior all agree that he will not be accepted. The kingdom of God is based on the promises, to Adam to Abraham and to David. To Adam, that the seed of the woman would bruise the serpent's head; to Abraham, that in him and in his seed would all nations be blessed, and to David that his throne should be established forever, and that the seed who would occupy it would be of his house. This kingdom will be established in the land of Canaan with Jerusalem for its capital, and will be an everlasting kingdom. When we realize the "high calling of God," we will be made partakers of his glory. But remember that the high calling of God is through the Christ. He is the seed of the woman, of Abraham, and of David, the fulfiller of the promises, the King of the world; through belief and induction into him as the Savior and Anointed we are made partakers of life, at his coming to establish the kingdom. He is the remover of the curse, the conqueror of death; the blessed life-giver; "as in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive." We may understand and believe the things of the kingdom, but unless we acknowledge Jesus as the Christ our belief is vain. The calling of God to his kingdom and glory is in the name of Jesus the Anointed, and in him we find eternal life. The apostle in the same verse that defines the calling of God, exhorts us to "walk worthy." Thess. ii. 12. Understanding is the corner-stone, belief the foundation, but worthiness is the key-stone that preserves the building perfect. How vital then the apostle's words "walk worthy of God." Let the full significance of Paul's exhortation sink in your minds. Worthy of God! Worthy of the King, eternal, immortal, only wise God; of the perfect Father. O men and brethren, cast away every thought of worldly pride and "be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." The Christian having a certain knowledge of his calling possesses a key to the whole word of God, and can unlock the door of superstition and enter the household of faith. He reads every word of the Scripture by the undimmed lamp of truth, and grows daily in grace and knowledge. But if he has a vague and dimmed idea of the kingdom, the consummation of the calling, he is alienated from God through ignorance, and the curse is upon him. W. I. CROCKETT.

To the New Readers of the Restitution.

My Friends:--Although I am a stranger to you, I am glad that you are beginning to read upon such subjects as are presented in THE RESTITUTION. I always feel a particular interest in those who are disposed to investigate subjects of vital importance for them to understand, though the investigation may result in a change of views on many subjects which they have heretofore considered well settled. It will be quite difficult for you to follow your own convictions, if they should be materially different from the long established sentiments of the people among whom you live. I was a member of the Baptist church for about fifteen years, during which time I believed very much as the churches do. I believed very strongly in the immortality of the soul, the coming of the Lord at death to reward his saints, and take them to heaven, that the wicked would be punished with everlasting torment, and such like doctrines. But I must confess that I had never investigated those views carefully and impartially. I had received them in my education, without ever having questioned them. From my earliest recollection I believed that the dead know more than the living; that the saints go immediately to heaven when they die, and that the wicked go to hell, and that at some time in the distant future there would be a judgment, at which time the saints would come out of heaven, and appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to be judged according to the deeds done in the body, and the wicked would come out of hell and be judged, and then be remanded back to their place of torment. Such were the views I entertained while I was in the Baptist church. Such were the views entertained by Christians generally. It is true they held these views very vaguely, and very unintelligently. But we were happy, we were zealous, and we were generally honest in those views. And we were quite unwilling to give our attention to any subject that would be likely to disturb our quiet.

But after repeated solicitations, I reluctantly consented to read a tract by George Storrs, entitled. "Are the Wicked Immortal?" I was almost afraid to read it, as its tendency, as I thought, was to infidelity. From that tract I learned that if the soul is immortal, the Bible is one thing. If the soul is not immortal, the Bible is another and a very different thing. The Bible language should have a natural application to the man to whom it is addressed, and to apply it to any other would require an arbitrary rule of interpretation to be applied throughout the whole Bible. For instance, "The wages of sin is death." The man who believes in the immortality of the soul says this can not be. The soul is the real man, it is immortal and cannot die. It will live as long as God lives. Therefore the passage cannot mean real literal death in its primary sense, the extinction of life. Then what does it mean? The answer is, it must mean misery, hence we have an immortal soul, subject to everlasting misery. If this is true in this passage, it must be true in every other similar passage. Then we have a rule of interpretation that must be applied to the whole Bible, which entirely obscures the natural and obvious sense of the language of the Bible in every passage used to describe the destiny of the wicked.

On the other hand, "The gift of God is eternal life." The same man says no. I have an immortal soul which preserves the building perfect. How cannot die, therefore I shall live as long as God lives, without any such gift. Neither God nor Christ can give me life in the literal primary sense of life. Then the passage cannot mean the gift of real life. Then what does it mean? The answer is, it must mean a happy life. If it means a happy life instead of literal life, then it must mean happiness in every similar passage in the whole Bible. This requires a rule of interpretation that must be observed throughout the Bible, which entirely obscures the natural and obvious sense of the language used to describe the reward of the righteous, in every passage where this description occurs in the Bible. With this rule of interpretation we have a happy eternal life, and a miserable eternal life. The one just as really lives as the other.

Now my friends, will you allow me to ask you a few questions concerning your faith and hope? Why do you believe in the immortality of the soul? Have you ever read anything about it in the Bible? If you had never learned anything of the immortality of the soul except what you have learned in the Bible, would you know anything about it? If you think you have learned something from the Bible about it, was it in the Old Testament or in the New? In which of the books of the Old Testament did you find it? If not in the Old, in which of the books of the New Testament did you find it? In what chapter and verse? If, when you come to look for it you cannot find it, is it not time that you investigate the subject for yourselves? Do you know that the word immortal is used only once in the Bible, and then it is applied to God? Do you know that the word immortality is used only five times in the Bible? and that then it is applied to God, to Christ, and to the resurrected saints? That it is never applied to the wicked at all, and to Christ and the saints only after their resurrection? Do you know that the words which are equivalent to immortality are never applied to the wicked? and that they are never applied to the saints till after the resurrection? Are there any promises made to immortal souls? Are there any threatenings against immortal souls? Are there any intimations given of such souls, anywhere in the Bible? Then how did you come to believe in the immortality of the soul as strongly as you do? If you find, upon a careful examination, that you cannot give a reason for your faith, then, would it not be well for you to investigate the subject so that you can give an intelligent reason for the faith and hope that is in you? Now, without presuming to dictate, if you have been somewhat interested in this, my first conversation with you, by your permission, I will continue my conversation with you from time to time as I may have time and opportunity. In the meantime, I hope you will make an effort to give a reason of the hope that is in you so as to satisfy your own minds in the light of what the Scriptures say. If you cannot satisfy us of the restitution. JOEL A. SIMONDS.

SELECTIONS.

The Convention of Jews.

Rev. David Rosenberg, of Columbus, Ohio, through the New York Herald, requests all the papers in the world to publish the following notice:

"A call for a national convention of Israelites who are now willing to accept of Jesus Christ as the promised Messiah of the world, with all who did accept of Him during the past ages by their forefathers and retained their identity of belonging to the stock of Israel by name or otherwise, is hereby called. God said in Genesis, xlix, 10: "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah nor a lawgiver from between his feet until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be. The 'sceptre' and the 'lawgiver' departed from Judah about one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight years ago. Therefore Shiloh has come 'and we knew him not.' The object of this convention shall be: First, to form an alliance of all the converted Jews and of Israel throughout the world, and to appoint a set time to confess the sin of the nation in rejecting Jesus Christ, the Son of God and crucifying Him, thereby bringing the wrath of God upon the nation. Therefore God hath said the nation shall be dispersed throughout the world till the fullness of the Gentiles is come. God has promised that 'If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' Second, to form a basis for a national existence upon the New Testament Scriptures as the statute and law of the nation. Third to implore the Powers of the world to restore Palestine to the people of God; for this is the day of grace. The conflict in the East indicates that the day of the Lord is at hand. Correspondence by every one is solicited, fixing an early date and place to hold the convention"

What is the significance of this? Is it a sign of the times? Will it come to any thing, a thought that will seed and bear fruit, or rot in the ground.

At the present time the majority of the Jews are in almost hopeless infidelity.

The prophecies regarding their Messiah have run out, therefore the book of Daniel must be repudiated. A suffering and not a conquering, Messiah has come; therefore they will not acknowledge Him, and so the 53d chapter of Isaiah, prophetic of the sufferings of Messiah, must be treated as an interpolation, the reading of it in the Synagogue is prohibited. Yet other prophecies that they can not evade, have expired, and now they have none to rest up on; and so they must ignore all, prophecies, Scripture, God, yet on the Sabbath they assemble in the Synagogue, and go through the form of worship of the living and true God.

What will this convention do? Will it at all touch the great mass of Israel in this land, Orthodox or Reformed?

Although the idea has originated and been thrown forth by one man, yet it may have its results. All great ideas have first been small ideas, and have grown from little things, and as they grow have even surprised the one with whom they originated.

Luther was perhaps the most surprised of all, at the result of his contest with Tetzel, and the mighty events to which it led.

Will this lead to any thought among the seed of "Abraham the friend of God"? Will it combine the converted to Christ to uniformity and concert of action, and what will be the result on the unconverted?

Great events may be just at our door. The war in the East is for possession of Syria. "Jerusalem, on to Jorusalem" has been the dream of Russia and Russians from the days of Peter the Great.

Constantinople but lies on the way to Jerusalem, Kars and Erzeroum are but steps to the Holy Land.

Are the two thousand and three hundred days of Daniel to the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the forty and two months of John that the Holy City is given to be trodden under foot of the Gentiles, synchronous periods, and running promptly to a close? Is this war bringing up the men and the means that are to accomplish it?

There are great problems yet to be solved in connection with the Jews, else why are they among us a distinct people? Among us yet not of us; not marrying nor giving in marriage with us. As water and oil, two fluids, mingle not, so does not the Jew mingle with the Gentiles. All other people have gone down with their nation, nation and nationality have sunk together, yet here was seen the people surviving the nation. It must be for some purpose in God's providence. Is, then, this convention the first step in developing the end? God grant it may be.--Texas Presbyterian.

We give place to the above as an indication that "coming events cast their shadows before." In reply to the question concerning the 2300 days we say, that it is our belief, as it has been for years past, that they are about to expire. We have before expressed our conclusion that they commence with the complete restoration of Jerusalem about B. C. 420, and terminate not far from 1880--82. As 490 of these years was "determined," or "cut off," for fulfillment on the Jewish nation, terminating with the desolation of the city and sanctuary A. D. 70--72, the remaining 1810 years extend only to 1880--82. The periods in Dan. xii. 7-13, we believe are connected with Moslem rather than with Roman history. The last form of Daniel's plurality of abominations is Mohammedanism, and its era dates A. D. 622. To this date add 1260 years, the time given for this antichristian abomination to scatter the power of the holy people, and we have A. D. 1882. The great Pyramid indicates the same year as a crisis in human history; Russia is advancing southward by mighty strides. The war has placed Turkey at her disposal. As the crescent wanes, the Star of Jacob rises. We will give an article next week to show that the set time to favor Zion has certainly nearly come.

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

Some persons have doubted whether the Babylonians were guilty of such "extreme cruelty" as to cast persons alive into a burning, fiery furnace, as in the case of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, mentioned by Daniel (iii. 20.) They are strangely forgetful of innumerable fiery martyrdoms, very much more slow in their torture, and therefore more cruel, than the seven-times heated furnace of Babylon. Mr. H. F. Talbot has discovered ample proof in the Assyrian writings that both this punishment, and that of casting men alive into a den of lions, as Daniel was treated, were in common use at Babylon during the reign of Assurbanipal, who preceded Nebuchadnezzar on the throne by less than twenty years. Saulmugina, the younger brother of Assurbanipal, having risen in rebellion against his sovereign, and having failed in the attempt, was not spared by his angry brother. The following brief record is sufficient to tell its own terrible tale: "My rebellious brother, Saulmugina, who made war with me, was cast into a burning, fiery furnace." Many of Saulmugina's adherents were treated in the same manner; and the remainder were otherwise disposed of in the following way, as Assurbanipal very pithily says: "The rest of the people I threw alive among the bulls and lions, as my grandfather, Sennacherib, used to act; and I, following his example, have thus treated these rebellious men." Truly may we exclaim, with the Psalmist, "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty."--Quarterly Review.

The number of British subjects in Constantinople is under 4,000, and of these more than half are not Englishmen, Irishmen or Scotchmen, but they are Greeks, Levantines, Italians and Turkish subjects who have clothed themselves with British nationality.

THE RESTITUTION.

H. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 13, 1878.

BRO. H. V. REED, has removed to Chicago, Ill. His address is No. 50 Hamilton Avenue.

WE urge upon all who love the cause of our soon-coming King, to aid THE RESTITUTION either in procuring additional subscriptions, or by contributions, according to ability, to the relief fund. God's cause has always been sustained by labor and sacrifice, and the reward will come in due time.

IN THE RESTITUTION of last week, was given an able and interesting article on "The Gospel and its Mysteries," from Bro. B. Wilson, of Sacramento, California. In this week's issue will be found one, both of ability and interest, from Bro. Wiley Jones, of Norfolk Virginia. Do not pass over either of these without an attentive perusal.

THE eastern question is about to be transferred from the fields of martial strife, to a conference of the great powers, for some temporary arrangement. It appears, so far as is now known, that Russia claims a war indemnity amounting to $1,250,000,000, and, as Turkey can not pay the cash, Russia will obtain the possession, which virtually means ownership, of a large territory in Armenia. This loss of important possessions in Asia, added to the still greater subtractions from her European domains in behalf of provinces having the semblance of independence, though really under the control of Russia, reduces Turkish dominion to a Muscovite dependency.

RUSSIA has gained an immense advance toward the ultimate goal of her ambition,—the final possession of Constantinople, and she has only to wait till the grand course of events shall prepare the way for her onward march to Palestine, after the Jews shall have returned, and have built the unwalled towns and villages. The Eastern question will then be settled in the great battle of Armageddon. The peace, if made, will only be a temporary truce of but few years duration at the longest. The symbolic Euphrates has been rapidly evaporating during the past year, and its constantly diminishing floods warn the waiting ones of a nearing crisis in human history. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments.

THE business agent desires us to state that after this week the names of all who are very much in arrears will be dropped from the mailing list. We hope each one interested will examine the slip on the paper and see how the figures read. All labels should now read '78 or '8 where the year is intended, as any that might read '77 or '7 would indicate some months' arrearage. If our friends and brethren can not pay for a full year, they certainly can pay for either three or six months. We do not want to part company with any of our readers, and hereby kindly and respectfully ask all to renew without delay. Should any who can soon pay desire the paper continued, they will please send a card. All who will look at the slips on their paper can as well tell how their account stands as to have a card sent with a special statement. We hope for a fraternal response. We shall make THE RESTITUTION instructive, and all who look for the soon-coming of God's Son from heaven will discern the importance of keeping themselves posted in regard to the signs of the times and fulfillment of those prophecies that mark the times in which we are living. To show that God is remembering Zion, we expect to give quite an interesting article concerning Sir Moses Montefiore's late visit to Jerusalem and the present condition of things there. We think that while a falling off of our subscribers would be a loss to us at this time, the non-receipt of THE RESTITUTION would be a still greater loss to them in these critical times.

Child's Paper.

Ed. Restitution:—I feel somewhat impressed with the idea that the young as well as the aged should be instructed in the way of life. Timothy was taught the Holy Scriptures from his youth. Before Brother Willcox started his Sunshine I had it in my mind to start one called The Young Student, but gave way for him. Some brethren have a desire that I should issue one. If I should issue one it would not fall on my part, as I own an office and am a practical printer. If I should issue one it would be a four-paged one, about the size child's papers usually are. Price fifty cents.

Now, if you have the welfare of children at heart, as I believe you have, please call attention to it, and ask those who would like it to send in their names, but no money. I do not wish the money until I find that there will be subscribers enough to warrant its issue. Address

Hints and Questions.

BY C. COLEGROVE.

I have often thought that, had I time, I would like to answer many of the "Scripture questions" in the Bible Banner, but in place of doing so now, I propose to suggest certain queries, not necessarily soliciting or expecting responses, but leaving them for all who will to ponder profoundly.

1. In Rev. xviii. 20, at the burning of Babylon, when the proclamation is made—"Rejoice over her thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets"—is this merely an apostrophe to these saints then still actually asleep in death, but addressed as if they were alive? or is it justly inferable that they had at this time received a resurrection?

2. In Rev. xiii. 6, where the wild beast "opens his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven," is the tabernacle, or tent, something wholly invisible? If so, how does the wild beast know about it, and how should his wrath be inflamed against it? And so in regard to those who are tabernacling in heaven—how does the exasperated enemy know they are there, and why is he angry at them? Are these dwellers in heaven, far-away angels? and, if so, why is he furious at them? On the other hand, if they are saints snatched away and out of his power, is it likely that a luminous investing cloud-canopy in the aerial heaven is so conspicuously visible, as to be a well-defined mark for his malediction?

3. Is this luminous cloud-canopy, enclosing a company of recurrected and translated saints, and for a short season an unmistakable proof of God's intervening power in human affairs—is this canopy or tabernacle, the sign of the Son of Man in heaven"—at first perhaps seemingly questioned, but afterwards mobile and exceeding bright, revealing from its interior, in majesty and glory, the coming King?

4. Is this tabernacle or canopy the same that is predicted as the refuge of the Psalmist? "For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion, in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me." Psa. xxvii. 5. And again: "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues." Psa. xxxi. 20. And would the "pride of man" and "the strife of tongues" correspond with the blasphemous, arrogant and angry utterance of the wild beast?

5. What is that (in 2 Thess. ii. 6), which "withholdeth" that the man of sin "might be revealed in his time?" And again in the next verse, that which lets or hinders, until he be taken out of the way? Is it a people of God which must first be removed, before the terrible development of God-hating wickedness on the earth? So says Benjamin Wilson, I believe, (author of the version of the New Testament known as the Emphatic Diaglott), in a late number of The Restitution.

6. What is the "falling away" in the third verse of the same chapter? Is it perfectly certain that this is the right rendering? Or is Wilson's word apostasy the right rendering? The original word is indeed apostasia, but let us notice some cases where the verb aphistemi is used, signifying not apostasy, or falling away, but simply departure. In Luke iv. 13, the devil departed (apestē) from the Lord for a season. In Luke ii. 37, Anna departed not (ephistato) from the temple. In 2 Cor. xii. 8, Paul besought the Lord that the thorn in the flesh, the satan-messenger, might depart from him (apostē). These are personal departures, and is it perfectly certain that the apostasia in Thessalonians, is not the same?

7. What is the bottomless pit of the Bible? In the Greek the word is abusos, corresponding in form nearly with our word abyss. What, in any given case, do we certainly know to be the meaning of the word? In Rom. x. 7 we have the word used: "Or who shall descend into the deep, that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead?" Here we know clearly, I suppose, that the abyss, or deep, is the state of the dead. Now the question is, what is the meaning of the word in Rev. xi. 7, where the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit or abyss shall make war against the two witnesses? Is it the same as in the other case? If Christ ascended from the abyss of death, from what abyss does the great adversary ascend—the wild beast who makes the deadly onslaught on the witnesses?

If in Rev v. 6, John saw standing in the midst of the four living ones, and the elders, a lamb as it had been slain and we know our blessed Lord was indeed put to death on the cross—in what sense are we to understand the passage in Rev. xiii. 3, where one of the heads of the wild beast, (the deadly enemy of God and man,) is also mentioned as having been slain? In the common version it is represented as having been wounded to death, or strictly slain to death. If the slaying was literal and personal, in the one case, is it also literal and personal in the other? And what is meant, in such a case, by the deadly wound being healed? And is there any special or extraordinary reason why all the world should wonder after the beast? Or is there any connection between the healing of the deadly wound, and the world-wide astonishment?

9. Do these queries throw any light on the saying in Rev. xvii. 8—"And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, ... when they behold the beast that was and is not, and yet is?

I purposely withhold any expression of opinion in regard to these queries, as it may be better for the present to leave them to be pondered by all who love to search after solutions of lawful questions, and who at the same time are not so intensely committed to any interpretation, as not to imagine that some light may still be shed on subjects of such sublime importance as prophecy contains. I believe these are pertinent and important inquiries, and if The Restitution thinks they are worth transferring, then, perhaps, Benjamin Wilson of Sacramento, California, may find it in his way to carefully scrutinize them.

Scotsaic, N. Y.

We have not had time to examine carefully how the idea of "departure" would comport with the apostle's teaching in 2 Thess. ii. 3. The verb apostasy, aphistemi, occurs fifteen times in the original of the New Testament, and no doubt means a personal departure in a majority of places. In Luke viii. 13, and 1 Tim. iv. 1, we have these two expressions—"in time of temptation fall away," and "some shall depart from the faith," as indicative of the sense of a moral apostasy. We would like to have Brother Wilson write something on the particular exegesis hinted at above, whether the personal rapture of the saints before the revelation of a personal antichrist is intended; also on other points contained in the above.

Napoleon's Prophecies.

The rapid march of events during the past year in Eastern Europe recalls to mind a prophecy of Napoleon that in fifty years Europe would be Cossack or Republican, and supplies some curious verification. The conversations which he held with the Englishman O'Meara, as he paced back and forth in his restricted quarters at St. Helena, have been preserved by the latter and recorded in book form. We cite a few of them, as showing how closely the great Emperor looked into futurity. Upon one occasion he said to O'Meara:

In the course of a few years Russia will have Constantinople, the greatest part of Turkey, and all Greece. This I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flattering which Alexander practiced toward me was to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, seeing that the equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, in a few years Turkey must fall to Russia. The greatest part of her population are Greeks, who, you may say, are Russians. The Powers it would injure, and who could oppose it, are England, France, Prussia and Austria. Now, as to Austria, it will be very easy for Russia to engage her assistance by giving her Servia and other provinces bordering on the Austrian dominions, reaching near Constantinople. The only hypothesis upon which England and France will ever form an alliance with sincerity will be in order to prevent this. But are this alliance would not avail. France, England, and Prussia united cannot prevent it. Russia and Austria can at any time effect it. Once mistress of Constantinople, Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediterranean, becomes a great naval power, and God knows what may happen. She quarrels with you, marches off to India an army of 70,000 good soldiers, which is nothing, and 100,000 cossacks, Cossacks, and others, and England loses India.

Upon another occasion he said to O'Meara:

I think that you will see that the Russians will either invade and take India, or enter Europe with 400,000 Cossacks, and other inhabitants of the desert, and 200,000 real Russians. When Paul was so violent against you, he sent to me for a plan to invade India. I sent him a plan, with instructions in detail. From a port in the Caspian Sea he was to march on to India. Russia must either fall or aggrandize herself.

In still another conversation, O'Meara asked Napoleon if it was true that Alexander once intended to seize Turkey, to which Napoleon replied:

All his thoughts are directed to the conquest of Turkey. We have had many discussions together about it. At first I was pleased with his proposals, because I thought it would enlighten the world to drive those brutes, the Turks, out of Europe. But when I reflected upon the consequences and saw what a tremendous weight of power it would give to Russia, in consequence of the number of Greeks in the Turkish dominions, I refused to consent to it, especially as Alexander wanted to get Constantinople, which I would not allow, as it would have destroyed the equilibrium of power in Europe. I reflected that France would join Egypt, Syria, and the Islands, which would have been nothing in comparison with what Russia would have obtained. I considered that the barbarians of the North were already too powerful, and probably in the course of time would overwhelm all Europe, and I now think they will. Austria already trembles. Russia and Prussia united, Austria falls, and England cannot prevent it. France, under the present family, is nothing, and the Austrians are so weak that they will be easily overpowered. They will offer little resistance to the Russians, who are brave and patient. Russia is the more formidable because she can never disarm. In Russia, once a soldier always a soldier—barbarians who one may say have no country, and to whom every country is better than the one that gave them birth.

Humboldt's Description of an Earthquake.

The great traveler gives an interesting account of the first earthquake he witnessed. It was at Cumana, in South America. The first shock came after a strange stillness. It caused an earthquake in his mind, for it overthrew in a moment all his lifelong notions about the safety of the earth. He could no longer trust the soil which up to that day had felt so firm under his feet. He had only one thought—universal boundless destruction. Even the crocodiles ran from the river Orinoco howling into the woods; the dogs and pigs were powerless with fear. The whole city seemed "the hearth of destruction." The houses could not shelter, for they were falling in ruins. He turned to the trees, but they were overthrown. His next thought was to run to the mountains, but they were rolling like drunken men. He then looked towards the sea. Lo! it had fled; and the ships, which a few minutes before were in deep water, were rocking on the bare sand. He tells us that, being then at his wit's end, he looked up and observed that heaven alone was perfectly calm and unshaken.

Predictions of Doom.

Very many keen eyes are looking sharply into the future. Prof. Piazzi Smith, Royal Astronomer of Scotland, is one of the most devout believers and profound scholars in Europe. He is reported to teach that in 1879 there commenced a series of last judgments, which will augment in severity till the end, these calamities heralding the coming of the Lord. The end he thinks will come in 1882, when the first resurrection will transpire and the church carried up on high out of the wrath to be poured out. Great events impend.

This does not vary much from the calculations of that distinguished chronologer, Wm. Hales, D. D., who terminated the grand prophetic periods in 1860. These dates fall within a circle of five years, 1880-1885, pointed out in the extraordinary scientific and medical calculation of Dr. Knapp as an era of awful judgments, with frightful catastrophes and pestilences, also terrageous convulsions in the earth. O that the whole church might awake from sleep!—Ex.

An Important Pond of Water.

The Sea of Marmora, the ancient Propontis, which has a peculiar interest at this moment, is a little smaller than Lake Ontario. Like its parent body, the Mediterranean, it has no tides. A strong and swift current sweeps through the sea from the northeast to the southwest, carrying the waters of the Euxine to those of the Ægean. It is remarkable for its bold and picturesque shores, and above all, for its depth, which in some places is nearly 2,000 feet. The island of Marmora—the Proconnesus of the Greeks—which gives its name to the sea, is situated about forty miles from the entrance of the Dardanelles, and in ancient times was widely noted for the beauty and durability of its marble. Even at this day a large portion of Constantinople is constructed of material taken from the ancient quarries. Mondania Bay, in which the vanguard of the British fleet is anchored, is on the Asiatic shore, within three hours' run of Constantinople.—New York Sun.

EASTERN ITEMS.

All other Powers being ready to accept any date for the meeting of the congress, the only question is: Will Russia accept that proposed towards the end of the month? Russia's answer is expected immediately, and when it arrives the date will be fixed. The Berlin Government will issue formal invitations.

Prince Auersperg stated in the Austrian Reichsrath to-day that every question but the Eastern would be excluded from the scope of the congress. England, also, though accepting the congress, seems averse to the introduction of questions not directly raised by the war, such as the Greek question, the final settlement of which is not yet imperative.

A Vienna correspondent confirms the reports that Count Andrassy yesterday told the Hungarian delegation that the Government had no intention to annex or occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that the Powers had now accepted the proposal for a congress at Berlin. France, however, has also expressed the wish that the congress be confined to the Eastern question. The wish arises from the fear that the congress may claim the right to sanction all the recent territorial changes. There is little doubt that France will receive reassurances.

A dispatch from Malta, dated this evening, says: "The Channel squadron is still here awaiting orders. The troopship Euphrates, homeward bound with 1,082 soldiers, and the Serapis, outward-bound, with twenty-nine officers, have been detained since March 6. Four smaller men-of-war have gone to the Dardanelles and one to Crete.

An Athens dispatch says by advice of the foreign Consuls the Cretan insurgents have accepted the armistice offered by the Turks. Thessalian advices state that the insurgents hold all of the province except the towns.

The Political Correspondence publishes under reserve the following from Bucharest: "It is said that the Russians on March 6 occupied the Bessarabian towns of Ismail, Cahul and Belgrad. The Roumanian Government at present keeps this a secret, but a Cabinet council is said to have been held under the Presidency of Prince Charles to frame a protest."

Great distress prevails in Palestine this year, owing to a poor harvest and prices which are double what they were last year. Many are poverty-stricken, and many are out of employment, for no work is to be had. Hundreds have to beg for food. The war has, of course, much to do with this distressed condition.

Troublous times are prevailing on the Asiatic borders of Russia, where the Chinese have just taken military occupation of Kashgar, the most important state in Turkestan, a province extending from the Caspian sea eastward, bounded on the north by the Russian dominions, and on the south by Persia and India. As Eastern Turkestan is in the direct line of the Russian advance in Asia, it is not impossible that the Chinese occupation may lead to serious complications with the Russian Bear, as soon as the Turk is disposed of.

A recent Belgian publication shows that the actual population of the earth is about a thousand millions, about equally divided between males and females. Every year about 33,000,000 die; every day, 91,334; every hour 3,780; every minute, sixty. Therefore there is a death every second. In civilized countries there are more births than deaths; but the whole world considered, the number of the former is about equal to that of the latter. More people are born and die in the night time than in the day, and, generally speaking, low-sized men die before those of tall stature. Eight thousand and sixty-four languages are spoken in the world—587 in Europe, 896 in Asia, 276 in Africa, and 1,264 in America.

POETRY.

"The Morning Cometh."

W. J. CROCKETT.

Praise ye the Lord for the promise of morning
When joyful forever the clouds or the night,
Peace, love and health, the whole earth adorning;
Hail! to the dawn of salvation's pure light.

Then shall the Lord to Israel returning
Hear mercy on Jacob and remove all his fear;
Then his oppressors shall feel the fierce burning
When the wrath of Jehovah hath broken their spear.

Then deserted the palace, and all their riches forsaking,
The proud shall be scattered like dust to the storm;
But the righteous shall dwell in their gardens unshaken,
And flowers shall bloom where the briars have grown.

Then shall the knowledge of God with the morning
Of Righteousness Sun, go forth o'er the land;
Then shall the glory of Christ full streaming,
Proclaim and unfold God's promise to man.

Ceaseless watch for the light of the dawning,
With garments unspotted from all worldly lust;
Thy heart in his precepts forever conforming,
And the promise of life forever thy trust.

LETTER DRAWER.

Ed. Restitution:—For the enclosed please send me a few copies of the Pyramid number. I am very much interested in the study of this great work, and want all the light I can get on that subject. I love THE RESTITUTION, and am glad you have been retained as editor. You have my prayers for its success. I hope it will be instrumental, in God's hand, in doing much to instruct the inquiring, and comfort the believer in the gospel of the kingdom. I am doing all I can in an humble way, to spread these glorious truths abroad, and wish I had the ability to do more. I often meet with bitter opposition to our views of man's nature and destiny, and other kindred truths, but being persuaded they are Scriptural, I am bound to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. I love to hold sweet converse with the "Letter Drawer." It is cheering to hear from those of like precious faith. I love you all. We are all of one family. God is our loving Father, and Christ is our dear Brother. O let us all be faithful and true to him and the gospel we profess. Let us love one another in sincerity and truth, and thereby show to the world that we are his disciples indeed. The world will love its own, but we are not of the world, therefore the world hateth us, but "fear not," said Jesus, "for I have overcome the world." Let us ever bear in mind the sweet words of the Master to those who overcome. We have many things to overcome, but God will give us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ if we are faithful unto the end. May the Lord bless all the dear friends of truth everywhere, and in his own good time bring us all to inherit eternal life in the everlasting kingdom.

I remain, affectionately, your brother in Christ, WM. FANNING.

Ed. Restitution:—Our meeting here resulted in thirty additions; at Marysville twenty-five additions, and at Truer in thirty additions.

Yours, G. M. MYERS.

Ed. Restitution:—I would say for the encouragement of the brethren, that the cause of truth is advancing with us. Several have come out and are earnestly contending for the faith of the gospel, while others are deeply interested in searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. It seems as though the world is waking up to investigation, while heathen dogmas and traditions are crumbling and falling to the ground. The developements of the Great Pyramid seem to give new life and vigor to our long cherished faith. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is our earnest prayer.

W. B. PUTNAM.

Round City, Ills.

Ed. Restitution:—We of the Pacific coast are still presenting the truth, with good effect. Brother Nichols and myself have been preaching in this place about a year or a year and a half, and as a result have a church organization of something over forty members who have been immersed; and we have more calls than we can fill. The people are very anxious to hear. We have brought together a body of believers from almost every ism in the land; some from the Catholics, Universalists, Infidels, and most other faiths of the land. I devote all my spare time in presenting the truth, and when I get able I shall subscribe for THE RESTITUTION.

Yours, in hope of eternal life at His appearing and kingdom.

H. C. PLUMMER.

Cuttra, Oregon.

Ed. Restitution:—It has been some time since you have heard from this part of the country. I have been silent for some time, but not idle. I have been doing all I could under the circumstances. I have a good deal to contend with. I am the only one that preaches the faith here, and am trying to set it forth the best I can. I shun not to declare the whole counsel of God so far as able. I believe the law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul, and all scripture is given by the inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, and that no prophecy of Scripture is of any private interpretation, and that the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe it—that when the gospel is received into good and honest hearts men are begotten of the Word of truth; they are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the Word of God that liveth forever. I shall commence a meeting on the 9th, holding over Sunday, eighteen miles below here, in Valley county.

F. M. CLIFTON.

Wahoo Springs, Neb.

Editor Restitution:—I am a member of the Christian Church and have been for twenty years, and have been a reader of your paper for the last four years. I have been reading your tracts and am convinced that I am wrong, and I want to be immersed into the One Faith. If there is any of the brethren of the One Faith passing this way, I hope they will remember me and stop. I don't know of any others here of the One Faith except myself and husband; he joined the Christian Church about six months ago. My former husband, Mr. Trobee, was a Christian preacher. It has always been my desire to be a Christian, and I thought I was, but thank God I have found my mistake before it was too late. I wish some brethren would come here; I think there could be much good done here, as the Christian Church is nearly broke up. I can't promise any money, not being rich in this world's goods, but will do all I can. I hope some brother will make a sacrifice and come.

Yours, in hope of eternal life,

CORRESPONDENCE.

Ed. Restitution:—I thought a few words from the brethren here would be a source of pleasure and give some encouragement to the brethren who are scattered from one another, but still we trust, hopeful of the promise to those that hold out faithful to the end.

We started together not quite one year ago, but prior to this, Brothers Renner and Wagner had introduced the one faith and truth to be found only in the Bible, to the people and created no little wondering among sects; and to the brethren above mentioned, through their kind words and the influence of God's Word (for it is influential to those that are not blinded) sister Wagner (now deceased), myself and wife were immersed by Bro. Renner into the truth—the one faith, and the glorious promises of the soon coming kingdom of our dear Master. Oh! happy day for us when we were brought to see the truth. Since then we have had Brothers Corbaley, of Healdsburg, and Wilson, of Sacramento, Cal., with us, and many a pleasant hour have we had together. Bro. Corbaley immersed Bro. Orren Stone's two daughters, Emma and Annie, Eddie Stone, son of the above, and Bro. B. F. Cook, so we now number eleven here and probably shall number more ere long, and with Bro. and sister Kimball at Stockton, Bro. R. and sister Corbaley, at Healdsburg, Bro. Wilson, Rice and wife, at Sacramento, Bro. Corbaley and family at Bangor, and brethren Strong, Hutchison, Hayes and others, at Woodland, we feel strong. Bro. R. Corbaley has just left us after a trip to Bangor and Stockton, and is now at Willow Slough on his way home, having been absent from his home for over one month. May the Lord add strength to the brethren who are gifted with oratorical power. Sister Kimball also was with us through our course of meetings.

Dear brethren and sisters, you have all, no doubt, experienced the parting of friends. Do you not feel lost for awhile, and it is several days before you can get over the lonesome feeling? I know it is so in my case, and if it affects us so now, what will it do in the age to come when we look around us and miss the familiar faces. Oh! let us plod along this pilgrimage together, bearing one another's burdens if too much for each other, hand in hand; let us not be envious of one another; let us set an example to the world, that in the end they may truly exclaim, "These they are the children of God and God is with them."

COMMUNICATIONS.

Ever Learning.

Surely we have reached the time of which Paul wrote when he declared the time would come when we would be "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." 2 Tim. iii. 7. We are often surprised at the many and fast multiplying theories that are filling the world. In the Herald of the Age to Come, of Dec. 25, on page five, we find an extract from the pen of F. H. Burbank, which reads as follows:

"But nearly six thousand years ago God defined evil as that which ought not to be, when he cut off from the tree of life the sinful Adam, lest he should eat thereof and live forever. Evil will be finally punished. Justice will overtake sin. Good ought to be, and evil ought not to be. The time is coming when good alone will have an existence. There the wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end."

To the above truthful words the Herald appends the following criticism:

". . . What are the teachings of the Bible upon this subject? John in vision heard the four and twenty elders declare that God created all things, and also that it was for His pleasure they are and were created. Now, if God created all things, He must have created evil, and if evil ought not to be, then the Lord has been acting strangely in creating it. This is what the Lord says himself about it: 'I form light and create darkness. I make peace and create evil. I the Lord do all these things.' Isa. xlv. 7. This agrees with the whole word of God. . . . The God of the Bible created evil because it was necessary as a part of the means used in creating a race of beings to enjoy eternal happiness. Hence evil ought to be, for without it there would be no eternal happiness. We shall press this truth wherever may object."

We must say we are not only very much astonished, but startled, at the above language. God the author of sin, and yet man be punished for practicing the same! Sin must be created before a race of beings exist capable of enjoying eternal happiness. It it was needful for sin to be created before a race of beings could be formed capable of enjoying happiness to all eternity, doubtless it would be necessary that sin should continue to all eternity in order to perpetuate their existence forever. The conclusion is: "Hence evil ought to be, for without it (evil), there would be no eternal happiness." Then to destroy sin or evil would be only the death blow to the eternal happiness of the redeemed.

The writer of these strange words, appeals to the Bible to support this God dishonoring doctrine, and lo! Isa. xlv. 7, is given as proof that God is the author of evil. It reads thus: "I form the light and create darkness. I make peace and create evil. I the Lord do all these things."

Now, if God created evil as this writer affirms, he must be the author of all evil, and if all that was and is created, was made for his pleasure, then it follows that He takes pleasure in evil and sin.

Is it possible that the writer of the above words is not aware that the word evil has two meanings when used in a Scriptural sense? Meaning punishment, judgment, and also sin. In the above text where God says, "I make peace and create evil," it conveys only the thought that he executes judgment. Again Job ii. 10. "What shall we not receive at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Does Job refer to sin or sickness in these words? No. In his sickness and afflictions he looks back over his past life of prosperity when he received the good things from the hand of God, and acknowledges his great goodness unto him. He then bows his head in meek obedience beneath the hand of judgment that fell so heavily upon him. In all this Job did not sin with his lips. Read also Jer. xl. 11.

Sin is a violation of divine law or rule of duty. Did the great God break his own statutes that he himself had formed? Paul in Romans v. 12, declares man brought sin into the world, Wherefore as by one man (not God) sin entered into the world and death by sin, &c.

The Bible declares that out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good. (Lam. iii. 38.) Neither shall evil dwell with Him. Psa. v. 4. If evil could not exist with the great God (only for a time as He permits it) He surely would not be the author of it. James in chapter i. 17 says, "Every good and perfect gift is from above and cometh down from the father of lights with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning." James declares every good and every perfect gift is from God. He does not acknowledge that he is the author of any evil ones. Neither is there a shadow of turning therefrom. This could not be true did he turn aside to create evil.

Because it is declared that God is the author of all things, does it follow that he is the creator of all that now exists on the globe? Evil not created? In Gen. i. we find the account of all things God created, and at the close of creation's week, God looked back over his work and pronounced it not only good but very good. No evil then existed. There and then with the commandment to multiply, the work of God's creating ended. God created man. But because of this fact is he the author, and is he responsible for every human being that now graces and disgraces the earth, both legitimate and illegitimate? God created the first pair, perfect and good, commanding them to multiply and replenish the earth, and here God's work in creating man also ended.

But it is sometimes claimed that as God knew or saw the end from the beginning, that therefore he is responsible for sin. But does that follow? You may prescribe rules of government for your children through the obedience of which you desire that they shall grow up true men and women. But as you lay down those laws by which they are to be governed, you may know full well from the general character of some, that they will transgress those laws, but because you are confident of this, does it follow that you are in the least accountable for their disobedience? Certainly not. Did you prescribe laws that were impossible for your children to obey? No you did not. Did the great God require man to obey those commands that he could not obey? You answer, yea. Then why punish him for what he could not avoid? If that be true he would no longer be a free agent, but simply a machine. But the word of God teaches that man is capable of choosing the right from the wrong, and is therefore held responsible for his choice. Is it possible people will teach that God created evil, and that it was necessary as a part of the means used in creating a race of beings to enjoy eternal happiness. Is it possible that it was necessary in order for God to create a race of beings pure and holy, that he must school them in sin and crime for 6000 years in order to perfect their character that they might be fully prepared to abstain from all appearance of evil, and become fitted to enjoy happiness to all eternity? Is it true that the evil with its fruits of woe and crimes has spread its dark death folds over this once pure earth, for these long 6000 years, in order that its future glory and beauty might appear? Can it be that the sighs, the tears, the groans, and the many heart aches, that have ascended to the God of all the earth since creation's morn, have been uttered only that the songs of praise from the lips of the redeemed might be more joyous and sweet in the great beyond? Is it true that the great God who is not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness (Psa. v. 4) would do evil that good might follow?

If that be true, then Paul, you need feel no longer that you are slanderously reported by some as teaching that it is right to do evil that good may come, (Rom. iii. 5-8,) for away down here in the nineteenth century we are now taught that evil ought to be and is necessary in order that eternal happiness should exist, and furthermore it was not only created but practiced by the God of all living that good might be accomplished. This is the teaching of some now a days. Yet in the days of the Apostle Paul he looked upon such a charge as a slanderous act upon his character. Believing this damnation to be a just punishment to those who made such a charge, what would be a just reward for those who would dare to thrust the same charge home upon the great and just God?

Let us strive to hold fast the sound words, knowing that the spirit speaketh expressly that in the last days some shall depart from the faith giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. Let us still believe, trust, and worship that God who is mighty and able to save. He who is just, merciful and true. He who taketh no pleasure in wickedness. He from whose mouth proceedeth not evil and good. A God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is He. (Deut. xxxii. 4.) Let us ever trust and obey Him, and when the great day of reward shall come, we shall receive a crown of life that fadeth not away.

May this be our portion at last.

The correct pronunciation of the new Pope's name, Giovachino Pecci, will be a puzzle to many, although it will soon pass out of mind in the use of the title which he has chosen, Leo XIII. In the Italian ch before i is pronounced as k; so before i as ch in fetch. The name is pronounced as if written in English, Giovakino Petchi

When Will He Come?

Will it be when the mildly sun is gleaming,
And I am toiling 'neath its sultry heat?
Or when at eventide I'm gently resting
Among the flowers springing at my feet?
Or when above my head the stars are raining
Brightly resplendent in the heaven's high dome,
Or in the ruby blush and dawn of morning,
Or in the twilight gray? When will He come?

Shall I be old and dreary and forsaken,
With white hair streaming o'er my furrowed brow,
Gone from my kindly mate and companions,
Gone from my heart the love that cheers me now?
Shall I be sleeping, with the green grass waving
And the winds whisp'ring round my lonely tomb,
Or will He take me now to greener pastures
And later, purer joys? When will He come?

When shall I hear—to-day, to-night, to-morrow?—
The sound I long to catch, His own dear voice,
Sweeter than all the tones I love so fondly,
Saying in accents clear, "Rejoice, rejoice"?
When shall I see the hands for me once pierced,
And the brow pressed for me with thorny crown,
Know that for my own sake He gave His life-blood,
Yet, that He calleth me? When will He come?

Shall I be worshiping among His children,
And singing hymns of praise unto my God?
Or 'mid the dwellings of the poor and lowly,
Striving to follow where His feet have trod?
Or in the bustle of the crowded city,
Or the sweet, social pleasures of my home?
Or at his table, or in wood- at even,
Or on the sea's blue waste? When will He come?

Will all the fields be fragrant with spring blossoms,
The song-birds warbling in the flowery glade,
Or the bright summer sunbeams shining over
The fruitful earth which His own hand hath made?
Will autumn winds be rustling through the branches,
Or winter's snows around whene'er I roam?
Poor, vain attempt to hide earth's sin and ruin
From His all-searching gaze? When will He come?

And still I wait and wait. My Lord delayeth,
My yearning heart grows troubled oft, and sad;
Yet through the darkest night His loved voice sayeth,
"I'm coming soon, to make thee truly glad."
The time is short, this world is fleeting swiftly,
Heaven is beating, my eternal home;
O for the wings of faith to reach unto it,
Even while with tears I say, "When will He come?" —The Christian.

How to Study the Bible.

A Discourse by Wiley Jones, Norfolk, Va., Feb. 17, 1878.

"Search the Scriptures."—John v. 39. "They received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so. Therefore many of them believed." Acts xvii. 11, 12.

One of the first things requisite to a profitable study of the Bible, is a firm and reverent appreciation of its importance and of its transcendent worth. Such was evidently the frame of mind in which the Psalmist wrote—"Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name"—"The entrance of thy word giveth light"—"The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver"—"How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!"—"Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way"—"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."—"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul"—"O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day."—"Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." Psa. cxxxviii. 2; cxix; xix. 7, 12. And the Great Redeemer has declared, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." John vi. 63. After the same tenor an apostle saith, "I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." Acts xx. 32. And again, "The Holy Scriptures are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. iii. 15. From early youth to feeble old age, that sacred volume is our lamp and counsel. In the last feverish illness it is a cup of balm at our bedside, from which every now and then we can take a cooling sip of "precious promises." Yea, to the bedside of the dying Christian it comes like a ministering angel, whispering the soothing words, —"Underneath are the everlasting arms"—"Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

I have heard a young Christian of eminent piety and learning say, "The more I study the Bible, the more I want to study it." This terse and heartfelt expression is an eloquent and noble testimony to the inestimable preciousness of that Holy Book. If I may refer to uninspired writers,—John Locke, a philosopher, said: "That the Holy Scriptures are one of the greatest blessings which God bestows upon the sons of men, is generally acknowledged by all who know anything of the value and worth of them." Sir Wm. Jones, an eminent scholar and linguist, said: "I have regularly and attentively read the Holy Scriptures, and am of the opinion that this volume contains more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, more pure morality, more important history, and finer strains both of poetry and eloquence, than could be collected from all other books." An eminent jurist said: "There is not a tie that binds us to our families, not a virtue that endears us to our country, nor a hope that thrills our bosoms in the prospect of eternal happiness, that has not its foundation in this Bible. It is the charter of charters, the palladium of liberty, the standard of righteousness." The Hon. John Quincy Adams said: "In what light soever we read the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history, or to morality, it is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue."

But we can so briefly enumerate its countless benefits to men. And therefore, with these few seed-thoughts on the importance and worth of that Holy Book, we pass to a second branch of the subject. Another requisite to a student of the Bible, is an upright and sincere desire of submitting to its dictates, whatever they may be, whether in doctrine or practice. The Bible is the sovereign test for all. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." 1 Thess. v. 21. The apostles had the power of working real miracles in confirmation of what they said; and yet the Bereans examined even their teachings by the test of Scripture,—they "searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so. Therefore many of them believed." And they were commended as "noble," for their conduct. How much more necessary then is it for us to examine what we hear our pastor who may say it,) and to have a "Thus saith the Lord," or a "Thus it is written" for every article of our faith and practice! It is a great and broad Protestant principle that, "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

The "Comprehensive Commentary, Vol. 6," has well said, "An authoritative message has been sent from the throne of God, accredited by the most ample and convincing evidence. Having then been visited with the light of revelation, the foundation of our religious creed is no longer left to the dreams of imagination, or the speculations of philosophy; but it is to be deduced fairly and honestly from the written record alone. And the same principle is to govern equally the learned and the unlearned .... It is our part to purify our understanding of all its previous conceptions. It must not be the pride or obstinacy of self-formed opinions, or the haughty independence of him who thinks he has reached the manhood of his understanding. We must bring with us the docility of a child, if we want to gain the kingdom of heaven. It must not be a partial but an entire and an unexcepted obedience. The Bible will admit of no compromise. .... We must bring every thought into captivity to its obedience; and closely abide by the rule and the doctrine this authentic memorial sets before us."

Many persons pride themselves on the testimony of their own hearts, or the witness within, as they call it, but "all such boasting is vain." If that testimony does not harmonize with the written word of God, for the sake of God let us cast it out. Setting up a standard in the human heart contrary to the written word of God is the worst kind of fanaticism; for, with whatever profession of sanctity it may be attended, in Protestant Christianity, it is treason and rebellion against the Most High who alone has the right to dictate what we shall believe and do. "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." Jer. xvii. 9. "The heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live." Eccl. ix. 3. "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts." Matt. xv. 19. Hence the Scripture saith again, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." Prov. xxviii. 6. In great sincerity, and in the depths of his heart a man may think that he doeth God service, while it is only a carnal zeal, and "a deceived heart hath led him astray." John xvi. 2; Isaiah xliv. 20; xxxii. 6. Such human sincerity will not render harmless the believing of error, any more than it will render harmless the drinking of poison. If every man's own heart were to be made the standard and evidence of what is right, would not all the various sects of Protestantism, Catholicism and Paganism have an equal claim to be right? for I suppose they all claim to be sincere, and to have some sort of approving witness in their own hearts. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. xiv. 12.

Our field of study must embrace the whole Bible, and not merely that part of it which was written by the apostles. Thus our faith will be "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. ii. 20. The two classes of testimony—prophetic and apostolic—may be called the two sources from which "as new-born babes" we derive "the sincere milk of the word" in our earliest perceptions of saving truth. 1 Pet. ii. 2. They may be compared to the two wings on which in growing strength we mount up as eagles. Isa. xl. 31. Yea, we may liken them to the two edges of that "sword of the spirit which is the word of God," and which "a good soldier of Jesus Christ" wields to the conviction and conversion of others. Eph. vi. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 3.

When the Savior said "search the Scriptures," that portion of the Bible called the New Testament had not been written. Hence those who neglect the study of the prophets neglect this command of the Savior. The apostles likewise tell us to "be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets," and that in taking "heed" to the "word of prophecy," we "do well." 2 Pet. i. 19; iii. 2. Not hearkening to the prophets is bewailed by Daniel (ix. 6,) as one of the great sins of the people. See what a value the Savior has attached to the prophets, and to the convincing power of their testimony—"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Luke xvi. 31. And again, "All things must be fulfilled which are written in the law of Moses, in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me." Luke xxiv. 44. To slight the prophets is to slight "the spirit of Christ" which spoke in them, "for prophecy came not in olden time by the will of man but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." Their themes—"the sufferings of Christ and the glories (or reign, thus should follow"—ought to command the devout attention of every one who truly loves the Savior. 1 Pet. i. 10-12 Pet. i. 21.

"The Most Explored"—a publication of the American Sunday School Union—says: "Prophecy is interwoven with every part of the Bible from Genesis to the Revelation." The "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge," says: "Prophecy serves as the basis of our hope in the times yet to come; in the final triumph of truth and righteousness on earth, the universal establishment of the kingdom of our Lord, and in the rewards of eternal life to be bestowed at his second appearing." The "Comprehensive Commentary" says: "The subject of prophecy makes so large a proportion of Scripture, that no one can slight it without disobeying the plain direction of searching the Scriptures."

And why object to the study of unfulfilled prophecy? The future punishment of the wicked is a part of the unfilled prophecies, for "Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds." Jude 14, 15. By believing and heeding what was as yet an unfulfilled prophecy, Noah "prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Heb. xi. 7. And is it not perfectly fair to infer that if, under any pretext whatever, he had neglected or rejected that prophecy he would have perished along with the rest? Indeed, soon after this, we have an instance of neglecting an unfulfilled prophecy, and the fearful consequences—when Lot announced to his sons-in-law the prophecy concerning Sodom they disregarded it, and so perished in the flames. Gen. xix. 14. Why was Israel scattered and made "a curse, an astonishment, a hissing and a reproach among all the nations?" "Because they hearkened not to my words, saith the Lord, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets." Jer xxix. 17-19. The blessed Savior himself was a Prophet, and we know that he uttered many prophecies which are not yet fulfilled, because the time has not come for their fulfillment; and yet we are required to "hear that Prophet in all things whatsoever" he hath said. Acts iii. 22. A part of the Holy Spirit's work was to show "things to come." John xvi. 13. And I transpire for "those thoughtless persons who [illegible] the Holy Spirit with as much [illegible] as [illegible] to [illegible] and

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It therefore entertains as its basis the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with Christ of the throne of David; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the judgment of the world in righteousness, and the final adoption of the saints to eternal life only through Christ and his atoning blood of truth. It also advocates loyalty to the Church, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, as the only conditions precedent to the [illegible] with the privilege of final salvation.

Does Probation End With the Second Coming of Christ?

WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

This is a question which seems to draw one of the grand dividing lines among our Advent brethren. And, indeed, it has come to this with some, that to believe that probation does not close with the coming of the Lord: those who do not believe it, have openly avowed their disfellowshiping them, and count them heretics or declare that such a belief partakes of the complexion of "heresy." It is sad to think that such is the case, but there is the record which bears witness to it. Now, it seems to me that a question like this among the brethren never ought to be held in such a manner and spirit as to produce division in the body, and a disposition on the part of one to proscribe the other. This certainly is assuming too much. If we were all perfect in doctrine, as all come in the graces of the spirit of love, there is no promise that we should have all this side of the coming of our Lord where would be the works of charity good Christian men—which are "to be burned" in the day of the Lord Jesus The "wood, hay, stubble;"—or another doctrine and opinions held in equal faith by many? There would no controversy. 1 Cor. iii. 11-15. And did we see alike now, we should get puffed faster than prophecy would allow us we should "see eye to eye" before the Lord would bring again Zion; or make them properly, before he came to Zion to reign, that we should have the effect without the cause. But, that were utterly impossible. Isa. lii. 8. Then again, if we all see alike now, in this life, the answers would be an ignorant and confused state of things. No other should not be straining our mortal eyes by gazing "through a glass and darkly," as the Apostle informs us we do; but we should look up through the clear sky and see "face to face," and did we all have the same mind and opinion on every subject in the world we then would be likely to know as we are known, going beyond what the Apostle now limits us, namely, "The I know in part."

And I must remark that here in this chapter, he teaches us a lesson that it would be well for us to all get well versed in, both in the letter and in spirit. He here enumerates many things of exellent things which are well worthy of knowing, but he sums up and says, "the greatest of these is Christ." Therefore love. Having acquired all this, but he tells us, without this great grace we are "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal," or, as in full, ing." And, to my mind, it is fastened of more of the "love of God abroad in the heart by the Holy given unto us;" this divine principle of divine love, that there is so unkind feeling exhibited among the brethren who may differ on doctrine which, really to be of disbelieve, in my humble opinion not damn any one; it will prove a savor of life unto life death unto death. Salvation nation is not in any way predicated our acceptance or rejection of things. They are of but minor importance as compared with this great call of graces of the spirit.

With these few preliminary remarks, we now proceed at once to examine this subject of human probation in the light of divine revelation,—in the light of types, etc. Admitting that there may be some things said against probation subsequent to the coming of Christ, yet we feel assured that many things can be said in favor of it. The saying is now as common as the grass that grows, "when Christ leaves the mercy seat, probation must forever end to the human family." Now, from whence did this idea originate and where do we get the authority to say this? The argument, no doubt, is drawn from the circumstance that Christ was made the Great High Priest after the order of Melchisedec—the antitypical Aaron—and as Aaron entered into the holy of holies once a year to make atonement and reconciliation for the sins of the people with the blood of bulls and goats, so Christ has entered into the holy place not made with hands, with his own blood, there to appear in the presence of God for us; and as the people patiently waited and watched for Aaron to emerge from the holy place, expecting his blessing, which they always received; so with Christ, our Great High Priest, he has gone into the heavenly sanctuary to intercede for us, "and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time," with blessings in his hand, and on his lips to freely dispense to his people in waiting for his return. Such as "come ye blessed," etc. Num. ix. 22, 23; Heb. ix. 7, 24, 25, 28.

When Aaron came forth to bless the people who were waiting, it does not appear that he cursed those who were not "waiting for" There were some, however, were annihilated at this time, but it was not because they were in waiting for the high priest's entrance into the holy place. Those were "Nadab and Abihu" who dared to offer "strange fire before the Lord which he commanded them not." Num. x. 1.

Now then, inasmuch as the residue of the people were not destroyed who were not in waiting for Aaron, what [illegible] sinning of sin and [illegible] put an end to both; only the right shall live for ever. And surely it [illegible] mercy to the sinner himself. [illegible] life in sin, could the Holy One [illegible] it, would be an awful fate to the sinner. Jehovah at once stamps sin with his reprobation, and shows pity to the incorrigible transgressor by consigning him to utter, hopeless death.

In the record of man's original creation, constitution, and position in the world, we have seen that he was created immortal, but simply endowed with life, and with the means of prolonging it everlastingly, placed within his reach, on certain specified condition that he was, in short, a candidate for immortality. In this candidateship he failed—he lost the prize, and was banished from his state of primeval innocence and bliss under the doom of impending death. Such being the case, his offspring cannot be possessed of immortality by natural constitution. 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,' was the fate appointed by God for the fallen father of the race—a fate which has descended to his children; for though to some the term of life may be comparatively prolonged, sooner or later the result comes alike to all. 'All go unto the dust, all turn to dust again.' The dust shall return to the earth, as it was, and the spirit (or breath of life) unto God who gave it'—(Eccl. ii. xii. 7). 'Man dieth and wasteth away, yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and ariseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep'—(Job xiv. 10 12). Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish'—(Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4).

Not only is mankind without immortality by nature; but also, by the sequence of personal transgression under sentence of death; for the wages of sin is death'—Rom. vi. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die' (Ezek. xviii. 4). That the death which is the wages of sin is real death, and not merely a change from one condition of life to another, is very much on this ones of the Scriptures—that is: That the judgments of God are to be poured out upon, and be confined more particularly upon the children of Christendom. When our brethren who differ with us, have seen that the parable of the good and bad fish; the parable of the wheat and tares, the parable of the sheep and goats, the parable of the wise and foolish virgins, means only the professed Christian world, and that Matthew xxv. starting from the point—"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him," etc., and ending at the close, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment," covers the whole millennial reign of our blessed Lord on earth, which view beautifully harmonizes with Revelations xx. Here, in Matthew, we have the beginning of Christ's millennial reign, and there, in the opening of Rev. xx., we have his reign with his saints also introduced. We have, at the close of Matthew xxv., the consignment of the wicked at the close of the millennium to annihilation, and the close of the thousand years; there we have the casting of the wicked into the lake of fire, which is the second death. We see how these Scriptures beautifully synchronize, and so getting a proper view of these things, we shall soon see more alike, nearer "eye to eye," if not quite.

Another Scripture used by our brethren as a strong point which they suppose in favor of no probation after the advent is, that in Luke xiii. 25: "When once the master of the house is risen up and shut to the door," etc. This shutting to the door is not against the world at large, but only Christendom. That portion of the race which has had the light of gospel truth to shine on them, but have closed their eyes against it, their deeds being evil, John iii. 19, 20, 21. The parallel text in Matt. vii. 22, makes this clear. All of those whom Jesus rejects certainly are professors of religion. They professed to know him, but he never knew them. The last door in the parable of the ten virgins is only to the foolish virgins who certainly represent professors, so much so, that they all traveled together, associated together up to the time of the bridegroom's coming; then they were separated by the door being shut against them. They all seemed alike, looked alike, talked alike, the only difference was, they had no oil in their vessels, and that makes all the difference. Matt. xxv. 1-12.

Observe, we have no account given nor any reason to believe that the foolish virgins were either destroyed, damned, or lost. It is true they met with a great loss by not having oil in their vessels and were excluded from participating in the nuptials or marriage feast; but we cannot see that they were irrecoverably lost.

We argue that probation will still be extended to, and the sovereign grace of God be exercised to a certain class and large portion of the human race after Christ has come and sits upon the throne of his glory:

1. From the fact that there is nothing in the Scriptures, nothing in all the past dealings of God with men, nothing in the character and the divine attributes to disprove it, nothing to prove that this dispensation ends all dispensations of mercy and of grace.

2. From the fact that it does not logically and necessarily follow that because Christ comes out from the holy place to bless his waiting church; when he comes, that "he leaves the mercy seat;" that because he assumes the seat of judgment, that therefore mercy to the entire race is clean gone forever, for this executive judgment is confined to nations who claim to be civilized, enlightened, and Christians.

3. From the fact that we are not yet living in the "Christian era" as so generally believed—not living in the day of Christ, neither "his times when he will show who is the only potentate," etc., but in "the times of the Gentiles." The world being under, and in subjection to the Gentile rule, and not under the law of Christ nor his rule. If we were in the Christian era, we should be under Christian rule, and the world would be governed by the principles of the gospel, and at the closing up of the era the world would be likely to be submissive at the feet of Christ. But no, the world is in rebellion to-day against Christ and his gospel, when we are near the close of what is claimed to be "the Christian era," and so it will be found when Christ appears, as many Scriptures declare, especially Psa. ii. and Rev. xi. 18.

4. From the fact that Psalm ii. clearly describes his royal inauguration on Zion's holy hill as King of Zion, which certainly does not take place until he comes. And here we find that mercy is still offered to those who still dare to rise up against him. Grace, here, yet abounds in these words so full of divine clemency and mercy. "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth; serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son lest he be angry." This is an Oriental custom, and the act of kissing denotes loyalty and submission to our superiors, kings and rulers, etc.; "and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little," evidently implying that if we heed the exhortation and submit, we shall be saved. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." All this language denotes a state of grace still exercised toward a class who have not yet been brought in, subsequent to the coming of our blessed Lord.

5. From the fact that the very circumstance of Jesus assuming the robes of royalty invests him with powers to forgive whom he will; to pardon rebels if he please, to grant life everlasting to those who may be condemned to die; and, inasmuch, as "mercy rejoiceth against judgment," he will make this apparent in the exercise of his kingship. This will be one of his favorite prerogatives to exercise this power.

6. From the fact that, "in mercy shall the throne be established, and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness." Isa. xv. 5; compare Amos ix. 11 and Acts xv. 16, 17. "That the residue of men might seek after the Lord," etc. Here are men represented as seeking the Lord after the advent, after Christ is upon his throne.

7. From the fact that it is written after the thrones are said to be cast down and the Ancient of days did sit, and one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, etc., (see Matt. xxiv. 30; Rev. i. 7,) after there was given him dominion and glory, etc.; "that all peoples, and nations, and languages should serve him," etc. Dan. vii. Observe, these are not "the saints of the Most High," who followed him in his temptations and now co-operate with Messiah in his kingdom and reign, but another class altogether, styled "the left of all the nations," etc., that have not heard Jehovah's fame, neither have seen his glory. Isa. lxvi. 19; Zech. xiv. 16.

8. From the fact that the Jews must be brought into the one fold, accepting Christ as their Messiah, as the prophecies abundantly declare this. Both the Old and the New Testament abound with declarations concerning this, without any ifs or and's, or conditions annexed; but God has promised by oath, swearing by himself, his everliving existence, that he will do it; and this will not be done until after Christ appears, as they will not be converted by, or through faith, but by sight, as Paul was, on his way to Damascus. "And they shall look upon me (or him) whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him," etc.; "in that day there shall be a great mourning in Jerusalem," etc. This mourning does not arise from the fact that there is no mercy for them, but from the fact that they have discovered—after all their rebellion, their unbelief, their hard heartedness, and of their forefather's putting their true Messiah to death—that there is still mercy in reserve; for, instead of God's pouring out his wrath upon them as their merited doom, he "pours upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplication," and the result is, they look upon the once crucified, and mourn and grieve and sorrow over it as Joseph's brethren sorrowed over him when he appeared, or made himself known to them the second time. Of this visit into Egypt (Acts vii. 13,) Joseph and his brethren being a type of Christ and the Jews down here; and as the patriarch was made known to them the second time, so will the Jews know him (Christ) on his second appearing, their "blindness in part," which happened to them for a wise purpose, will then be taken away. And as God so arranged the case of Joseph to save much people alive in his days, (Gen. l. 20,) so has he arranged it in the case of Christ, the greater Joseph, to save much people alive in his days or "his times." "For (as the Apostle argues) if the casting of them off (i. e., the Jews) be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life (or as life) from the dead?" Rom. xi. 15.

9. From the fact that it is expressly stated when the Lord shall build up Zion, he will appear in his glory, and still he will yet regard prayer "the prayer of the destitute," and not despise their prayer. Now, when Christ appears in his glory, it will be at his coming; then prayer is heard and answered for a people who are destitute—in indigent and trying circumstances. This cannot be said of the saints; then it must be a class who are not yet brought in. So it is further said here, at this time: "So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory, when the people are gathered together and the kingdoms to serve the Lord." Psa. cii.; Compare Zeph. ii. 11; Zech. ix. 10; Mal. i. 11.

10. From the fact that the priesthood of Christ does not cease when he comes as King of kings, etc., but these offices are united in him; he sits now as King and Priest upon his throne, the antitypical Melchizedec, who was king of Salem, and also "priest of the Most High God," (Zech. vi. 9-13; Psa. cx. 4,) while a certain number of whom he has selected out of this age to co-operate with him in the age to come, are made both kings and priests as they are represented to affirm in the "new song" which they sing. Having "redeemed us to God by thy blood," etc., and hast made us unto our God kings "and priests; and we shall reign on the earth," not in heaven. Now, the existence of a royal priesthood makes it evident that somebody is left of the nations who are to be ministered unto in the exercise of the functions of that office; somebody who stands in need of mercy being offered, and grace bestowed, and pardon granted. It is the work of a priest to turn men from iniquity, and thus bless them, but the saints have already been made perfect; they need no priestly ministrations; then there must be a class yet unsaved who have not yet been brought into the fold, or what need of the continuance of the priestly office? Mal. ii. 5-7.

We might here, in this line of argument, continue ad infinitum, but let it suffice. The glory of the Lord is yet to be revealed to that extent that all flesh shall behold it together. The Lord is yet to make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth are to see the salvation of God. There is to be a restitution of all things (not a part) spoken of by the mouth of all of God's holy prophets since the world began. But, if these things are not accomplished in this world, or age, they will be in the next. If they are not fulfilled this side of the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, they certainly will be after that event takes place, and as there seems no probability that they will take place prior to, and as we have no promise that they will, we look for them to occur subsequent to that time. Amen.

An arrow, if it be drawn up but a little way, goes not far, but, if it be pulled up to the head, flies swiftly, and pierces deep. Thus prayer, if it be only dribbled forth from careless lips, falls at our feet. It is the strength of ejaculation and strong desire which sends it to heaven, and makes it pierce the clouds.

Like flakes of snow that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change—no single action creates, however it may exhibit a man's character.

It is resignation and contentment that are best calculated to lead us safely through life. THE TRANSLATION.

Not many more at life's slow pacing hours;
Oh, what a glad ascending shall be ours;
Oh, what a path-way up yon starry blue,
A journey like Elijah's, swift and bright,
Caught gently upward to a glorious crown,
In Heaven's own chariot of unblazing light,
With death untasted, and the grave unknown.

The elevation of man is to be sought, or rather consists, first in force of thought exerted for the acquisition of truth. Thought is the fundamental distinction of mind, and the great work of life. All that a man does outwardly is but the expression and completion of his inward thought. To work effectually, he must think clearly; to act nobly, he must think nobly. Intellectual force is a principle element of the soul's life, and should be proposed by every man as the principal end of his being.—Dr. Channing.

Home.

Home is a fountain of life, a resting place of the affections, a covert from the world's unfriendly blasts, a place where love keeps her throne and holds her citadel. When she dispenses her gifts the richest and rarest are lavished here. Here are the altars upon which this divine priestess offers her most costly sacrifices. The home is the creation of love, and the same power that creates must preserve. If love die or be driven away the home falls in careless ruin. The mansion may stand, but the home is no more. The empty hulk may continue to offend the sight, but the precious freighting has gone irrecoverably into the depths.

Home is the clearest and fullest revelation of the best possibilities of human experience, and so of that heaven into which all these possibilities converge in glorious realization. It is the spiritual and not the material element which makes it the dearest spot on earth; it is because we can hear there the intimable music of affection, and see the glory of that which love wears, and feel the beating of living hearts, that home is heaven. In purity, in affectionateness, in simplicity, in cheerfulness, in glad and loving ministries, and in all that goes to make up the perfection and bliss of spiritual existence, it is the exact counterpart of heaven. It is a vestibule of the eternal sanctuary; and light, peace, beauty, music, glory are continually flowing out into it through the open door. The intercourse between the members of such a home is the best possible suggestion of the character of heavenly society. There will be a continual striving together in mutual love and good will, and in a help full emulation to assist each other and to promote the common good. In these recent years there has been many a family who by business reverses have been driven in from the outposts upon the very citadel, and by becoming poor they have suddenly found how rich they are; just as others have left the home for the mansion, which they have found splendid, dreary, and desolate as an arctic winter—without rest, warmth, peace, or contentment.—*N. THE RESTITUTION.

N. J. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 24, 1878.

SOME days necessary absence has hindered us from keeping fully up with our correspondence, and we trust our brethren will excuse delay in replying to their letters.

ALL papers heralding the coming of Christ, and immortality through him alone, as the Life-giver, are only kept up by persistent effort and sacrifice on the part of those waiting and watching for Messiah's return. Remember THE RESTITUTION financially, and in your prayers.

FROM the European news up to this date, it is difficult to conjecture whether the Eastern question will be submitted to the decisions of a conference of the Great Powers, or be left to the arbitrament of the sword. The parties most interested are still negotiating for a peaceful solution, but the outlook is still gloomy and the future course of events exceedingly uncertain. England is fresh for the conflict and financially strong; but Russia has gained the advantage, if she must fight two enemies, of fighting them in detail, and of crushing one before being called upon to encounter the other. She has also the advantage in position, and this, of itself, is a full compensation for all her expenditure of blood and treasure for the last year. In the Crimean war Turkey was the base for the English and French armies operating against Russia, and the Black Sea was open. But now the Russians occupy Turkey in force, and the way to the Black Sea can easily be made impassable. This is one of the prophetic conflicts, and we await the results with intense interest.

A Narrative of the Sixty Cities of Bashan.

As seen recently by an eye witness, the Rev. J. L. Porter, late Missionary at Damascus.

BY REV. S. BONHOMME.

[For the purpose of the text of all Bible quotations, but only such of them as were revised by the Holy Ghost.—EDITOR.]

The exodus and journey of the Israelites from Egypt to Canaan is one of the most surprising events of ancient history. A whole people with their families, numbering not less than two millions, with their flocks and herds, are transformed from a band of oppressed slaves into a conquering nation, and drive out before them the inhabitants of strong and fortified cities; settling down themselves in the possession of rich pasture lands, towns, cities and villages—wells they had not dug, and vineyards they had not planted—and retaining this possession almost uninterrupted, for centuries.

It is a strange narrative, and skepticism has tried to make many of its features appear absolutely incredible. But even the skeptic has found nothing more difficult of acceptance in it than the existence, on the route of the Israelites, of a people whose very name—Rephaim, or giants—indicates their enormous stature and strength. Deut. ii. 20. In the south of Palestine were the Anakims, of lofty stature, whose warlike appearance struck the Israelites with terror, but on the east of Jordan was the remnant of a kindred people, inhabitants of what is now known as the Hauran, whose gigantic forms and superhuman strength were attested by fortified cities which seemed to defy assault and render their conquest by a nation of shepherds an utter impossibility.

"And the Lord our God delivered into our hands Og, also the king of Bashan, and all his people, and we smote him until none was left to him remaining." Deut. iii. 3.

The kingdom of Bashan is described as a rich hilly district lying east of Jordan, and between the mountains of Hermon on the north, and those of Gilead and Ammon on the south. The country takes its name from its soft and sandy soil. It is celebrated in Scripture for its stately oaks, its fine breed of cattle, rams of the breed of Bashan, (Deut. xxxii. 14). "Rams, bulls, goats, all of them fattings of the rich pasturage of Bashan." Ezek. xxxix. 18. "The oaks of Bashan are mentioned in connection with the cedars of Lebanon." Isa. ii. 13.

Modern travelers describe the country as hilly, abounding with verdant and fertile valleys, with meadows traversed by refreshing streams, hills crowned with forests and pastures offering an abundance to the flocks that wander through them.

The giant race who were believers only in sensual enjoyment, made it their first concern to secure settled and permanent habitations, and it is already thousands of years since their place was no more found on the face of the earth.

In ancient times the art of defence was much better understood than the art of attack. Cities could then be surrounded with walls and be shut in with gates, which no besieging force could batter down or force through.

The original inhabitants of the land crowded all the high places with strongholds, and guarded the entrance to the mountain fastnesses with gates of solid stone. The scouts sent by Moses to spy out the whole country brought back word that it was inhabited by men of great stature, and their cities were walled up to heaven. Three hundred and sixty-eight fortified towns were counted within the limits of the land allotted among the conquering tribes. But the sixty cities are especially named with high walls, "fenced gates and bars," "besides unwalled towns a great many." Deut. iii. 5. Of these fourteen feet long was preserved as a relic. Deut. iii. 11.

"We See Through a Glass, Darkly."

We weep when from the darkened sky
The thunder bolts are driven,
And when o'er all we turn our eye
Our earthly hopes are riven:
But could we look beyond the storm
That thunders all is fierce,
We might discern a heavenly form
Directing the impetuous fire.

The eye that sees the sparrow's fall,
That never sleeps nor slumbers,
Beholds our griefs but ever shall,
And every sigh he numbers.
The angels fly at his command,
With love their hearts constraining,
They lead us gently by the hand,—
They never tire of aiding.

And when the fading things of earth
Our hearts too fondly cherish,
Fierce mel of their mortal birth,
How suddenly they perish!
But 'tis in mercy and in love
Our Father thus chastises,
To lead our thoughts to things above,
He sends his sweet surprises.

We know not, and we may not know
Till dawn the endless ages,
Why round his children here below
The howling tempest rages;
But then we know that 'twas for death
Our souls from heaven were given!
We'll praise him with our latest breath—
We'll sing his name forever!

SELECTIONS.

Immortality—The Gift of God through Faith in Jesus the Christ.

BY W. LAING.

The declaration that 'God created man in his own image,' is frequently regarded and urged as an intimation that man was created immortal. The argument stands thus: God is immortal; man was made in the image of God, therefore man is immortal. The syllogism, however, proves too much, for it assumes that, because man was made in the image or likeness of God, men must be like God in every respect; else why select immortality from among the attributes of Deity? God is from everlasting, He is Almighty, Unchangeable, Infallible, &c. Shall we, therefore, reason that, because man was made in the image of God, he must be like God in these qualities? If not, why select immortality as the point of resemblance? There is nothing in the context pointing out this kind of resemblance, and we would naturally expect that the point or points of resemblance would be of a palpable kind. The connection in which the words stand would lead us to fix on some characteristic distinguishing man from the other creatures, and in which he bears some resemblance to God. The resemblance, whatever it is, can only be so in kind, not in degree.

The most obvious resemblance in kind between man and his Maker is in his mental and moral qualities. These separate him by a wide and impassable gulf from all the other animal tribes. Some creatures approach very near him in structure; but in the formation and development of his brain, and consequent moral and intellectual powers, he stands far apart from and above all the rest, and that these moral and intellectual qualities, in an incomparable degree, belong to God, will not be disputed. But Adam was not only made superior in organization to the other animals; he was also, by divine appointment, their lord; and it is in connection with the intimation of this fact that his being made in the likeness of God is mentioned. Thus we read: 'And God said, Let us make man in our own image, and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over every living thing that creepeth upon the earth.'

Endowed by his Maker with powers distinguishing him from all other earthly beings, and elevating him far above them, and fitted to control and subdue them, man was divinely constituted the lord of the world. Having the right of dominion over earth, and all upon it, he thus far resembled God—the Ruler of all.

That man is not, by creation, an immortal being is clear from the penalty threatened him for disobedience. 'The Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it and to keep it; and the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest of it, thou shalt surely die'—(Gen. ii. 15-17). The penalty threatened was death. But an immortal being cannot die. This is so self evident, that those who maintain that man is, by nature, immortal, in order to make the penalty threatened square with that idea, interpret death to mean endless life in misery! It meant, say the divines—1st. Death temporal; that is, the death of the body till the resurrection, and the separate existence of the soul during that time 'in an intermediate state of misery and shivering anticipation of worse.' 2d. Death spiritual, or deadness of feeling toward God, associated with active hostility to His authority, and intense desires towards all that is evil. 3d. Death eternal, or eternal life, to the reunited soul and body, in most excruciating torments, to all eternity. All this was threatened to Adam by the words, 'Thou shalt surely die!' How strange! Surely had God meant to punish Adam so severely, He would have pronounced the doom in plain, distinct terms, or added the necessary explanation. But we have no record of any explanation being given; and as we cannot imagine that Adam was killed in metaphysics and systematic divinity, we cannot suppose him to have understood 'death' to mean all that. It was death that was threatened to the living soul, Adam. 'Thou'—not thy body merely—'thou shalt surely die'—cease to be a living soul. That which sinned was to die. And so we find it expressed in the sentence passed upon Adam as to his sin: 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return'—(Gen. iii. 19). Is it possible for language to express more unambiguously and emphatically, that, because he had sinned, Adam—the man formed out of the dust of the ground, and into whose nostrils God had breathed the breath of life—was doomed to die—to be resolved into the original elements whence he came! Verily, no. At the very morning of human history, we see verified the divine law—'The wages of sin is death.'

In confirmation of the foregoing statement of man's original nature and penal condition, we point to the fact of his banishment from the tree of life, and the reason assigned for that enactment. Man was driven out of Eden 'lest he should put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever'—language quite meaningless if Adam were an immortal being, and could never die, but most expressive in the light of the facts as we have set them forth. Thou shalt die; 'dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.' The tree of life in the midst of the garden, which Adam was appointed to dress and to keep, was endowed with such life-preserving qualities, that it prevented dissolution, and imparted immortality to those who partook of its wonderful fruit. Had man stood the trial to which he was subjected, this tree of life would have made him immortal; but we know how he fell, and was driven beyond its reach, to toil and moil in suffering, sorrow, and decay, till life's brittle cord snapped asunder, and he returned to dust!

Ere we leave the sad and mournfully suggestive scene, let us notice the mercy of God tempering His judgments. He drove out the man, lest he should eat of the tree of life, and live forever. God's will is against the immortalizing of sin and sinners. He will put an end to both; only the righteous shall live for ever. And surely it is in mercy to the sinner himself. Eternal life in sin, could the Holy One permit it, would be an awful fate to the sinner. Jehovah at once stamps sin with his reprobation, and shows pity to the incorrigible transgressor by consigning him to utter, hopeless death.

In the record of man's original creation, constitution, and position in the world, we have seen that he was not immortal, but simply endowed with life, and with the means of prolonging it everlastingly, placed within his reach, on certain specified conditions; that he was, in short, a candidate for immortality. In this candidature he failed—he lost the prize, and was banished from his state of primeval innocence and bliss under the doom of impending death. Such being the case, his offspring cannot be possessed of immortality by natural constitution. 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,' was the fate appointed by God for the fallen father of our race—a fate which has descended to his children; for though to some the term of life may be comparatively prolonged, sooner or later the same result comes alike to all. 'All are of the dust, all turn to dust again.' 'The dust shall return to the earth, as it was, and the spirit [or breath of life] unto God who gave it'—(Eccl. iii. 20; xii. 7). 'Man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he! As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep'—(Job xiv. 10 12). 'Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish'—(Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4).

Not only is mankind without immortality by nature; but also, in consequence of personal transgression, under sentence of death; for 'The wages of sin is death'—Rom. vi. 23.) 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die'—'Ezek. xviii. 4). That the death which is the wages of sin is real death, and not eternal life in misery, we shall afterwards have occasion to demonstrate; but we have only to take the other side of the picture—

That the Lord was sent into the world, that sinners, by believing in him, might obtain life everlasting, is so plainly taught both by the Lord and His Apostles, that it is hard to conceive how any attentive reader of the Bible can believe the opposite. Let us consider a few of the testimonies. 'God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have everlasting life'—(John iii. 16). The teaching of this and kindred passages is commonly put aside by the remark, that the term 'life,' in these passages, simply means 'happiness.' That those who obtain everlasting life shall be ever singly happy, is true, but it is a truth which is not expressed in the term 'life;' for we know that 'misery,' as well as 'happiness,' is commonly associated, with life, and that it is no lawful to speak of a miserable life as of a happy one. According to the common teaching, all men live for ever; and it is simply because of this foregone conclusion, that 'life' is interpreted to mean 'happiness.' Happiness and life are not synonymous terms; and had the Lord meant to express the idea of happiness simply, he would have used the proper term. There is nothing in the context forbidding us to understand the terms 'perish' and 'everlasting life' in their ordinary acceptation; yea, rather, we should say, the context demands that these terms be understood to have their common and primary meaning (see verses 14, 15). 'As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.' The analogy or comparison employed clearly establishes that the sense we are contending for is the true one. A reference to Num. xxi. 4-9 will show this. 'The Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died'—(verse 6). And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole; and it came to pass, if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived'—(verse 9). The Israelites were perishing because of sin; to save them from dying, a serpent of brass, by the command of Jehovah, is elevated on a pole, and the appointment made, that whosoever of the dying Israelites looked at the brazen serpent, should live. And 'as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.' The comparison is so simple and expressive, that he who runs may read it.

And so is that other comparison which Jesus applies to himself in John vi. 51; "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." The parties to whom our Lord thus addressed himself had desired from him some miraculous display of power, as an evidence that he was sent by God; and they supported their demand by referring to the circumstance that their fathers had been miraculously fed in the wilderness by the hand of Moses. "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Jesus replied by asserting that God had given them a blessing of far superior value, and that he himself was that gift. "My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven; I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if a man eat of this bread, he shall live forever."

Jesus in representing himself as "bread," plainly intimates that one grand end of his mission was to give life. The only use of bread is to sustain life; and the only proper mark of analogy between Christ and the bread consists in his being the source of life to all who believe on him. The property of bread is not to communicate happiness; for how many at this hour have abundance of bread, and continue unhappy!

That it is as the Giver of life that Jesus represents himself as bread, is still further evident from his language in verse 49th: "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread of God which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." Where is the antithesis, on the supposition that the Lord meant, your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not be unhappy, or not live in misery for ever?

The true antithesis is this. The manna which fell in the desert only sustained life for a while; it did not prevent their fathers from dying; but the bread which God had now sent down to them gave everlasting being. God had sent it that a man might eat of it and not die.

The sense in which the Lord used the terms "life" and "death," in consequences of fidelity or infidelity to himself, is clearly defined in his language recorded in Matt. xvi. 25, 26: "Whosoever will save his life for my sake shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it; for what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" We are at no loss to understand what sort of life it is which the unfaithful servant seeks to save. It is the same kind of life which he shall lose. No one hesitates about the kind of life which the faithful martyr loses for Christ's sake. Well, the Lord affirms that he who loses his life for his sake shall find it—surely that life which he lost.

It is of importance to notice that the word rendered "soul" twice in verse 26, is the identical Greek word twice translated "life" in verse 25; and should have been rendered "life" in these four occurrences. "The Greeks," writes the late Dean of Canterbury, "in their wonderfully accurate language, expressed by the same term (psuche) the soul of man which he has to save, and the life of the reptile which can crushes under his foot. And it would have been immensely to our profit if we had done the same. For then we should have understood what very few now do understand—the true nature, the true place, of this our intellectual and emotional beings. We should then have read in our Bibles not only: 'Whoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it,' but also—for the same word is used—'For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?' For it is the life of man which carries his practical will, with all those motions of intellect and feeling which sets it at work; it is the life which is mysteriously bound up with the body, which is left from it at death; it is this life, which, if a man spend upon God and upon good, he shall save to life eternal."

That the Lord Jesus Christ came to give "life," in its primary sense, is also taught in the beautiful language of John x. 10-18: "The thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy. I am come, that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." "I lay down my life for the sheep. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." Did Jesus lay down his spiritual life, or did he lay down mere happiness? Nay, it was his own 'life' he laid down and took up again; and he likens himself to a shepherd who, to save his sheep, lays down his own life; unlike the hireling, who, to save his life, flies in time of danger, and allows the wolves to devour the flock. If such language does not express the idea, that 'life,' in its ordinary sense, is the boon which Jesus laid down his own life to confer upon his own flock, then it is impossible to find language to express that idea.

The beauty and force of the comparison would appear all the more lively to a pastoral people in the East, where the attachment betwixt a shepherd and his flock seems much stronger than in our Western clime. 'Thy servant,' said the son of Jesse to King Saul—'thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock; and I went after him, and smote him, and slew him.' The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear—He will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine'—(1 Sam. xvii. 34-47). David's love for this lamb of his little flock was great indeed; but how unspeakably greater is the love of Christ for us sinners, since he not only risked his life, but 'laid it down.' He threw himself into the lion's mouth, that his sheep might escape. He 'poured out his soul unto death,' 'that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life.' Herein indeed is love! Contemplate it calmly and gratefully, till tears of joy and adoration flow from your eyes. To save you from the destiny of the brute, and make you a partaker of His own eternal life, the blessed God sent His only begotten Son into the world, to live a mortal's life and die a mortal's death. He, with the benignity of God, gave up freely not happiness alone, but life itself, that you, through faith in him, the risen and immortal Christ, might, at his appearing, enter into life that knows no end, no sinning, and no sorrow!

O Lamb of God! was ever love like thine!

Lot.

In giving a brief sketch of the lives and characters of the principal men of the Bible, it is but just that Lot should have a place. His name is important, because he was an epoch man. He has a written genealogy, and a most wonderful history. He shared with Abraham in his travels, and was rich in "flocks and herds and tents." He was shrewd and business-like, but just and decisive in his ways. He was a captive of war sold into slavery, but rescued by the "father" of the faithful. He lived in a wicked and filthy city, yet he was just and pure.

It seems that in his boyhood he left the land of his nativity, and in company with his grandfather Terah, his uncle Abraham, and Sarah, Abraham's wife, they came to Haran. After his grandfather's death he came to Canaan with his uncle—from thence to Egypt. Years roll on. The boy has become a man, matured and disciplined by contact with the world, and with the experience that travel had brought him, he is prepared to begin life for himself. The court of the Pharoahs, with all their splendid adornings, failed to draw him from the simple rural life of his fathers. Accordingly we see him in company with Abraham, leaving Egypt, and a little further on surrounded with cattle and herds and dwelling in a tent in the valley of the Jordan. His good judgment is seen in his choice of land, for it was well watered everywhere, even as the garden of the Lord; and his pacific disposition is seen in his willingness to quiet disturbances that arose between his and his uncle's herdsmen.

Prosperity cannot always reign. In a battle of the kings Lot was taken prisoner to Damascus, from which his uncle Abraham by good generalship delivered him. Having returned to the plain, he took up his residence in Sodom, a city which probably stood where the saline waters of the Dead sea lie in sullen silence.

Of Lot's life while living in Sodom we have the clearest record. His purity of heart while living in the midst of the most abominate crimes is best expressed in the language of Peter, where he says that "Just Lot (was) vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. For that righteous man, dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds." But God saw and heard it all, and one morning two angels took Lot by the hand and led him out of the city, and then there was a storm in that valley—such a storm as will be seen only once more, when the assembled nations gather to take the camp of God's saints and his holy city. Jesus says, "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." There are many other references to this great and good man in the Bible, which, together with those here hinted at, form an interesting chapter in the study of the lives of the ancient worthies.

There is, however, one point more to which I invite attention. It is the fact that the genealogy of Jesus Christ reaches back to Lot. Bible students will remember that Lot's two daughters escaped the destruction of Sodom, and the firstborn bare a son, and called his name Moab: the same is the father of the Moabites." Gen. xix. 37. God took care of the Moabites and told Moses not to distress them nor contend with them in battle, for they were the children of Lot. See Deut. ii. 9. The Bible student will also remember that Ruth was a Moabitish woman, and that she was the mother of Obed the father of Jesse, and Jesse begat David; and Paul tells us that Jesus Christ our Lord "was made of the seed of David according to the flesh." Ruth i. 3, 4; Romans i. 3. It may be said that the genealogy of woman is not reckoned. It matters not; the line is nevertheless perfect, and reaches to righteous Lot. May it not be that God has thus wisely linked Gentile and Jew together in Christ, not only by faith and obedience, but also by the ties of consanguinity?

Respectfully submitted.

COMBINED STEEL-TOOTH FLEXIBLE

HARROW AND CULTIVATOR,

[Patented May 2, 1876.]

This remarkable tool, in its perfected state, is now for the first time offered to the public, although it has been in use and given general satisfaction for three years.

It is from 6 ft. to 15 ft., in width, and has from 70 to 150 steel teeth. The teeth stand upright, or slant backward, or project forward, as you choose.

You can have one joint in it, or two, or three, or four, or five. It is, therefore, a rigid harrow or a flexible one.

It will work in rocky or stumpy land, or among toothers as well as on the smoothest; pulverized and run safely over any obstacle without being lifted.

It will clean itself to cornstalks or other rubbish.

It is the best tool in the world to harrow the young corn or wheat, as it is a light surfacing or smoothing harrow. As the same time it is the best cultivator for fall plowing or heavy clay soils, as it will thoroughly pulverize the ground from 3 to 4 inches deep without any addition of weight to the harrow.

It is the best soil harrow ever invented, as you can set the teeth the proper slightly by running it standing tooth and then work it still deeper with its teeth straight, and finally pulverize the entire soil by running it with the teeth projecting forward.

Finally it is simple, durable and cheap. Every harrow fully warranted one year. Agents wanted everywhere in the United States and Canada. Samples harrows sent to actual users at a large discount for cash. Send stamp for circulars to

POETRY.

Watch!

BY CARRIE T. L. WHEELER.

When in silvers softly shining,
And in purples faintly blue,
Like the blossom of the Iris,
Falls the evening mist and dew;
When above the rosy embers
Of the sunset fires the bright,
Beauteous star of evening sparkles,
Like a golden censer swinging
In the temple of the night,—
Watch!
Lift your thoughts, my friends, to heaven,
For you know not if at even,
He will come.

When the midnight's spell of silence
Holds the earth, and naught is heard
But the sigh of leaves and blossoms,
By the breezes' whispers stirred;
When the fair moon, calm and saintly,
Sheds abroad her tender light,
And the radiant stars addressin
Round the S'n with draped glory,
Changeless—tireless—ever bright,—
Watch!
For maybe at midnight's hour,
"In his glory and his power,"
He may come.

When the morning's burning footsteps
Leave upon the Eastern sky
Stains of crimson, and the daybreak
In its splendor draweth nigh;
When across the purple darkness,
And the silence far and near,
Waking all the dreaming echoes,
Rings the cheery silver clamor
Of the early chanticleer,—
Watch!
For when day-dawns pearl-gray shadows
Sleep upon the woods and meadows,
He may come.

When the morning, blushing, blooming,
In its fullest beauty glows;
When with music, bird and sunshine,
All the sweet air overflows;
When the earth is brightly smiling,
Bathed in pure and fragrant dew;
When we gaze with glad thanksgiving
On the world that he created,
And our vows of love renew,—
Watch!
Think ye on the heavenly warning,
That it may be in the morning
He will come.

SELECTIONS.

The Contrast of the Ages.

Every attentive reader of the Bible must have noticed that the characteristics of the present age are wholly different from those of the age to come. It would be a pleasure to write at length on this inviting subject, but it is not necessary. The mere mention of the fact will spur the reader's memory in search of many a passage where the "now" and "then" of mankind are set in vivid contrast by the inspired writers. And we preface the few remarks that follow with an argument which should have weight with intelligent men. It is simply this: If the writers of the Bible have described the present æon so exactly, dwelling upon its painful experiences with a graphic minuteness which every one feels to be correct, surely, the descriptions they give of the æon after the return of Christ deserve our grateful confidence. If they have spoken to our hearts and minds about the time that now is with perfect correctness, as every one must admit, let us gladly accept their glowing pictures of the time that is to be as evidence of our Father's determination that his children shall not always be in storm and darkness, but that calm and sunshine await them at the coming of their Lord.

For, be it remembered as essential to the validity of this argument, the writers under notice do not merely admit the fact of painful experiences; it requires no inspiration to do that; but they give the divine reason why men are subjected to these trials, a thing they could not have done without the authority of God. It follows, therefore, that their revelations of the future are absolutely true. The scenes they describe will be seen in all their exquisite beauty by eyes that will never become dull with headache or dim with age. The promises they make, under divine inspiration, will all be realized as facts in the actual experience of the sons of God, in the life incorruptible. And their predictions of the hallowed joys of the royal family of heaven—the brethren and sisters of the Lord Jesus—will be fulfilled both as a necessity of the Father's faithfulness, and as a fruit of his love.

It is simply impossible that the present dispensation closes the dealings of God with the world. Our profound regard for his character, even if we had no clear revelation on the subject, makes the contrary supposition an offense to the intellect and a burden to the heart. There must be an "age to come"—not in some fancy world of ghosts, concerning which the pulpit has talked nonsense, for centuries, but—in this world, man's—Christ's—God's world, the material center of the universe, upon and in relation to which the legislative and gracious acts of the Supreme Ruler have all taken place. We must no longer be sent among "the infinities" to find a foothold, where foothold there is none, for the solution of theological perplexities; but must gladly accept the fact that the future "habitable world" is here beneath the sun that to-day passes over us in his circuit, and not "above the skies;" here, where our Lord was born, lived, taught, suffered, died; here where his followers have borne their heavy burdens, and their brave testimony for his name's sake. The locality of the nobleman's kingdom is not in a far country, but in the land of his birth; and the righteous are to inherit the earth, and to have rest when the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven. Tears and tribulation, sorrow and affliction are things with which God's chosen ones are familiar; but the time comes when this glorious vision shall become a fact:

"And I saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of the throne, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, their God, and shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

But there is an intermediate age between the present and that to which this apocalyptic scene belongs—an intermediate age, the beginning of which is probably very near; and it may help to shade our eyes from the brilliance of John's seraphic paragraph if we look to that of Isaiah:

"And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots. And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears. But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked; and righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox; and the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den; they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

The wondrous beauty of this passage has arrested the attention even of the most prosaic reader, and to those who can appreciate the lofty flight of inspired song it is a gem of rarest lustre. The prophet-bard was on eagle wing when he dared thus to speak of things which, so far as time is concerned, were many centuries in the distance, and which, so far as the facts are concerned, are contrary to all human experience. But we have to do here with the supernatural, and that is a sufficient answer to every argument drawn from the natural habits of the wolf, the leopard, the lion, and the asp. When God interferes, difficulties vanish; and every one must at least admit the splendor of the conception that when the disloyalty of man to God comes to an end, the disloyalty of beast and reptile to man shall also cease. But this is precisely what our poet sings. When the earth is full of the knowledge of the Lord, the shepherd need not fold his flock, for fear of the wolf, and the mother need not apprehend danger to her child, though it put its little hand in an adder's nest. Beautiful prophecy! Happy times when it shall be fulfilled!

But stop! We must look straight in the face of a thought that visits us here. Have we not all made a mistake regarding the men who shall live in those happy, peaceful, prosperous millennial days? Our troubles in this age annoy us greatly; we are no sooner out of one grief than we are plunged headlong into another; and each succeeding affliction has peculiarities which make it look worse than all its predecessors. And so we think that the dwellers beneath the light of the New Jerusalem—the star of the King, of which the star seen by the orient sages was the type—must be highly privileged persons. And so indeed they will be—privileged almost beyond what our imaginations can realize; men with hardly anything to trouble them, enjoying a perpetual holiday under the blessed government of the ever blessed King. No war, pestilence, or famine; no destructive tempests, earthquakes, or tidal waves, furious elemental battles mingling earth and sky, and caring no more for human life than a whirlwind does for a straw. A fruitful earth, a smiling heaven, a healthy, long-lived people—all the wretched features of our present fight with poverty, filth, disease, vice, crime, death, and the devil seeming to the men of these halcyon years an incredible myth of the olden time, or at least, an exaggerated account of the mismanagement and misgovernment of their very stupid ancestors.

Yes, you say, would that our lot had been cast in the millennium, and not in this age of distressing conflict with every kind of evil! We die daily, and life is often a burden almost too heavy to bear. Our faith is so severely tested at times, that we are driven to the verge of despair, and tempted to think that we cannot be Christians at all, and that God does not really care for us.

Well, now, had our birth—yours and mine, brother—been postponed until the millennium, it would have been a very comfortable thing for us, certainly! But are you quite sure that your wish is a wise one? May there not be an unsuspected current of selfishness running through it, which blinds you to the privileges of the present age? Recollect, that God is making his heroes now; that the battle-field is the school in which he is training his mighty men of the future; that tribulation is the avenue to the kingdom; and that fidelity to the absent King will get the prize when he returns. The grandest promises of honor and reward are to him that overcometh; but what will the men of the millennial world have to overcome? That they will be good and loyal and righteous we have no doubt; but we really do not see that they deserve very fervent thanks for these virtues when everything goes smoothly with them, and when the devil, shut up in prison, will not have it in his power to tempt them. But loyalty amidst fierce opposition, godliness in the midst of the ungodly, and unwavering confidence in God whilst the fell assaults of the malignant adversary are beating against the heart of the believer, are very different things. It is the men who come out of great tribulation whose white robes attract the attention of the universe. It is the victors who fought the battles of the Lord in his absence who are to shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

The contrast of the ages is a text for a volume. We merely suggest it for the meditation and consolation of the true followers of Christ. The old serpent is full of malice against them, because of their friendship with Him destined Destroyer, and they must not be taken by surprise if he sometimes plunges them into deep grief. His time is coming, and so is theirs—his for everlasting destruction, theirs for eternal joy!—Wm. Leask, D. D., Editor Rainbow.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution: — Thanks for the copies of your paper, which I duly received. Glad to see so many earnest men witnessing so ably for "the faith once delivered to the saints." Particularly am I glad to see Benjamin Wilson writing again, and writing so well. I was sometimes afraid his often and heavy trials would render him spiritless and powerless. Thanks be to God that it is not so. The fact of his being the only one of your staff I have ever seen, along with other considerations, leads me to mention his name thus specially.

Thanks, also, for your invitation to write an occasional article for THE RESTITUTION. I would gladly do so if I could; but the little leisure I have after being engaged fifty-four hours a week is already fully occupied, in various ways. All I can say in the circumstances is, that you are quite at liberty to reprint or publish any papers of mine you find printed here.

On the present occasion, as I am writing at any rate, I shall try to say something regarding matters in this country which may have an interest to some of your readers; and shall just begin here:

On the 17th of March the church meeting in Union Hall, of which I am a member, celebrated its twenty-fifth birthday. On the 20th of March, 1853, fifteen brethren and sisters, brought together from different communities, after having for the space of three months considered the Scriptural constitution of a Christian church, agreed to form themselves into such a church, for the worship of God, mutual edification and maintenance of the truth; and accordingly so met on the next Sunday, when they found their number increased to twenty-three.

Many changes have taken place in our membership since then. The brown locks have grown scanty and grey; the children have become men and women, some of them having children of their own. Of the thirty-seven whose names were put on the roll during our first congregational year, only nine are on it now, and fourteen have fallen asleep. From our little community numbers, in the course of these twenty-five years, have gone to distant lands—thus South America, the United States, Canada, New Zealand, and Australia contain some who made the good confession amongst us.

In the year '62 we passed through a severe ordeal, no fewer than thirty of our members, after some stormy scenes, having seceded; other ten at intervals during the next four years joined themselves to the seceders. The fact of so many dear brethren and sisters thus departing was truly distressing; none the less so that we all continued to hold the belief in the Kingdom of God and the things concerning our Lord Jesus Christ. I shall not say more on this matter than that those who left us, subsequently took a separate standing and adopted a distinctive appellation—Christadelphians. With the exception of the interrup. tion just mentioned, we have enjoyed immunity from strifes, and been at peace amongst ourselves.

Changes and modifications in the order of our proceedings have from time to time taken place; but the basis of our fellowship has remained the same as when we began our congregational career. The accompanying handbill will show you what that is:

THE THINGS MOST SURELY BELIEVED AMONG US.

The one God—the Almighty Creator of all—will establish a Kingdom upon earth, which shall destroy and supersede all other kingdoms; and shall be universal in extent, and everlasting in duration. Dan. ii. 44, 45.

This divine, universal, and eternal kingdom shall be given to Jesus, the Messiah, the Son of the living God; and be exercised by him as the absolute monarch of all the earth. Ps. ii. 7, 8; Acts xvii. 31; Rev. xi. 15; Dan. vii. 13, 14.

The throne of this divine administration shall be established on Mount Zion, and the city of Jerusalem shall become the metropolis of the world. Ps. ii. 6; ex. 1, 2; Micah iv. 1, 2, 8; Isa. lx. 2.

The twelve tribes of Israel, now scattered abroad throughout the world, shall be gathered again and placed by God in the territory promised to Abraham; and thus gathered and established, they shall be made the chief nation in the kingdom of God. Jer. xxiii. 3; Ezek. xxxvii. 21 24; Isa. lxi. 4, 5.

The throne of the Lord, to be established on Mount Zion, is "the throne of David," announced by the angel of the Lord to Mary, as the inheritance of her son Jesus. Luke i. 30-33; Isa. ix. 6, 7.

It is in consequence of his being anointed for the throne of David that Jesus is termed "the Messiah," or "Christ." Matt. ii. 1-5; John i. 35-49.

The humiliation, suffering, and death of the Messiah were appointed by his Father to be a sacrifice for sin, and to perfect him for being the Savior and High Priest of the human race. Luke xxiv. 25-27, 46, 47; Heb. ii. 10, 14, 18.

The race of man is absolutely mortal by nature, and, in consequence of sin, under the sentence of death; but God, in his great love, has provided that those who believe in the Christ, the Son of the living God, shall live for ever. Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4; Rom. vi. 23; John iii. 1-15; xx. 31.

In order to the obtaining of this salvation, God requires of those who thus believe in his Son, that they be immersed in water, into Christ, and submit to him in all things as their Lord. Mark xvi. 15, 16; Acts. ii. 36-38; Phil. ii. 9-11.

All who thus believe in Jesus as Lord and Christ, and are immersed into his name, are accounted by God as the seed of Abraham, to whom the promises were made, and are joint heirs with him of his eternal kingdom and glory. Gal. iii. 26-29; Rom. viii. 17; Rev. iii. 21.

God bestows these favors on believers, on account of the death of his Son, Jesus the Christ. John iii. 14,16; Gal. iii. 13, 14; Eph. ii. 11-13.

The resurrection and glorification of the faithful, and the establishment of the kingdom of God, take place at the second coming of the Lord; and at his appearing and kingdom he shall judge the quick and the dead. 1 Cor. xv. 23, 50-54; 1 Thess. iv. 15-17; Matt. xxv. 31; 2 Tim. iv. 1; 2 Cor. v. 10.

The return of the Lord from heaven should be constantly expected and waited for, by the faithful in Christ Jesus. Matt. xxv. 13; 1 Cor. i. 7; 1 Thess. i. 9, 10.

All these declarations regarding the kingdom of God, and his Son Jesus the Christ, are embraced in "the gospel," or glad tidings, announced to Abraham, and preached by the Apostles of our Lord among all nations, to be believed and obeyed for salvation. Gal. iii. 8; Matt. xxiv. 14; Acts viii. 12; xxviii. 30, 31.

Though continuing to meet regularly on the first day of the week, as a church, no special effort was made by us for outdoor the end of the public, till the year 1861, when we changed our place of meeting for one more convenient, for giving public lectures, and since then the Sunday evenings from November to March have been so used.

We are, however, very unpopular; and Edinburgh, of all places, is perhaps the least inclined to move out of the beaten paths, in regard to articles of faith.

Our numbers have also often been reduced by emigration to foreign parts. Still we have always had a goodly company. At present eighty-six names are on the roll.

Passing from home matters, I may refer to the great stir that has been made in the south part of the island lately, during the last ten years, regarding the question of future punishment. The doctrine of life in Christ is no longer confined to those obscure "nobodies" who were wont to be regarded as little better than infidels. Ministers of high standing, and literary attainments, as you very well know, have spoken out on this important theme, and gained a hearing, without losing the respect of their associates. Yea, their voice has gone forth to your own country; and R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, is, by request, bearing witness in a series of letters to the New York Christian Union.

However much we may have to remain apart from these men, in the way of fellowship, I, at least, am thankful for their service as fellow-workers in the field of testimony for God's truth; and am encouraged and strengthened by their efforts.

A very encouraging fact in connection with the spread of the ancient faith, is the success which it has recently met at Lincoln. Very likely you have heard of Geo. A. Brown, author of "Forgotten Themes," who used to be an earnest and effective preacher among the Adventists in America. During the last eight years he has paid three visits to this country, trying to get a hearing for the truth. In the first two occasions he failed, but on his third visit he was astonished to find the people anxious to listen. The Baptist church, meeting in Mint Lane Chapel, Lincoln, invited him to be their pastor, and "Now," he says, "I find myself preaching the gospel from a Baptist pulpit, with full liberty to teach all I believe." Upwards of a hundred have believed, been baptized, and added to the church in the course of thirteen months; and several of the company are preaching the gospel in the surrounding country.

Besides, Mr. Brown has started a monthly quarto of eight pages—The Bible Standard. Its avowed programme is: "Devoted to the exposition of Biblical truth, especially the doctrine of conditional immortality, the literal resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of the wicked, the signs of the times, the second coming of Christ, and His personal reign on the earth." Two thousand copies are circulated monthly.

I was pleased to find, on enquiry, that G. A. Brown is also at one with us regarding the national restoration of the people of Israel, a truth to which the Adventists of America have, generally, been opposed.

Now, dear brother, my epistle must close; if its contents afford interest to any of your readers, I shall be glad; and if it fall short of that, at least no harm will have been done.

Wishing you and your associates all blessings and success, I remain, in the hope of life eternal, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ,

Your Brother in the Lord,
W. LAING.

Everlasting Punishment.

There is much being preached and written on future punishment and hell. Orthodoxy seems disturbed on this great Bible subject. The ministers of most all our pulpits are preaching either for or against endless woe, while the secular and religious papers are discussing the question. By many it is contended that the Bible reads, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal," and we must take the Bible as it reads, without regard to human reasoning.

Well, admit the rule that we must believe what the revealed Word teaches in its true grammatical construction, whether we can fully understand it or not. The question then recurs, Now what does it read? It reads, "everlasting punishment;" and this will be of the same duration as eternal life, because it is the same word (aionion) that describes them both. But is not the punishment the opposite of eternal life? That would be eternal death; and we are told that "The wages of sin is death," while "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

It is assumed that everlasting punishment is endless misery. The Bible declares that the disobedient shall be punished with everlasting destruction, and not endless woe.

Against this Bible teaching it is urged, on the one hand, that eternal death would be a small calamity, and a feeble motive to deter from sin; on the other hand, that it would be worse than eternal life in hell. But the incorrigible sinner is not offered his choice between these evils. The path of the just leads to eternal life; the broad way, to destruction.

He who seeks for immortality by patient continuance in well doing, will put it on at the resurrection of the just, and thus live forever by virtue of an immortal body. The wicked are never promised immortality or eternal life in any place or circumstance. Consequently, they may have their part in a lake of fire, and be literally "burned up, root and branch." E. HOYT.

BREVITIES.

The Czar has ameliorated the condition of the Jews in his dominions on account of the services they have rendered to the army. Foreign Jews trading in Russia are now allowed to become merchants of the first guild, acquiring all the rights of native traders.

From the reign of Edward the Confessor to the reign of George I. a power of healing disease by "touch" was claimed among the sovereigns of England. George I. made no pretensions to this miraculous gift, and it has never been claimed by his successors. James I. was not supposed to possess this royal virtue while King of Scotland, but the power is said to have come to Him immediately after his accession to the throne of England.

It was long supposed that the brackishness of Salt River, in Arizona, was caused by the river running over a bed of salt somewhere along its course. Its head in the White Mountains is within fifty miles of where it empties into the river Gila. Fifty miles from its junction with the Gila there comes into it a stream of water that is intensely salt. This stream pours out of the side of a large mountain, and is from twenty to thirty feet deep. It is very rapid, and pours into the Salt River a great volume of water. It is supposed that the interior of the mountain out of which it flows is largely composed of rock salt.

A Peruvian newspaper, the Boletin, says that extraordinary phenomena have been observed in connection with the "Corpuna" volcano in the province of Castilla, which have caused great alarm among the population. The immense banks of snow which have crowned its summit since time immemorial, have suddenly melted away with such rapidity as to cause great torrents to rush down the mountain sides, washing out immense quantities of stones and earth. The river below, being unable to contain the great body of water so suddenly added to it, overflowed its banks, causing great damage and distress. A great chasm or lateral crater next opened one side, throwing out volumes of smoke and steam, as well as tongues of flame, which were distinctly visible at night, accompanied with loud subterranean rumblings. It has never been supposed that the Corpuna was or could be a volcano, and there is no tradition that it was ever in a state of eruption. Nor within the memory of man has its crown of snow ever been absent. The people are in a state of helpless terror, not knowing what instant an earthquake may destroy, or an eruption overwhelm them.

Under the heading "Cleopatra's Needle a Witness to Divine Truth," the Rev. J. W. Bardsley contributes an interesting letter to the London Record. Mr. Bardsley says there are two distinct references to the obelisks of Heliopolis in the Word of God, and so to Cleopatra's Needle. In Jeremiah 43 : 13, we read, "He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh, that is the land of Egypt." The word Bethshemesh (House of the Sun) is the Hebrew name of the Greek Heliopolis and of the Scripture and Coptic "On." The word "images" is translated in the marginal reading "statues, or standing images." The Hebrew word is mazzeboth, the singular form of which, mazzebah, occurs in Isaiah 19 : 19. Mr. Bardsley adds: "It must be a fact of great interest to every devout mind that one obelisk out of the three pairs should remain in situ to point out the original position of the sun-god Ra, and to speak to the complete demolition of the 'house of the gods,' and that a second should stand in the metropolis of the Papacy, a third in the metropolis of Islamism, and a fourth, the greatest, although the most dilatory of these travellers, should in a time of such abounding scepticism, take its abode in the metropolis of Protestantism, and be a silent reminder of the fulfillment of the prophetic word."—*N. TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the New Readers of The Restitution.

PAUL'S DESIRE TO DEPART AND BE WITH CHRIST.

My Dear Friends:—In my last communication to you, I endeavored to show that the parable of the rich man and Lazarus is a parable; that the death of those men was so unlike the death of other men, that it cannot fitly represent the state of those who have died so as not to live. The results of the two kinds of deaths cannot be the same.

I will now proceed to show that Paul's desire to depart and be with Christ, had no reference to his condition between death and the resurrection, or to the salvation of his soul separate from his body. He does not express a desire that his soul might depart and be with Christ while his body is dead. Paul believed in the consecration and salvation of the whole man, "soul, body and spirit." He does not say anywhere in his writings anything about his soul being saved separate from his body. He says, "For I am in a strait betwixt two (things), to live and to die." To live would be more needful to the church, to die would be gain to him. Yet which to choose he did not know. But he said, "I have a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better than either to live or to die." He wanted to be with Christ. He was in no strait on this point. His mind was fully made up, that it was far better to be with Christ, than to continue in the flesh, or to die. Do the words depart and be with Christ, mean the same as to die and be with Christ? The word, depart, in this passage, is from the same word that is rendered return in Luke xii. 36, "And ye like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding." The Diaglott renders it thus, "I am indeed hard pressed by the two things, (I have an earnest desire for the returning and being with Christ, which is very much to be preferred.")

Then, to depart and be with Christ may not mean to die and be with him.

Paul was in a strait between two things, life and death. He did not know which to choose. But there was another thing, the coming of the Lord, and being with him at that time, concerning which he was not in a strait. He had no hesitation on this point, but very much preferred it.

Now, if Paul wanted to say that he desired to die, that his soul might go and be with Christ while his body is dead, he could have said it, but he did not say it in this passage. If that is what he wanted to say, he would have been very likely to say it out of the abundance of his heart in some other passage. But we find nothing like it in any of his writings. If he taught it anywhere, it was in this passage, and yet he did not say anything about it here. What he said elsewhere of his hope favors the rendering given in the Diaglott of this passage. Paul very earnestly desired the coming of the Lord that he (not his soul merely) but he, himself, might be with him. With this agree very many other passages. He nowhere expresses the hope that his soul may be saved separate from his body. But he does say, "For in this tabernacle we groan, earnestly desiring not to be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

He does not desire the condition between death and the resurrection, but he earnestly desires that mortality might be swallowed up of life, that this mortal might put on immortality, that his hope might be consummated at the coming of the Lord by a resurrection from the dead. The salvation for which he hoped was not the salvation of his soul, but the resurrection of his body.

He does say, "The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge will give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them, also, that love his appearing." Paul hoped for his reward, not when he died, but when the Lord should come in his kingdom, not for his soul, but for his body when he should be raised from the dead. He did say, that, "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Not when we die, but when he shall appear. Not when our life is committed to Christ, but when it is received back from him at his coming. Not the salvation of our souls, while our bodies are dead, but the salvation of our bodies, when they shall be made alive again at his coming.

He did say, that, "When the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, the dead in Christ will be raised first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. And so shall we ever be with the Lord." In this passage he expresses his hope, not that his soul will be saved while his body is dead, but that his body will be saved when it is made alive at the coming of the Lord. Again, he says, that, "Unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Here again Paul's hope is placed at the second coming of the Lord.

He says, that, "When the Lord comes from heaven, he will change our vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body." And that for this, "we, which have the first fruits of the spirit, do groan, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body." Here we have his hope expressed again. Not that his soul will be saved while his body is dead, but that his body will be saved when it is redeemed from death, and fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. He further says, that, if this resurrection of the body does not take place, then there is no salvation, and those that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

Paul says all of this, and much more, about the salvation of the body, but he nowhere expresses the hope that his soul will be with Christ while his body is dead. Paul prayed for the whole spirit, and soul, and body. His hope was for the whole man, and not for a part of the man. Now, will you allow me to ask you in all candor:

1. In view of what Paul did not say, do you believe that he meant to teach that he expected when his body died, that his soul would go to be with Christ?

2. In view of what he did say, do you believe that Paul had any other hope than the resurrection of his body, at the coming of the Lord?

3. Did he teach that a part of a man would be saved, while a part of the same man is lost?

4. Did he teach that the soul could be with Christ, while the body is dead without saying anything about it?

With these suggestions and inquiries, I submit the subject to your patient and candid consideration.

"The Object and Manner of our Lord's Return," by C. T. Russel, Noticed by J. B. Cook.

This pamphlet has been circulated directly and indirectly. It has reached me with The Herald of the Morning, its guide and associate in doctrine. The two distinctive views they set forth, are:

1. That the Lord's second coming and "the first resurrection" did somehow begin so as to accommodate and justify the editor's "set time," all along for years! That the actual, incipient, stages of the second advent and resurrection did begin some months (more or less) before even The Herald of the Morning began to understand it all! But when it became awake to such latent, mysterious matter, it moved cautiously in the matter, and said it softly and covertly. However, converts came in with funds, and so the notion has gone as on the wings of an oracular herald of the olden time.

A welcome dream in the line of seeming charity, and personal and party pride may go the world over, while truth meets resistance from the start.

The incipient, preparatory stages of the second advent and resurrection, and judgment did not begin as they dream. They at least, take in the first French revolution, 1260 years after Justinian, and its consequences that are still unfolding in the Roman world. Nay, more, they take in the first advent and the resurrection of Christ, "for he is the first fruits" of the resurrection. Their view is altogether too narrow and too personal to be true. Furthermore, the show of proof set forth is utterly fallacious. It confounds the payment of a note, with the getting of the funds beforehand, a journey with its foregoing arrangements, or the man's marriage with his preparatory bridal wooing. No, no; their notion is altogether delusive and perilous. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump," the dead must rise and the living be changed! 1 Cor. xv. 52; 1 Thess. iv. 17.

On this ground it is obvious, that if the editor takes several years to wink, he has so much of fact in his favor! But if not, and that "moment"—that "twinkling"—is truthfully placed by them in the past; then, by their own showing they have been left out. For then the resurrection has passed without taking them!

To closand crown this climax of this error, it is certain that the obscurity, invisibility and uncertainty (by which they would beguile us into their imaginary views of the resurrection) may have begun before they were born, as well as at his variable "set time;" and it may also extend, indefinitely, into the future! He has cut his own cable, gone adrift, and has no compass or pilot to his desired haven. This applies to all taking such position.

The entire view is but as a phantom of an excited brain. Every sane mind must know that the resurrection cannot transpire "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and yet be like the boy's birth-place, "all along shore." "Let no man deceive you with vain words." Matt. xxiv. 4; Eph. v. 6. Each point in their peculiar view may be answered in this Scriptural, positive, and matter-of-fact way.

2. Of the mass of the dead, inferred from Rom. v., the author says: "They rise simply to have, during the millennial age, what we have had during our lifetime, viz: To hear of the love of God, and the death of Christ for them; and to have an opportunity to accept of him." p. 22, 23.

This, like each one of their peculiar views, is an inference of their own. It omits all that God has spoken of that "first resurrection," Rev. xx., and of the millennial reign!

(a) Satan is said to "be bound that he should deceive the nations no more till the 1000 years are fulfilled."

(b) "The rest of the dead lived not again till the 1000 years were finished."

(c) Those then living "nations" not deceived by Satan through that period, are all that are named, aside from those who reign as "kings and priests with Christ."

(d) He is so "carried away with his wind of doctrine" that he forgets, ignores or omits, all of God's truth, as to those "who, when they knew God, glorified him not as God." Rom. i. 21.

(e) That "this is the condemnation that light has come into the world and men hate the light and will not come to the light," etc. John iii. 19-21.

(f) That, as "they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them up to their own way," and so, are "condemned already."

(g) That God is of one mind and does not re-open their case like a human judicature, on the ground of mistake or a wrong judgment. No, indeed.

(h) That God's ways are equal as to those having one, two, or ten talents—those without law, under law, or in the light of the gospel. Rom. ii. 12-16; John xii. 35, 36.

"Hear ye the word of God." When the net was brought to shore they "gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away." Now, gather them from their doom if it be becoming in you! Matt. xiii. 47, 48. So easy it is to reply to all their positions.

If there were any appropriate text that they could quote, they are too deeply interested to omit it. But, as it is, their theory is a mere human make up. The general texts they quote do not teach their inferences from them; nor can they be made to seem to so teach, but by making the whole Bible book contradictory and unreliable.

True, the author says, "that the God of all the earth will do right." For this and like averments, I should be more thankful, were it not that he proceeds to suggest and make a clash and difficulty. p. 10. But no, there is no clashing except to unbelief. You should not make a cob-house, like a child, only to kick it over. For God has spoken. Now, you know as well as I, that he will not do right, except as he has spoken truth, makes it good. He will execute his revealed will as to "the wages of sin—death," etc. Nor will he allow you to make an underground—"other way"—to falsify it! except as he, in his forbearance, allows you to "add to—take from—make void"—his word, under the penalty of so doing! Rev. xxii. 18, 19. Thus he has done hitherto from Adam to Israel! Thus, he says he will do to apostates and the apostasy!

But, while I write plainly and to save space, pointedly, I assure these brethren that I feel very tender toward all who bear the blessed name, especially those who even seem to cherish the blessed hope. Hence, my present humble effort is made to arrest attention to the manner in which the whole theory was brought out, the assumptions and inferences by which it has been attempted to be sustained, and the fact that all its advocates suppress the thousand fold assertions of the plain word of God to the contrary! Take a specimen, "surely die—be destroyed—consumed—into smoke shall they consume away—be burned up root and branch—be as though they had not been—the filthy, filthy still—punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power!"

Now, it seems as blind as it is bold, as irreverent as it is unbelieving, to adopt a theory that would even imply a contradiction to, or disregard of such wide range of God's truth. All who have hitherto acted on this principle, and so have presumed that they could do it with impunity, have left a record from which we should all recoil.

"The better way" to the "better resurrection" is "by faith," "by humbling ourselves under the mighty hand of God, that we may be exalted in due time."

The general theory of H. Dunn was brought to me as "the unpreached gospel!" Yes, I said, on reading, the resurrection of the unjustified to "a second chance," or a future "chance, or other opportunity," was never preached by authority from God. It was broached haltingly and uncandidly, and as no God-fearing man ever should preach God's truth. But, though it came under my own observation, its history may never be written. However, "the unpreached gospel," of H. Dunn, and echoed by these authors, is "another gospel." Note its anathema. Gal. i. 6-9. His faith is to "draw back" from God's penalty against the ungodly. Its great effort is to "add to" enough to make up a plausible theory, "and what will ye do in the end thereof." Jer. v. 31. Please read and reflect.

It is in deep sorrow for them that I write. Brother R. is spending his money for that which is not bread, and the brethren are scattered by "uncertain" sounds, yet I rejoice. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." Amen.

"The half has not been told" to these brethren, but adieu.

Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator, and holds him to his throne. If that tie is sundered, or broken, he floats away a worthless atom in the universe—its proper attractions all gone, its destiny thwarted, and its whole future nothing but darkness, desolation and death.

SELECTIONS.

David's Training.

Why were such oceans of feeling poured into David's soul, such true and graceful utterance of poetry infused into his lips, and such skill of music seated in his right hand! Such oceans of feeling did God infuse into his soul, and such utterance of poetry he placed between his lips, and such skilful music he seated in his right hand, in order that he might conceive forms of feeling for all saints, and create an everlasting psalmody, and hand down an organ for expressing the melody of the renewed soul. The Lord did not intend that his Church should be without a rule for uttering its gladness and its glory, its lamentations and its grief; and to bring such a rule and institute into being, he raised up his servant David, as formerly he raised up Moses to give to the Church an institute of Law. And to that end he led him the round of all human conditions, that he might catch the spirit proper to every one, and utter it according to truth; he allowed him not to curtail his being by treading the round of one function, but by every variety of functions he cultivated his whole being, and filled his soul with wisdom and feeling. He found him objects for every affection, that the affection might not slumber and die. He brought him up in the sheep-pastures, that the groundwork of his character might be laid among the most simple and universal forms of feeling. He took him to the camp and made him a conqueror, that he might be filled with nobleness of soul and ideas of glory. He placed him in the palace, that he might be filled with ideas of sovereign might and majesty. He carried him to the wilderness, and placed him in solitudes, that his soul might dwell alone in the sublime conceptions of God and his mighty works; and he kept him there for long years, with only one step between him and death, that he might be well schooled to trust and depend upon the Providence of God. And in none of these various conditions and avocations of life did he take away from him his Holy Spirit. His trials were but the tuning of the instrument with which the Spirit might express the various melodies which he designed to utter by him for the consolation and edification of spiritual men. John the Baptist, being to be used for rough work, was trained in the rough desert; Paul, being to be used for contentious and learned work, was trained at Gamaliel's feet; Daniel, being to be used for judgment and revelation, was trained in the wisdom of the East; Joseph being to be used as a providence to Egypt and his father's house, was trained in the hardest school of providence; and every one hath been disciplined by the providence of God, as well as furnished in the fountains of his being for that particular work for which the Spirit of God designed him. Therefore, David had that brilliant galaxy of natural gifts, that rich and varied education, in order to fit him for executing the high office to which he was called by the Spirit, of giving to the church those universal forms of spiritual feeling, whereof we have been endeavoring to set forth the excellent application. And, though we neither excuse his acts of wickedness, nor impute them to the temptation of God, who cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth any man, we will also add that by his loss the church hath gained, and that out of the evil of his ways much good hath been made to arise; and that if he had not passed through every valley of humiliation, and stumbled upon the dark mountains, we should not have had a language for the souls of the penitent, or an expression for the dark troubles which compass the soul that feareth to be deserted by its God. So much for the fitness of the psalmist to have been made the organ of spiritual feeling unto the church.—Edward Irving in Rainbow.

An article in a German magazine on the state of Japan states that 1,800,000 children are receiving instruction on the European principle in 29,000 schools. Newspapers in the vernacular are beginning to circulate largely. The Osaka Nippoo has a circulation of 10,000 a day. It is announced that the Japanese Government intend taking the censorship of papers published in a foreign language into their own hands, instead of leaving them as hitherto under the control of their respective consulates.

Submarine Earthquakes.

The past fifteen months have been fruitful of volcanic disturbance, scarcely any part of the earth having remained unvisited by these convercome phenomena on a more or less extensive scale; and the last month of 1877 and the first three months of the current year have been particularly productive of what Byron would call "young earthquakes." While this has been the case in those parts of the earth's surface which are inhabited, and where the phenomena can be noted, it is not to be expected that the much larger area which is covered by the sea should escape these visitations.

The appearance and disappearance of volcanic reefs and islands which are noted to have occurred from time to time are proofs that the vast unseen lands beneathe the sea are the scenes of volcanic disturbance; but it is very seldom that these occurrences are actually seen by the crews of vessels happening to pass at the exact time. The reports of two such coincidences have reached us from two far distant quarters at the same time. The master of the bark H. M'B. Park, which arrived at Cowes, Isle of Wight, some days ago, from Batavia, reports having seen several submarine volcanoes on January 20, at 7 a. m., in latitude 4 deg. and 20 minutes north, and longitude 21 degrees 45 minutes west, about 900 miles southwest of Sierra Leone. Large volumes of water were thrown about 100 feet in the air, and the whole sea in the neighborhood was in a state of violent commotion, with a strong undercurrent. The weather was calm, but with clouds and rain; sounds as of distant thunder accompanied the outburst.

The other report is from New Zealand. Captain Heinander, of the steamer Go-Ahead, while on a voyage from Gisborne to Auckland, reports having witnessed a curious phenomenon on the first of December last, between eight and nine in the evening, when about five miles from land off Open Bay. The sea a short distance ahead of the vessel was observed to be a mass of seething foam, traveling at a rapid rate toward the vessel. The course of the steamer was changed in order to avoid the disturbance, and though it cleared the outer edge of the agitated water, the influence was felt for some time, and the vessel pitched violently until long after the actual scene of the agitation was passed.

There is no doubt that the phenomenon was due to volcanic forces, a slight shock of earthquake having been felt at Gisborne on the preceding evening. When we consider that the observed effects of the volcanic forces on the habitable globe occur on an average once in three days, it is easy, with such examples before us, to imagine that an incessant discharge of the pent-up forces of the interior of the earth is going on, and that not a day, perhaps hardly an hour, passes without some disturbances occurring in some portion of the oceans and continents which the earth comprises.

The oldest of the white elephants, which, the Times of India says, was born in 1730, died in its temple of Bangkok in November last. Every one knows that this famous white elephant, before which a whole people bow the knee, is the emblem of the Kingdom of Siam. It is honored with the most beautiful presents, for the Indians, full of the idea of metamorphosis, still believe that so majestic an animal could be animated by only the spirit of a God or emperor. Each white elephant possesses its palace, a vessel of gold, and harness resplendent with jewels. Several mandarins are attached to its service, and feed it with cakes and sugar cane. The King of Siam is the only personage before whom it bows the knee, and a similar salutation is rendered it by the monarch. The deceased idol was accorded a magnificent funeral. A hundred Buddhist priests officiated at the ceremony. The three surviving white elephants, preceded by trumpets, and followed by an immense concourse of people, accompanied the funeral car to the bank of the Menam, where the King and his noble lords received the mortal remains, which were transported to the opposite bank for burial. A procession of thirty vessels figured at that curious ceremony. All the floating houses, ranged in double file on the Menam to the number of over 30,000, were adorned with flags and symbolical attributes.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. L. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 20, 1878.

WE had an appointment at quite a distance from home on Sunday, and so occupy but little space in the paper this week, having left enough copy from correspondence, selections, etc., to fill our columns.

THE Berlin Congress is still at work on the problem of solving the Eastern Question diplomatically, and the prospect at present is, that Russia will yield considerably to the pressure brought to bear upon her through the influence of Great Britain.

WITH the present number we are half way through the year 1878. We thank our kind friends for the sacrifice that many of them have made in behalf of THE RESTITUTION. We thank God our Heavenly Father, for all his mercies and implore his favor for the remainder of the year, and for all coming time.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Bible—The Theme at this time.

(The following paper was read at the Sunday school convention of what is termed in common parlance, as evangelical, or orthodox churches of Fond du Lac county, held at Brandon, Wis., May 1, 1878, by request of the president, J. N. Woodruff.)

The banner which the Christian unfurls should have inscribed on its folds—The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, i. e., in so far as being authoritative in matters of faith. All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16-17.

No creed, no influence separate from or independent of the word, is requisite for the thorough furniture of the man of God. We are entirely shut up to the Scriptures as our only creed; not that we should reject all other writings as helps to a right understanding of the word, such as a good concordance, but nothing as an authority except the word itself.

The Bible classes and the Sunday schools are the best institutions extant, (when properly conducted,) for the acquisition of that knowledge which is necessary for our growth in grace, for the proper development of our physical, mental and moral faculties, and the more thorough understanding of the relation we sustain to God as our creator, to Jesus Christ as our High Priest and our future king; also to the kingdom of which the saints are to be joint heirs with Him as their elder brother; also, to be joint rulers with him, having the honor of being kings and priests with Christ and reigning with him on the earth. Rev. v. 9-10., not in heaven or in the skies.

Certain rules are necessary for the right understanding of the Scriptures, and without these, we are cut loose from our moorings, and are adrift at sea without chart or compass. The Bible is self-interpreting, i. e., it is not dependent on the pope, bishop, or the modern clergy of whatever creed or sect.

Among the many rules which might be cited, I will notice only the following, viz: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." 1 Thess. v. 21.

Which things also we speak; not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the holy spirit teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual (or which is the same thing, Scripture with Scripture). (1 Cor. ii. 13.) Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me, said Christ.

The Bereans were commended for searching the Scriptures. Timothy's knowledge of the Scriptures was sufficient to "make him wise unto salvation."

What is thought to be the most complex, and requiring the most abstruse reasoning, can easily be ascertained by taking a reference Bible and a good concordance, and tracing the word or words through the entire volume bearing on the question or doctrine sought; (for words are only the signs of ideas in the Bible, as well as in other books) you will then have the desired knowledge on any given doctrine or question. If you wait to receive any other revelation than through the consecrated channel, the word, you will undoubtedly die without the required knowledge. It is the duty and province of those who expound the word, to rightly divide (or classify) it; to bring forth from the great storehouse of truth things both new and old; to ascertain what is the central idea in any given portion of the word; and this can be done only by close study, and not by the intervention of visions and dreams. God has spoken in these last days by his Son, to which we must now take heed; He does not now reveal his purpose through the medium of visions and dreams as in times past. See Heb. i. 1.

The gospel of the kingdom is now to be proclaimed throughout the habitable world to every creature, and salvation is predicted on the belief of the same, and the disbelief incurs damnation or condemnation. See Mark xvi. 15, 16. This was Christ's last commission to his apostles whom he had chosen. Before proceeding farther, we will enquire what is understood by the term gospel. As I am not acquainted with the Greek language from which it is derived, I will give Webster's definition; he says its Saxon import is God, or good spell, or good message. According to its scriptural import it is the good time coming—the good tidings—"the glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people." It includes in its ample fold the resurrection from the dead, (see 1 Cor. xv. 1) also the restoration of the kingdom to Israel.

The gospel was preached to Abraham saying in thee shall all nations be blessed. See Gal. iii. 6-9. And in what did this gospel which was preached to him consist? Turn to Gen. xii. 3-5. "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee, and in thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. So Abraham departed, as the Lord had commanded him, and Lot went with him; and Abraham was seventy and five years old when he departed from Haran; and they went forth to go unto the land of Canaan, and unto the land of Canaan they came."

The land of Palestine or Canaan was guaranteed to Abraham and not heaven above, or any other planet, but this land in which he sojourned. This land constituted the territory of the kingdom proper, and the dominion which will be subsequently added and be under the whole heaven (not above). See Dan. vii. 27. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him.

As the kingdom is promised to the little flock, (the saints,) we will now stop and inquire what are we to understand by the term kingdom? I answer it is a political (or it may be it combines both a political and ecclesiastical) organization, of which the Kingdom of Israel is an example; and in every instance recorded in the Bible, this kingdom, as it existed under the reign of David (2 Sam v. and vii.) and his successors, and the restoration of the kingdom under king David's greater Son—Christ. But some may raise the objection here, and say, it is a spiritual and not a temporal kingdom that Christ established at his first advent. But where in the sacred volume do we find a warrant for such an assumption? Grant that the kingdom is, or rather will be when set up, a spiritual kingdom; what then? Spiritual is not necessarily opposed to a literal kingdom, or a change in any of its necessary constituents. Almost every intelligent school boy of ten or twelve years old, could answer the questions: What is a kingdom, and what are its necessary constituents? He would say the first is territory; second, a king; third, a body of rulers (commonly called a cabinet); fourth, subjects; fifth, laws; sixth, a capital city from which the laws emanate. Jerusalem was the capital under David and his successors, until Zedekiah, the last king who reigned independently on David's throne. He was deposed for his wickedness, and the Lord said by the mouth of the prophet Ezekiel: "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 25-27.

The prophet Isaiah designates the person who is the rightful heir to David's throne and the kingdom over which he is to rule: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; he shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end. Upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with justice and judgment from henceforth forever more. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." We also find a parallel to this in Luke i. 30-33: "And the angel said unto her, fear not Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus (signifying savior). He shall be great and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Thus we see who is the rightful heir, and what was predicted concerning his future reign, and it is certain that Christ has never in the past occupied his father David's throne, and that he does not now occupy it, and that he is not now defacto king, but king defure, or in plain English, the prospective king, as we learn by his model prayer which he enjoined upon his followers to say, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," neither of which is an accomplished fact at the present. Hence it is a matter of faith and hope, for both these are necessarily reaching forward to something in the future. The Lord's prayer would become obsolete on the hypothesis that the kingdom is now set up, and that Christ is now a king defacto. All the covenants of promise—all the blessings promised the faithful are by, or through, the kingdom arrangement. Christ is now officiating as the antitypical high priest in the holy of holies, and we trust he will soon come out to bless his waiting people; this is the law of the type and antitype, and not "one jot or tittle of the law shall fail until all be fulfilled." From whatever standpoint we take, all seem to point to the soon coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven to give reward to his servants the prophets, to raise the righteous dead, and change the living, to establish his kingdom.

All the physical and moral signs which Christ and his Apostles said should take place just previous to this event, we see are thickening; and they speak in thunder tones to the rejectors of the glorious gospel which the Apostle Paul has said has brought Life and Immortality to light by the preaching of the same, and He (Christ) has also abolished death, the last great enemy of mankind; and Christ has also told his followers of witnessing the judgments on the ungodly, when appears "distress of nation with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring;" when fear is depicted on every countenance who sneered at the signs of his coming, saying "where is the promise of his coming?" no new phenomena have appeared; "all things continue as they were from the beginning." In the midst of all these judgments, and in view of the glory which is soon to be revealed, he encourages them to lift up their heads and rejoice that their redemption draws nigh.

What punishment does the rejector of this blessed gospel incur by thus rejecting? "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power—those who obey not the gospel—when he shall come to be glorified in his saints." 2 Thess i. 8-10.

The language of the Bible is replete with such expressions as the following, viz; die, death, destruction, burnt up, so that neither root nor branch is left. See Malachi iv. 1. "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Psa. xxxvii. 20, see whole Psalm.

The Bible is also full of expressions of a negative character, like the following—"Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God;" "not see life;" "be as though they had not been," and such like expressions, but not an intimation either expressed or implied of endless torture or misery through the untold cycles of eternity. All such expressions, are forced construction, and what is far worse, makes our Heavenly Father, who is a God of love, the greatest tyrant in the universe.

In order to be saved, and have a clear title deed (so to speak) of our inheritance in the land promised to the fathers, we must not only believe the gospel, but we must be baptized, the two are inseparable. We must obey as well as believe. But it will probably be asked, is baptism a saving ordinance? The Israelites were saved in figure in passing through the Red Sea, and the Apostle tells us that the "like figure doth now save us." It is not the putting away of filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience. If we disregard the figure which God has ordained, can we expect to be saved in fact? To say the ordinance is not essential is to throw contempt upon the spirit, the word. Let not man put asunder what God has joined together. For, says the Apostle, if we have been planted together in the likeness of his (Christ's) death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection. "Buried with Christ by baptism into his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all, why are they then baptized for the dead? showing conclusively that the whole question of our salvation, is predicted on the resurrection from the dead. Baptism is a lively figure of the same. The resurrection is the pivot on which the whole question turns, as will be seen by consulting 1 Cor. xv., Nebuchadnezzar's dream and Daniel's interpretation of the same, Dan. ii., and Daniel's vision, Dan. vii., the waning power and glory of the four kingdoms which precedes the fifth kingdom. This kingdom was inaugurated under David, called the kingdom of Israel; now this throne is overturned and will remain so until He come whose right it is to reign. This restoration all the prophets since the world began have predicted. Nebuchadnezzar could see no further than four; this was the boundary of his horizon, but Daniel saw the resplendent glory of the everlasting kingdom.

P. S. The friends in Eureka requested me to send to THE RESTITUTION office a copy of the address for publication, and as those friends are readers of THE RESTITUTION, I promised to do so, and therefore request its publication if you deem it worthy a place in your columns. If you will do so you will much oblige your brother in the one faith. I was treated with Christian respect by the convention. Such a paper would not have been tolerated ten years ago. A great change has of late taken place relative to the great question of the times, or the present truth.

Is there a Hell?

The above is the heading of an editorial in the New York Weekly Sun of December 12. The occasion which called out the article was, that the Rev. Mr. Merriam, Congregational minister, of Hartford, Conn., had rejected eternal punishment (torment). The editor makes this remark: If the honest opinions of Orthodox ministers generally were obtained, it is probable that it would be found that very many of them are exceedingly shaky regarding the doctrine of eternal punishment.

Every few weeks the secular press announces that some minister in the ranks of Orthodoxy has avowed his disbelief of the horrible doctrine, and his belief of something in its stead.

Where will this new departure end? It may go on until the article embodying the offensive doctrine shall be erased from every creed in Christendom, as it has been, I understand, from the creed of the English church. I am not very old, yet in the period of my memory the preaching upon this subject has undergone a great change. The first sermons I heard on this topic, about thirty years ago, made my young blood run cold, and a feeling of horror thrill through my whole being. I heard Benjamin and David E. Thomas, two of the five Welsh brothers, Baptist ministers, who were attracting large audiences in different parts of Ohio by their eloquence and deep earnestness. Holding the view entertained by Calvin, Edwards and Benson, their large descriptive faculties were employed to picture and embellish what to me seemed terrible enough under a sober description. They sought by every means in their power to impress the minds of their audience with the weight and meaning of the word "eternity."

After hearing these dreadful portrayals of the dominions of Pluto, I endeavored by the power of my own imagination to work up my feelings to such a pitch of dread and horror of the place as to drive me to the love of God and his service. It was of no avail for this purpose. I regret that I ever believed a doctrine so monstrous and so dishonoring to God; one that presents him in the light of a tyrant. But I found myself in it without a logical process, accepting it on the bare statement of clerical authority. Thousands and multiplied thousands have accepted it on the same ground, all the while thinking that the Bible affirms it in the most explicit terms, and also come to think that a belief of the doctrine by mankind generally is absolutely necessary to prevent the world from drifting from bad to worse, or to speedy ruin; that if the agonies of an endless hell did not hang like the sword of Damocles over the head of human society, vice and crime would prevail as the rule, and virtue be the exception.

Nor does the notion of the economy of eternal torture stop here. In the language of Edwards, "The destruction (misery he meant by the word) of the unfruitful is of use to give the saints a greater sense of their own happiness, and of God's grace to them. Every time they look upon the damned it will excite in them a lively and admiring sense of the grace of God in making them so to differ."

These inhuman and detestable sentiments merit the odium to which Theodore Parker held them up. The doctrine that God will hold in existence countless millions of sinful creatures, and torment them through endless ages, with the view to increasing the happiness of another class, or, according to another theory, to keep them from falling, involves God's character in the deepest dishonor the mind of man or angel can conceive. Good men everywhere begin to see it in this light. This is the cause of the excitement and agitation which prevail at present regarding future punishment. Orthodox churches are compelled to confront new views of this question within their sacred precincts. Creeds will not bind all.

JOHN L. WIRCE.

eeling at New Hope.

On Saturday evening, 15th, and Sunday and Sunday evening, 16th inst., I delivered four discourses at this place, five miles southwest of Paris, Ills. During this meeting, two noble souls—sister Elkins and Brother Wm. F. Young, both of whom were members of the Christian (Campbellite) church—scripturally put on the Christ in baptism. Much prejudice was removed during this meeting, as well as others, that I have occasionally held there for years. None of the brethren there are wealthy; most of them poor, and, therefore, unable to compensate evangelists for their labors. I have done all my preaching there without any compensation, and part of the time paying my own traveling expenses. Recently the brethren have footed these expenses.

Brother Wm. F. Young, a man of more than ordinary intelligence, has been investigating the Scriptures for years, and for months, relative to this movement, before he could make up his mind to sever his relations with his former brethren. He can and will, I think, be of great help to the church at Good Hope, for he can aid in teaching and building up the brethren and sisters. My love and sympathies and prayers are with him and for him, and with all the members of said church. May God protect them now and save them hereafter in his everlasting kingdom! Yours, in the faith,

SELECTIONS.

Spanish Persecutions.

An atrocious case of persecution has just taken place in Alcoy. A woman, a member of the Protestant congregation, was very ill, and desired the presence of her pastor, who came to see her frequently. The parish priest, hearing of her illness, insisted on coming, too, contrary to the positively expressed wish of herself and her family. Just before her death he came again with policemen, and in defiance of the protest of the family, administered to her extreme unction. The poor woman was too far gone to make any further protest, and soon died. The family invited their pastor, Mr. Ben Oliel, who is supported by the American Baptists, to conduct the funeral services, and the arrangements had been made for the ceremony, which was to take place on the following day; but at half-past ten o'clock at night of the day she died, the Lieutenant Alcalde and the Inspector of the police came with policemen, forcibly seized the body and carried it away. The family friends ran to give word to the pastor. He came quickly, and meeting them at the door, endeavored to prevent this high-handed robbery; but when they persisted, even using physical force, he protested in the presence of witnesses, and offered no further opposition. I should say that there was no contagious disease nor pretense of it. The woman died of congestion of the brain, and it was contrary to Spanish law for the body to be removed before the expiration of twenty-four hours. The family were summoned to court for having offered resistance to the authorities, and the pastor was sent to prison for ten days on the charge of having interfered with an act of worship of the Roman Catholic religion!

The body was quickly buried by the Catholics in the Catholic cemetery, although a local newspaper says that she died "in the diabolical arms of the evangelicals." This is a very brief resume of the facts as published in the Las. The case is still in the courts.

I presume you have already heard of the affair at Ixnatoraf, which awakened much interest and discussion throughout Spain. There the Alcalde (Mayor) and two priests came to the house of Senor Francisco Gutierrez, the leader of the Protestant congregation in the village, and in defiance of the protests of both the father and the mother, forcibly carried off their infant child and a daughter two years old, and baptized them in the Roman church. The case made such a scandal that the Government was compelled to publicly reprimand the Alcalde.

Our school teacher, a cultivated Christian young lady, who was educated in Switzerland, Dona Gracia Martinez de Castila, has just been stoned on a public square, while returning from school, by a crowd of some twenty boys, large and small, who followed her with showers of stones, shouting and yelling, "This is the Protestant; this is the heretic," etc. They followed her to the very door of our house. Though many saw what was going on, not a finger was raised in her defense.

The Creation.

The Greek Kristees (Creator) is found but once in the New Testament, 1 Pet. iv. 19, "As unto a faithful (Kristees) Creator." God the Lord is the great Creator of the universe. That which He creates is in the Greek called the ktisis, or creation. In this, generically, is included each thing, and each creature. The act of creation is the ktizo; "For thou [God] hast created all things." Rev. iv. 11, Once, in Rom. i. 25, Ktizo is rendered Creator.

Now what is the (ktisis) creation of Rom. viii. 22? We are told it groans it is in travail, is in pain. And we are also told it (this ktisis) shall be delivered into a sacred and holy liberty. Take notice that the word is used nineteen times in the original, that it is rendered creation six times, and creature thirteen times. But observe Rom. viii. 19-21 and 22, and Eph. vi. 15, in all places in which ktisis can be rendered creation and not at all violate the sense or mar the text; also add to these Heb, ix. 11, and 1 Pet. ii. 13, and we have certainly thirteen passages where the word means creation and not creature. Now in the classics ktizo, the verb, refers to things as well as men; to material cities and lands as well as their inhabitants. And according to Parkhurst, Robinson, Greenfield, and other lexicographers, ktisis denotes, first of all, creation, or created thing; and Liddell and Scott are of the same opinion; while pasee tee ktisis, in Mark xvi. 15 and Col. i. 23, are by the translators Dr. Murdock (in the Syriac New Testament), Wakefield, and Sawyer, rendered "in the whole creation." That created things, or the habitable world, is meant in the last passage just quoted must be conceded, or we put a lie at the tip of Paul's pen. For all men know that the gospel had not been preached to every human soul on earth in the short space of thirty years, from A. D. 34 to A. D. 64. Hence Murdock's version of Mark xvi. 15, "in the whole creation," and of Col. i. 23, "in all the creation beneath heaven," is much to be preferred. Place or territory, more than people, seems intended.

Thus the usus loquendi, or general usage of ktisis is creation, the created and habitable world; the earth certainly being meant, if not the solar universe. As Liddell and Scott have it, it is "the universe, a created thing." Now, then, in the masterly passage in Rom. viii. 19, 23, ktisis should be uniformerly rendered creation in each and every verse, as referring to the great globe we live on. "Creature," or the animate creation, is not the word nor the thought of the Apostle. He is writing of two things, or rather subjects; first the church, second the creation. Both are subject to vanity, or as the word signifies, "fleetingness." Both are involved in the bondage of corruption. Both lie under the original curse. Both partake of the evils of sin. Both groan. Both suffer. Both wait. Both have "hope." Both look for "deliverance." Both will have it. Both long for the redemption era, which is the resurrection from the dead. Both with outstretched neck and yearning cries yearn for the promised "glorious liberty." Here, then, we have two grand subjects, viz., the saints, and their inheritance. The curse for sin is two-fold, the glad redemption from sin is two-fold. Glad thought! Holy hope! Sweet prospect! All is not intrinsically lost. The regeneration (Matt. xix. 28) comes under the reign of Adam the II.

"Hope died not with earth's first-born sons six thousand years ago."

"For the creation was subjected to vanity, not by its own choice, but because of Him who subjected it, in the hope that also the creation itself would be emancipated from the bondage of corruption, into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God." (Syriac)

This view of Rom. viii. 19-23 was held and advanced by Chrysostom Theodoret, Erasmus, Grotius, Luther, Charnock, Benson, Owen, Wesley, Horne, Fuller, Rosenmuller, Platt, Scott, Hodge, Tholuck, Chalmers, Bonar and Cumming. O, happy day! Our ruined, storm-tossed, earthquake-riven, shattered planet shall one day take its place among the sister planets, restored, beautified and blest, a fit abode for the Bridegroom and the Bride. How sublime is the sacred announcement, how soul-inspiring the theme! Shall I be there? Will you, my reader, be there?—D. T. Taylor in World's Crisis.

POETRY.

The Rose of Sharon.

L. M. HUBBELL.

Oh, Rose of Sharon, bloom for me!
Thy beauties let these dull eyes see!
The thorns that pierced, on stems of thine
Ne'er grew, alas! those thorns were mine!
Mine, when in sins my hand would rise
To pierce the King of earth and skies—
To pierce that heart so kind and true,
That tho' my guilty soul it knew,
Yet gladly died that I might be,
Thro' that dark hour, from sin made free.

Sweet Rose of Sharon! Christ divine!
Oh, quickly come and make me thine!
Earth only charms us to destroy,
In thee alone is peace and joy.
Come in the clouds of heaven and claim
Those who are trusting in thy name,
Who thine appearing wait, and watch
The faintest gleam of dawn to catch.

Oh, Rose of Sharon, haste and come
To fill the earth with light and bloom!
One moment rapped to thy pure breast
Would be eternal joy and rest!
One look from those dear eyes would be Sure cure for all earth's misery.
Sweet Rose of sharon! haste and give
That look that bids the dying live!
Oh, that my longing, listening ear
May soon his coming footsteps hear!
And soon my enraptured vision see
The Rose of Sharon bloom for me!

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—With your permission, I would like to say a few words through THE RESTITUTION with reference to my dear mother, whose death was noticed in your paper of May 8th. I am aware that no high sounding obituary will make any difference to the dear sleeping one, but I am assured it will be a satisfaction to some of your readers, east and west, who have known her in this life, and I trust, will rejoice with her in a future life. She was born in Sheffield, a New England town, Feb. 8, 1791, and died May 5, 1878, at our home, in Monroe township, Kosciusko county, Ind., where she has resided at intervals, for the last fifteen years. She was converted among the Methodists in Sodus, Wayne county, N. Y., and from that time, until her death, (to use her own words), "she would never have turned back: for all the world." The soon-coming of the Lord was her theme and rejoicing from her conversion, and she desired, if it was the Lord's will, to live to see that blessed day. But God, who notices even the sparrow's fall, had ordered it otherwise, and we are left to mourn, though not without hope. She died as she lived, with a heart full of love and good will, for every creature. Of her firm faith, abiding hope and spotless life, some can speak more surely than myself, who have witnessed her blessed example, and heard her songs of devotion, even in the night season, when, like Paul and Silas, she prayed and sang praises to God. Although my tears fall fast when I write, yet my heart humbly rejoices in the hope that through patient continuance in well-doing, and faith in God's promises, I may meet her in that soon-coming kingdom and inherit glory, honor and immortality. I can say truly,—

Hope made for her a pillow,
And faith a garment rare
To keep her in her slumbers
Till Jesus should appear.
And when the light of morning
Breaks in her little room,
She'll rise and shout hosanna,
Deliverance has come.

Hoping for immortality, I remain your unworthy sister,

JULIA R. STEVENS.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find $2.00 towards subscription for my RESTITUTION, which I hold precious, and I consider it a great disseminator of truth. Reading a P. S. of Bro. Alling in regard to brethren writing short articles for the paper, I thought I would for one respond. Although I am not so certain that my writing will be anything tasteful to many readers, or even that it will be admitted into the columns of THE RESTITUTION, for it is an exposition and application of a prophecy, so greatly at variance with the universally received interpretation, that the writer anticipates the difficulties and prejudices to be encountered to get readers of the word of God to examine the subject by laying aside preconceived opinions. But, brethren, let the light shine and increase in brilliancy. As we have found many doctrines and views of Scripture passages which many of us held for years, as cardinal truths—untenable, so must we still allow that the light will shine brighter and brighter, unto the perfect day. The subject which we wish to introduce is:

"THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON."

As so much has been written and preached on this subject, that it has become a familiar expression in the mouth of every one, it seems more like blasphemy or a matter of ridicule than anything else, for any one to rise up and deny that any such battle is taught in the word of God, and invite the readers attention to an investigation of it for himself.

The only instance in which the word "Armageddon" occurs in the Bible is Rev. xvi. 16. It reads, "And he gathered them together into that place which is called in Hebrew Armageddon" Emp. Diag. This gathering it will be readily seen is the event in the prophetic drama of the sixth vial. It will be seen that there are two gatherings brought to view under this vial. Verse 13, 14, show that the three unclean spirits go forth to the Kings of the earth to get them ready or gather them together for the "War of the great day of God Almighty," Emp. Diag. The other gathering is that of the ones who have the garments on by the "I" who comes as a thief. And He gathered them, (who? why those who have the garments on) into a place called Armageddon. It is plain that the work of gathering the kings is not the work of the lie, but of the "three unclean spirits," and they gathered them to the war of the great day of God Almighty. While the work of the "He" is to gather his elect, i. e. those who have the garments on into a place called Armageddon. It is plainly taught and well understood that when Christ comes as a thief he will gather His elect. He tells us He will gather them from one end of heaven to the other end. Will any one pretend to deny that the ones with the garments on of verse 16, are any other than His elect to be delivered or gathered when He comes as a thief? We must conclude therefore that the place where He gathers them to i. e.—"the other end of heaven" is the same as "Armageddon." The phrase battle or war of Armageddon is not found in the passage and has no existance except by wrong interpretation. The passage clearly shows that the "war of the great day" does not take place until Christ has come as a "thief," and delivered His saints. This is the last event under the sixth vial. Then open the scenes of the seventh vial, which shows the magnitude of the war of that great day.

It will be seen that the mustering—gathering together, i. e., getting ready for the great conflict, is all under the sixth vial, but the conflict itself is under the seventh. This is in harmony with the chain of prophecy symbolized by the trumpets. We read that when the "seventh Angel shall begin (is about, Emp. Diag.) to sound the mystery of God shall be finished." What mystery? The mystery concerning the resurrection and translation. For Paul in speaking of this same trumpet says: "Behold I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. * * * * * * * the Lord shall descend from heaven with the trump of God," etc. Also the words of Christ to the Philadelphia Church. "Because thou hast kept the words of my patient endurance, I also will keep thee from that hour of trial which is about to come on the whole habitable to try those who dwell on the earth." Rev. iii. 10.

Brethren, let us cling to the word of God and have an eye single to dividing it rightly. JOS. LACIAR.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I wish you much success in defending the truth. I am a new beginner in studying the truth, and what I desire is the truth, whatever it may be, regardless of how much it may conflict with generally received ideas. I can receive anything that I am certain is God's will and purpose. May you ever be firm, but, at the same time cautious and certain in advocating what is God's will regarding man and the earth. I hope to be able soon to do more for you as from what I read I understand that it is often hard to separate the dross from the gold. Yours,

J. P. CAMPBELL.

Huntingdon, West Va.

Editor Restitution:—I remit one dollar for the continuance of THE RESTITUTION for the year 1878. I am much edified by its weekly visits. Its close adherence to the sure word of God has encouraged me much in the stand I have taken for the truth, the whole truth, and that without adulteration or abridgement, and hope it will continue so to do. I feel conscious that some of the faithful ones in Christ our Lord have helped me by their prayers for me and I desire their continuance; indeed, I say to all, who love the truth, pray for us in Philadelphia. We (at least some of us) desire to be accepted in the day of his coming, and to be accounted worthy, and are laboring to have a good conscience before God our Father and toward men; we desire all to be of one mind among us, striving together for the faith and obedience of the gospel. We desire to see more reverence manifested by all that name the name of Christ toward the word of God, and more love toward each other for the truth's sake. We think it would cause them to meet more frequently and to read and converse on the things of the kingdom. Much may be learned by Christian intercourse, and faith and hope be increased. I often think of the time misspent by condescending to gossip and in idle talk. It seems more than probable that the time has come when the preaching to those without may cease, the instruction and edification of one another may most properly be attended to, the word of our heavenly Father is, or will soon be,—let him that is filthy be filthy still. As we do not know what is before us of trial, let us, who are of the faith, be prepared by putting on the whole armor which is of faith, that having done all we may be able to stand in the day of the Lord at his coming. I would much like to see and have talks with those whose contributions I see in THE RESTITUTION, as I find few like minded with Paul, fully given to the obedience of the truth. If one or more of the brethren could pay us a visit who are able to set in order the things that are wanting many would be pleased. In the start of the present organization there was much interest manifested. I would much like it so now, perhaps good would result. I would bear a fair proportion toward expenses with the brethren hereabout. This I say of myself, not having consulted any of them. I do think as the appearances of matters are in this city, and others, as Baltimore and Brooklyn, etc., as you are aware that fresh interest might be excited and some lasting good done. This is for your consideration; if encouraged, I will communicate again.

With expressions of brotherly love to all the faithful among you, I subscribe myself,

WILLIAM SIMPSON.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Editor Restitution:—I do not wish unnecessarily to claim even a small portion of your valuable time, but, having just met a gentleman who had never heard the views of the "Church of God," or those of the Abrahamic faith, until our conversation, but who had heard a sermon by a Seventh Day Adventist on the subject of keeping the Seventh Day, he requested me, after seeing THE RESTITUTION, to write and ask you for light on that subject and let him know the result. Enclosed, please find some stamps, for which send me some tracts on that subject, and if any more is due, make the change with "Bible Pearls," for distribution. And, also, find one dollar greenback enclosed, for which send THE RESTITUTION to my address as given at the close. I order for six months as my address will be changed in a few months. On this extreme northwestern coast of California there are none of the Abrahamic faith but myself and one other, an intelligent sister. We are twenty miles apart. We spend considerable time in contending for the faith once delivered to the saints and in distributing tracts, papers, etc.; would be glad if we had the means to do much more. As soon as the way opens, I wish to order THE RESTITUTION sent to at least a dozen persons in different parts of this county where I have been teaching, they having become interested searchers for truth, but not so much so as to take the paper themselves. We hope Brother B. Wilson, now of San Francisco, or Brother R. Corbaley, of Healdsburgh, Cal., will come to this county and proclaim the truth in its purity and simplicity. I have been in the county four years and have never heard the "gospel of the kingdom" as preached by Jesus and the Apostles, not even the slightest reference to it, but from the pulpit we hear "the Bible is full of the immortality of the soul," and another minister with whom I had conversed on the subject and who had searched and failed to find proof, said to his congregation afterward: "We need no proof of the immortality of the soul." People are beginning to be dissatisfied with assertions, and are asking for the Bible on the subjects; they are not satisfied till they have the "thus saith the Lord."

Hoping you will be prospered in your great and good work, I am your sister in the one blessed hope,

MRS. M. F. TUNNELL.

Berkeley, Cal.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find the sum of five dollars; four of which is a free-will offering to THE RESTITUTION, and the other one for a new subscriber six months.—M. C. Vanmeter, Grinnell, Iowa. M. C. Vanmeter is a brother in the faith who has lately espoused the cause and is rejoicing in the hope of the soon-coming King. He is poor in this world's goods, but feels that he must have the paper. May the Lord bless you, brother, in your labors with means from those who have to spare. Change the address of J. G. Winchester's paper to Brown's Grove, Kansas. Their leaving here breaks up the little band at Rock Creek, Iowa. O I pray for the time to come when there will be no more separating of brethren and friends to better their condition; but when all will be satisfied with the likeness of their Master and dwell in his kingdom.

L. C. BYRNE.

Editor Restitution:—I herewith enclose two dollars for THE RESTITUTION. Receive my thanks for sending it so long; would have sent the money before if possible. Wish I could send you more. The times are hard, and will be, I think, till the great Deliverer comes. We prize the paper very much; hope it will not have to stop; these are times of great interest to those who are waiting for their Lord. That I may be of that number of faithful ones who shall be found watching, is my prayer. Your sister in hope,

MRS. TIMOTHY PARKER.

SELECTIONS.

Wonders of Telephony and Photography.

Captain J. N. Hills, whose office is on the corner of Monroe and La Salle streets, in Chicago, and whose residence is at Ravenswood, seven miles north of the city, has established telephonic communication between his office and residence, the thin metallic sounding-board, or diaphragm, being boxed up at each of the termini of the line, and connected with an ordinary telegraph wire. A person at one end desiring to communicate with a person at the other end of the line, first gives notice by sounding a bell. Attention having been gained, the speaker talks into a mouthpiece; his voice striking the diaphragm inside of the box, is vibrated instantaneously through the wire, the person addressed at the other end hearing every word as distinctly as if spoken in an adjoining room. The writer of this had the satisfaction of "interviewing" Captain Hills' telephone yesterday. He conversed freely in the Captain's office, in Chicago, with a member of his family in Ravenswood. Every word, syllable, and peculiarity of voice or enunciation was distinctly heard; so was whistling and singing. Being the first opportunity the writer has had of practically testing this wonderful new invention, it is needless to say that he was astonished at the marvelous result.

Speaking of marvelous new inventions, M. A. Hesler, the Evanston photographer, showed us a "new thing under the sun" this morning, being nothing less than a photograph of the human voice, or, more properly speaking, of the atmospheric sound-waves. The process by which this was accomplished, as near as we can understand it, is this: An ordinary bell telephone was used; a person spoke into the mouth-piece, the sound being vibrated by the usual disc or diaphragm; thence the sound waves struck a thin film of soap-bubble; the light of the sun passing through this film reflected the sound-waves to the plate in the camera obscura, and a photographic impression was the result. This, we believe, is the first time that this feat has ever been accomplished. The picture looks like a drawing of the small undulations caused in water by dropping a stone in it.

Verily, this is "an age of wonders." The telephone literally talks; the photograph literally records speech; and now the skilled photographer actually makes a picture of the atmospheric medium by which sound is transmitted.—Chicago Evening Journal.

DIED.

GREENWELL—Of consumption, June 12, 1878, H. S. Greenwell, in his twenty-seventh year.

Thus closed the career of brother Bro. Greenwell. He was "brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" by pious parents, who still reside at the old homestead in Brown county, Ill. In early youth he became a student; choosing as his work to be a teacher. Having taught school awhile, he realized the heart's deep poverty when devoid of an abiding faith in the world's Redeemer. Too noble to disregard this "hungering and thirsting after righteousness," he "obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine which was delivered," and was made free from sin in the fall of 1874. Being at that time principal of schools in Chamberburg, Pike county, Ill., he united with the church of Christ meeting there, and has ever been a faithful member. Bro. Benjamin was a Christian man. To make this impression, he seemed to be born into the world. Reasonably could his father say, "I had great hopes for my son's future life," and fast were these hopes being changed to glad fruition, when death, "the cloaked shadow who keeps the keys of all the creeds," came with friendly care and took him rest. Sleep on, brother, till He who called Lazarus from Judea's rock-ribbed tomb, shall wake the nations under ground; then may we, with you, inherit eternal life with its fulness of joy forevermore.

STUDIES IN LUKE.

The Gospel according to St. Luke,

Containing the Original Greek Text, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation; and a New Version based on the renderings of eminent Critics, with Illustrative Explanatory Foot Notes and References. Also, an Alphabetical Appendix of Names, Weights, Coins, Words and Phrases used in the New Testament. Illustrated from the "Emphatic Diaglott." By Benjamin Wilson. 12mo, fine paper, wide margins, extra cloth, price only (Green), S. S. Wells & Co., Publishers.

The almost universal use of The International Sunday School Lessons, has led to the publication, in a separate volume, of the Gospel according to St. Luke, as there, the arrangement of which forallows to the S. S. teacher and superintendent, and to Bible students generally, textual and other information of the most reliable kind. The entire plan of this little work is both original and unique. There is a Greek text which is acknowledged to be one of the best extant, and a word-for-word interlined English translation, the corresponding English terms being placed directly under each Greek word. This, of course, gives those who have an imperfect or no knowledge of Greek, an unsurpassed opportunity to become acquainted with the language in which the Gospel was originally written, and will contribute to a critical understanding of any given part or subject. In a column on each page there is a New Version for general reading. This is based on the translation, and on the labors of many eminent critics and translators of the Scriptures, as well as on the readings of some of the oldest manuscripts now known. In this New Version, emphatic signs are introduced, showing which of the Greek words were emphatic in the original, thus giving a certainty and intensity, a vivacity and earnestness, which are not found in the ordinary version. In connection with the above, the best notes and references, and the various readings of ancient manuscripts, are very full, and placed at the bottom of the page. An appendix arranged alphabetically, embracing the geographical and proper names, weights, measures, coins, precious stones, apostolic words and phrases, etc., contained in the New Testament, is added.

As most of—if not all—the Christian sects owe their existence to differences of interpretation, certainly every one is entitled to study the Scriptures for himself, and to exercise his own intelligent judgment. The work we offer has already received the approval of many eminent critics, and it is believed will be accepted as a great help for those for whom it has been prepared. S. S. teachers who would furnish themselves with the best lesson helps should procure this. For sale at THE RESTITUTION office, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. June26

WILCOX'S

COMBINED STEEL-TOOTH FLEXIBLE

HARROW AND CULTIVATOR.

[PATENTED MAR. 2, 1878.]

This remarkable tool, in its perfected state, is now for the first time offered to the public, although it has been in use and given general satisfaction for three years.

It is from 6 ft. to 15 ft. in width, and has from 70 to 135 steel teeth. The teeth stand upright, or slant backward, or project forward, as you choose.

You can have one joint in it, or two, or three, or four, or five. It is, therefore, a rigid harrow or a flexible one.

It will work in rocky or stumpy land, or among boulders as well as on the smoothest; crushes and runs safely over any obstacle without being lifted.

It will clear itself in cornstalks or other rubbish.

It is the best tool in the world to harrow the young corn or wheat, as it is a light surfacing or moulding harrow. At the same time it is the best cultivator for fall plowing or heavy clay soils, as it will thoroughly pulverize the ground from 3 to 6 inches deep without any addition of weight to the harrow.

It is the best sod harrow ever invented, as you can just scratch the surface lightly by raising it clear of the tooth, and then work it still deeper with its teeth straight, and finally pulverize the entire sod by running it with the teeth projecting forward.

Finally it is simple, durable and cheap. Every harrow fully warranted one year. Agents wanted everywhere in the United States and Canada. Sample harrows sent to actual users at a large discount for cash. Send stamp for circulars to

POETRY.

"Thy Kingdom Come."

ABBY A. PERRY.

Hasten, O Lord, the peaceful day,
When Zion's King shall come;
And all the earth shall own his sway.
"Thy will, on earth be done."

We fervent pray, "Thy kingdom come,"
And put an end to crime;
And every ill beneath the sun,
"The power, O Lord, is thine."

O come, and end this fearful strife.
This conflict of ideas!—
Extending thro' this mortal life
Of sorrow, pain and tears.

When thou, O Lord, "shalt Zion build,"
"Thy glory shall appear;"
And Palestine be crown and gold,
The nation's see and fear.

Then, Israel's long scatter'd sons
Will hasten to their home,
Rejoicing that the day has come,
When they no more shall roam.

Jerusalem will then be built
By thine unchanged decree;
Israel repent of all their guilt,
When "they their King shall see."

Each family will sigh and mourn
To think they crucified
Their blest Redeemer, and their King,
Who for them bled and died!

Believer—lift thy drooping head—
Your faith n'ould now be strong;
Soon Christ will come and wake the dead;
The conflict can't be long.

Your "eye now fix'd upon the mark,"
The spirits' sword now wield;
The word sheds light, tho' earth is dark
And faith's a mighty shield.

Our longing hearts e'en now rejoice
At tidings from that land;
Speaking to us with certain voice,
The kingdom is at hand.

Reply to Joseph Cook; or a Review of his Famous Lecture, "Does Death End All?"

BY C. COLEGROVE.

But how unequal the organization of the frog, the fish, the pigeon, and the rabbit, to that of the intellectual and reasoning man! Mr. Cook knows perfectly well that if the lobes of the cerebral man were exected with the scalpel, the man himself would perform no automatic action whatever; he would, as to his whole organism succumb to death. And whether it were so or not how plain it is to see that the lower key-board is simply subject to the upper key-board, that the self-directing upper key-board man operates the lower key-board man, or that whatever of the cerebral organism contains this volitive faculty directs all movements made subject to it in the organism!

The fact is, this exultation of the soul, this imputation to it of an indestructible vitality, and the susceptibility of incorporeal and independent conscious personality, detracts from the necessity and the grandeur of the physical organism, and from the glory of the Creator in the plan and working of the organism. The confusion of soul entity and duration, with the majestic life-force emanating from God is most unhappy. The very life-force that makes the organism operative, or impels the machinery is itself wholly weak and undiscoverable when the machinery is in one of a hundred ways deranged, so that its presence and service is wholly conditional. The machinery is dependent on the impulse of the spirit energy of life, inseparable from the constant oxygenation of the blood, while at the same time the life energy is dependent on the operative facility and organic integrity of the machinery. Thus wonderfully made is Adamic man.

Mr. Cook says that we can get no more out of a musical instrument than we put into it. Certainly not. But whatever is worthy in the dignity and commanding power of acts of volition or reasoning, to be likened to the execution of a master of melody, is developed through cerebral growth, and through influences from the outer world, which perpetually maintain or help to maintain along with the brain's own proper discipline by reflection, those capabilities which are constantly manifested in human life and action.

What does the soul know, or what could it ever possibly know, apart from the action of the brain, apart from revelations from the outer world through the media of some, at least, if not all, the senses? This potent soul is thus undeniably dependent on the cerebral organism for its knowledge, or is it simply a force without knowledge? If so, it is a strange musical performer. The simple truth is, the comparison of Mr. Cook is inapt, and does not with scientific or rational exactness illustrate the secret of the phenomena of mental operations. Nor is any such mere mechanical illustration adequate or suitable to the purpose for which it is employed. The mystery of the human mind is too profound for such solutions, by mental pictures of any single fact within the range of every-day observation. There is nothing analogous in minstrelsy or mechanics to the action and phenomena of man's intellect.

We are cited to the action of light upon the retina of the eye, to sound upon the nervous expansion of the ear, to illustrate the necessity or to demonstrate the certainty of some secret agent upon the convolutions of the brain to stimulate its action and evoke its powers. But here we have the eye and ear, instruments to serve the cerebral man, and the very waves of light and waves of sound are agents that help to awaken mental action, and so of all impressions by the senses which are from a material world. Without such impressions, thought and knowledge would be impossible. We are reminded "that the interior of the brain is seen ending in curious convolutions of vascular material," and Draper is cited as saying that "we might infer from the structure of the brain that an external immaterial agent acts upon it." But is it not a thing of inconceivable substance, if it is a substance, that thus acts upon these unfathomably mysterious convolutions? And if it is wholly beyond the power of science with its most cunning and expert methods to find any trace of this agent, how is it possible to dignify it with the name of substance? Oxygen can be caught and its affinities and powers clearly exhibited. Air can have its undulations recorded, and light has many well understood laws of action, and among the rest its power to paint the image of an object on the retina; but what is that utterly unknown, and most certainly insubstantial and airy nothing, which is called a death-defying soul, death-defying because death-surviving? Where is the power to measure it? What conception of shape where there is none, or of laws that we cannot trace in operation? Whatever may be theologically or scientifically said of immaterial substance, what definite notion can we have of it as something mysteriously acting on these cerebral convolutions? If it were an inalienable property of matter, or a subtle agent like electricity or caloric in matter, we could put it in the category of intelligible things, measurably intelligible; we repeat, if it were like those forces in nature unknown apart from material belongings or habitats, how could it immediately forsake the matter it has animated, and all other as well, and fly away immaterial, and independent of matter, and obedient to no law in nature nor possessing any? A query indeed! If air in motion imparts vibration to the auditory nerve, and light imprints an image upon the expanded optic, what does the soul do to the brain—what is its modus operandii? Most certainly no one knows or ever can tell. It is a matter of wholly indistinct conjecture, or beyond the reach of any just or sound conception.

Mr. Cook suggests that if the relation of the soul to the body is that of the harper to the harp, perhaps you can destroy the harp and not hurt the harper at all. A very important little word, that "if," there! We think, when the truth is understood, the relation of the soul to the body is that of the organism to the body, or very nearly that, and that when the organism is destroyed the soul is dissolved and insensate. And for the same reason, it does not follow that "as you may destroy the ear and not destroy the air, so you may destroy the brain and not destroy the soul." A more correct statement would be this: You may indeed destroy the ear and not destroy the air, but if you destroy the brain, you have effectually destroyed the organism and everything that pertains to functions of mind, will, sensation, intellect and soul. You may destroy the brain, and not destroy the primitive atoms of which it was composed; but you have destroyed organization, with its marvelous activities, and you have destroyed the soul except as to its susceptibilities of reliving through a resurrection.

He says: "You know how those motions in the lower key-board are produced; you know, therefore, how those in the upper are started. Matter did not start them there—matter does not start them here. Mind starts them here—mind starts them there." Yet in close proximity to this he says, in applying the illustration of the music-making organ, "Now, my friends, we are the organ, and the upper keyboard is made up of the white nervous substance, and the gray matter in the brain. Undoubtedly molecular motions occur in the nervous system, perfectly correspondent with the activity of our thoughts. I suppose that it must be granted that every time we think or feel or choose, certain shivers of the ultimate atoms of the nervous substance in the brain, and elsewhere, occur. If we had the power, which a future age may acquire, of looking into these molecular movements, we might find, and probably it is already demonstrated 'that we should find a perfect correspondence between the movement of these white and gray keys and the movement of the anthem which we call thought and choice and emotion. But when materialism comes and says these ivory keys produce the music, we say to it, parallelism is not ideality. Ivory is not music. Nervous shivers are not mind." True, ivory is not music, but the action of the ivory produces it. The stroke of the cushioned hammers against the tense wires produces music. So the brain is not music, but certain vibrations of cerebral atoms may produce thought, as truly as vibrations of wires produce melody, and parallelism may be identity after all. It is clear there can be no thought without cerebral vibrations. How comes it, then, that a soul disembodied can think?

There is power in organized man to think, power in the cerebro-nervous man to will. This is human free agency, quite as intelligible in a magnificently organized material being as in a soul that is not supposed to have anything material or organic in it at all. The will has some control over the atomic shivers that produce or accompany thought, but only in part. No man can by the exercise of his will absolutely cease to think. The action of the brain is therefore in part involuntary like that of the respiratory muscles. The power of the will is limited. Is the will inherent in an immaterial soul? If the soul interior or exterior to the bioplasts built the fabric, if it had such a vital potency, it is after all wielding a power, weakened and abridged, in the completed fabric. If man is a material being, as we believe he is, if God has made him so, as we believe he has, then it is vain to pronounce it chimerical or impossible "to put mind into matter." We insist that we have no knowledge of human mental action without material agency. The mystery of the evolution of mind, the mystery of identity, must forever baffle the understanding, but of identity without organism we know nothing.

Mr. Cook says: "Face to face with the scientific method itself, let us look at the pretence that the qualities of matter and mind can belong to one substance. What are the qualities of matter? Why, Prof. Bain says they are inertia, extension, color, weight, etc. But is there any extension in mind, any weight, any color? When Brutus stabbed Cæsar, was the grief of the Roman dictator round or square? When Columbus first saw the new world, was his joy triangular or hexagonal, white or green?" We need not protong the quotation. We subjoin as suitable an extract from an able criticism by W. J. R. in the Buffalo Express:

"In his lecture, thought and feeling are the recognized qualities of mind. These have many subdivisions not clearly recognized in the pages under examination, and I would be better pleased to speak of them as the manifestations of the mind, rather than the qualities. But call them qualities. Because they have no weight nor inertia, nor extension, etc., they are in 'fundamental antagonism', to these qualities of matter (?) What is the weight of light; the inches long or wide or deep of heat; the form of electricity; the color of magnetism?

"Because heat has no extension, when we say that a body is warm, do we assert that there must coinhere in body, 'extension and the absence of extension, at one and the same time"? Or do we thereby assert 'that the body is and is not, at the same time and in the same sense'? Further, our author allows that extension, inertia, gravity, color, form, etc., are qualities of matter; but what is the extension of gravity, the color of inertia, the form of impenetrability? On his line of reasoning we must conclude that he is willing to assert that there are 'fundamentally antagonistic' qualities coinhering in one and the same piece of matter at one and the same time, and that this piece of matter can be and not be at the same time and in the same sense.

"Says Mr. Cook: 'I affirm that the microscope begins to have visions of man's immortality. [Applause.]'

"Was the applause what Artemus Ward would call 'sarcastical' this time? What was the molecular condition of the 'Boston brains' after receiving this lucid statement? Clearly these questions are of the order of the unknowable. But what new light is here thrown on the vexed question of man's immortality? The microscope is an optical instrument, used to enable us to see very small particles of matter; under its power they present differences of color, structure, and motion; that is all.

"Man's immortality, then, as seen in microscope is a small particle of matter, or, if a big matter, the microscope has glimpses of small sections of it, showing some differences in color, structure or motion. Now, will Mr. Cook please send me a piece of immortality? I would like to be assured of my possession of this kind of matter. Will you say that this is a metaphorical statement? Very likely it is; but one of the crudest, most lying metaphors ever made. It is all but impossible to talk seriously of one who deems that the use of such metaphors could illustrate an argument.

"All these things are so clear that it wouldn't be worth while to show them at this length, were it not that men supposed to be cultivated, thoughtful and able Christian divines have listened to these lectures, and failed to signify their disapproval; that the stuff and nonsense Mr. Cook has palmed off on his audience has been vouched for by the press as acute, logical, incisive, convincing; that the many have gone from the lectures, or shut the book, with the exclamations, 'Wonderful!' 'How profound!' 'Why, we could not follow him!' and that this immense overrating of the worth of Mr. Cook's labors by ignorant or unthinking people must in the end tend to strengthen the fanaticism of those who, because errors are at present mixed with the bases of prevalent religious forms and theories, think that all religion is superstition, that God and immortality are alike disproved.

"The theories of these lectures belong to the same order of stupendous folly as those of Gen. Pleasanton, of blue-glass fame; both, as has with grim sarcasm been remarked of the latter, serve an excellent purpose as footometers. Really, reflections suggested by the former are painfully saddening. Do they not give much strength to the charge lately brought, that men are yet paddling in the original dug-out of theology?"

But we cannot now pursue the subject further in this direction. The object sought is truth. A Scriptural and true materialism we heartily adopt. We have nothing to do with any others. We deplore any theory or system which develops relationship to the first seductive denial of that Divine premonition, that death should surely follow disobedience. We have no faith in a surviving life, or the possibility of it, when death has destroyed the organism. Death is the opposite of life. If life defies death, and survives it, then death is a misnomer. The utmost confusion follows indistinct ideas at the outset, or any system which allows in the beginning a contradiction in terms, or untruth, or self-contradiction in statement. We are bound to believe that God meant what he said in relation to the structure and constitution of man, and his entire dissolution in death. And when much is often and rather loosely said of immortality, we wish to take the precise and positive version of immortality as alone available by a resurrection, and never by any possibility now inherent in Adamic man. We value and respect the labors of Joseph Cook in defense of every really scientific and Scriptural truth, and in rebuke of the skepticism of modern scientists and all who sympathize with them. But we earnestly believe his views in regard to the true nature of man are in need of revision to conform to the Bible representation.

Conference Report.

The twenty-first annual conference of Michigan was held according to previous announcement, at the brick school house near Brother Jacob Lemon's, two and a half miles north of Vicksburg, Kalamazoo county, commencing at 5 o'clock p. m. on Thursday, May 30, 1878.

Brother E. Miller, being called upon to open the services, read from Matt. xxiv., and spoke at considerable length upon the coming of the Lord, and gave an earnest exhortation to be faithful a little longer, as the signs of the times bespeak his coming nigh at hand.

On Friday, at 10:30 a. m., Brother Miller commenced the services by reading and expounding from 1 Thess. iv. 14, to the close of chapter v., which was truly edifying. Afterwards he gave a discourse, taking as his subject the words of Paul found in Phil. ii. 14-16.

At 1 o'clock Brother E. Chesebrough spoke on the subject of when the saints shall receive their reward, and where; also, of what it consists. The evidence adduced from the Word was, that instead of being rewarded at death by the immortal soul going to heaven, it would be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ, and would consist of a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.

At 5 o'clock Brother E. Hoyt gave an entertaining discourse from these words: To those who look for him will he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

Saturday, 9 o'clock a. m., convened for social meeting, of which Brother Wm. McCrodon took charge, and read for our instruction 2 Tim. ii. Words of cheer and comfort were spoken by many of the brethren and sisters. An hour was very profitably spent in this way, when the business of the conference was taken up.

Reports from the secretary and treasurer were read and accepted. The report of evangelical labor was meager.

On motion it was voted that Brother Miller preach the next annual discourse. It was also voted that Brother Hoyt be chosen as state evangelist for the ensuing year.

The election of officers resulted as follows: For president, E. Chesebrough, Pine Creek, Calhoun county; secretary, D. F. Spencer, Pine Creek, Calhoun county; treasurer, Wm. McCrodon, Hammond, Kent county; executive committee, E. Hoyt, E. Miller, J. A. Simons, B. Woodward, A. Babcock, M. Daniels, J. Lemon, G. W. Coats.

It was voted that we hold a quarterly conference in Brother Coats's vicinity, in Woodland, Barry county, the fore part of October next.

At 1 o'clock Brother Miller spoke from Phil. ii. 5, in his usual earnest manner, admonishing the brethren and sisters to cherish purity of mind and body if we would be accounted worthy of an inheritance in God's everlasting kingdom.

At 5 o'clock Brother Hoyt spoke from Rom. i. 10, showing the necessity of believing the true gospel instead of being carried away by a perverted Gospel which was being palmed off in these last days.

Sunday, 9 o'clock a. m., brought the brethren and sisters together in the capacity of a social meeting. Brother Miller read 1 Peter i. for our comfort. The brethren and sisters followed with words of encouragement to each other. An hour was in this way well occupied, during which time all of the sitting room in the house was filled.

Brother H. V. Reed, having arrived the night previous, was cordially received.

At 10 o'clock Brother Hoyt read the third chapter of Ephesians, after which Brother Reed spoke of the hope of the Christian, taking for the foundation of his remarks Acts. xxvi. 6, 7, 8, showing in a convincing manner that the hope of the promise for which Paul was judged and which was made unto the fathers was a promise of terra firma instead of an immaterial kingdom beyond the bounds of time and space. In proof he referred to those promises as recorded in Gen. xii., xiii., xxii. and xxviii. The subject was presented in a way that commanded general attention, and we are confident a favorable impression was made upon the minds of those present who were strangers to the covenants of promise.

It was announced at the close of this discourse that the ordinance of baptism would be attended to when the congregation was dismissed. A goodly number wended their way to the beautiful lake near Brother Lemon's, where eight persons were buried with Christ by baptism unto death, and rose, we trust, to walk in newness of life.

After this ceremony was over the brethren and sisters met at Brother Lemon's, where Brother H. R. Kendall made a very touching address to those just inducted into the family of Christ. At the close of his remarks the right hand of fellowship was extended to them—which was really an imposing scene.

The bread and wine was then partaken of, Brother Miller conducting the ceremonies. After this about sixty persons partook of a sumptuous repast which Sister Lemon had prepared, and being nourished bodily as well as spiritually, we returned to the school house, where a large audience had assembled.

Meeting being called to order, Brother Reed spoke upon the reason why saints are looking for the Lord from heaven, taking for his text, Heb. ix. 28. This concluded one of the most interesting conferences that it has ever been our privilege to attend.

It will be proper to state that the absence of our esteemed brother, J. A. Simonds, was regretted very much, he being obliged to remain at home on account of a severe injury received a few days previous to the meeting. Although unable to attend, yet he sent a written exhortation which was cordially received.

As to this conference being provided for, we would say that all was done that could be desired to make it agreeable for all. Although Brother and Sister Lemon were the only ones of the faith in that place, and notwithstanding they have hearts, house and barns large enough to care for all, yet their neighbors were remarkably kind, and provided homes for a goodly number of the brethren and made it very pleasant for them. Certainly the brethren have reason to be thankful for the friendly feeling manifested on the part of the inhabitants in that vicinity, as it is so seldom that we meet with so much hospitality from strangers.

We take pleasure in stating that brotherly love and perfect harmony pervaded the entire meeting, and nothing occurred in the least to detract from the enjoyment of any one. We firmly believe that each felt richly paid for the sacrifice made to attend this meeting, and that we returned to our several homes strengthened and encouraged to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

God is not in haste, but his aim is sure.

Truth is not drowned in water, nor burned in fire.

Keep clear of a man who does not value his own character.

Hobbes said: "The Papacy is the ghost of the dead Roman empire."

When my heart is sad and heavy,
When my life is all misread,
Give not anger for injustice—
Give a gentle word instead.

It costs us much to live an earnest and manly life, but it costs a great deal more not to do so.

Truth is eclipsed often, and it sets for a night, but never is it turned aside from its eternal path.—H. Ware.

Let no man ever covet the good which another man receives until he is quite certain he is willing to pay the price that man has paid for that good.

If there are unobserved flowers in our path, the humblest eyes are most likely to find them, and the most prayerful knees to press out their perfume.

Thoughts of His coming! for that joyful day
In joyful hope I watch and wait and pray;
The dawn draws nigh, the midnight shadows flee,
And what a sunrise will that advent be!

The mind of youth cannot remain empty; if you do not put into it that which is good, it will gather elsewhere that which is evil.

There are two ways of going through this world. One is to make the best of it and the other is to make the worst of it. Those who take the latter course work hard for poor pay.

I journey through a desert drear and wild,
Yet is my heart by such sweet thoughts beguiled,
Of Him on whom I lean, my strength and stay,
I can forget the sorrows of the way.

In the wilderness of sorrow, temptation and care, Jesus often goes forth to meet and converse with his people; and when he meets with them, he speaks to their hearts.

To comprehend the beginning and ending of things is an infinite thought, and therefore it requires an infinite mind to grasp it. Why, then, should a Saint being darken his soul by doubt because he cannot compass infinity?

We need to learn the lesson that this life is given us only that we may attain to eternal life. For lack of remembering this, we fix our affections on the things of this fleeting world, and when the time comes that we must quit it, we are all aghast and terrified.

We are but pilgrims—like the tribes who roam
In every land but call no land their home,—
And what their ancient Canaan is to them,
So is to us the New Jerusalem;
Then while our hopes, our hearts, our homes are there,
"Thy Kingdom come"—must be our fervent prayer!

A Scotchman has been counting the promises in the Bible. There are thirty-one thousand! There is a promise for every want, and trial, and difficulty. God has no poor children; they are all rich. Any one of God's promises is a rich inheritance, and he gives us thirty-one thousand of them.

SUFFERING AND JOY.

"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rom. viii. 18.

What though we suffer while we stay,
'Tis but the anguish of a day;
At most, our life is but a span;
A "hand's-breadth are the days of man,"
What if those days we "sow in tears,"
And our hearts heave with racking fears,
Despairing thought and cank'ring care
Their impress on our spirit bear,
We'll hope, and faint not in the race,
But pray for all-sufficing grace
To help us trust, from hour to hour,
The Savior's love and watchful power.
Ere long, our earth-life being done,
The battle fought, the victory won,
With joy we'll lay our armor down,
And at his feet receive the crown.

The custom of kissing the Pope's toe was introduced about 708. Adrian I. caused money to be coined with his name, 780. The first Pope who kept an army was Leo IX., 1054. In 1077 Gregory VII. compelled Henry IV., Emperor of Germany, to stand barefooted in the snow at the gate of the Castle of Canosa. The Pope's authority was established in England in 1070; and in 1101 Henry II. held the stirrup while Pope Alexander III. mounted his horse. In 1191 Celestine III. kicked the crown from off the head of the Emperor Henry VI., to show his prerogative of making and unmaking kings. Kissing the Pope's toe and other ceremonies were abolished by Clement XIV. in 1773. The Pope was deprived of the remains of his temporal power in December, 1870.

The heat in the lower levels of the Nevada silver mines is intense. At a depth of 1,000 feet where the temperature was 125 degrees, three men died recently from exhaustion.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the universalization of the Abrahamic, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a Unity in Belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE BREAD OF LIFE.

Joseph a Type of Christ---His Brethren Typical of Judah and Israel in the Latter Days.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

I am that bread of life. John vi. 48.

There is perhaps no other statement in the whole range of Scripture which embraces so much in so small a compass as this. It is really multum in parvo. It contains the essential matter of the religion of him who gave it utterance. It embraces the fundamental elements—the sum and substance of Christianity, underlying as the prime basis the whole sublime structure of the Christian system. Here the Son of God presents himself as the bread of life, perhaps the most strong, striking and appropriate figure that could be selected in all nature, as bread is proverbially the staff of life, and man could not exist in his mortal state without it.

So the Lord Jesus would give the world to understand that all hope of a spiritual and future life for the race depends upon and is through him; that the same relation that bread, regarding it in its full and largest sense, that is, everything that sustains our present life by way of nourishment, bears to the world, he bears also to the world as respects their redemption and future existence. And this idea is put in the strongest manner in these words: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life (i. e., spiritual and divine life) in you."

The Codex Beza renders this the more striking, "Except ye receive the body of the Son of Man as the bread of life, ye have no life in you." Hence Jesus is the great pabulum, or store-house—the grand reservoir of a future and divine life—the perfect and full embodiment of that life. "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell. For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist, (especially in regard to the new life and creation) that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Col. i. 19; ii. 9.

This, we see, disposes of the question at once. It proves to a demonstration that the popular doctrine of innate immortality has no foundation in the Word of God—a truth which we purpose to make still more apparent, especially if the analogy holds good between Joseph and Christ, as we purpose to prove.

It must be patent to every candid and unprejudiced mind that allows the Scripture to be the grand umpire to determine the question as to man's nature, that he is mortal by nature; that the first Adam could do nothing more for the race than impart his own dying nature, he being of the earth, earthy; i. e. mortal, possessing in himself the seeds of death consequent upon his disobedience. Gen. ii. 17; iii, 19; Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 47. Hence he could communicate to his posterity no higher nature than his own; having no spark of immortality, he could not in the process of generation confer it upon his progeny; hence he leaves to his progeny nothing but his own dying mortal nature.

The words of our Lord are very pertinent here: "A good tree (Christ) cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree (Adam) bring forth good fruit." Matt. vii. 18. Hence immortality is not common and natural to the race, but conditional; and that condition is that we receive the Son of God as the bread of life.

It is a derived and superhuman nature, its source being not from below, earthy, but from above, heavenly; it is communicated from the Divine Father, the great Fountain of life (Psa. xxvi. 9,) to the Son, and by and through his gracious mediation bestowed upon all true believers. This fact is clearly stated in so many words: "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." John vi. 57. These are very strong and emphatic expressions. They contain a depth of import and meaning, which it is barely possible for me to unfold, further than to say they mean this much, that as a man cannot long be preserved in life without partaking of the natural aliments designed to sustain him in life, so he cannot exist in future and eternal life save he be a partaker of heavenly ailment, designated "the bread which cometh down from heaven," and which Jesus in this same discourse styles his flesh; which he tells us the believer in him must eat in order to secure and live this divine and eternal life.

This view of the perishing nature of mankind presents Christ in an altogether different light from what we could see him viewed in the aspect of the popular theory of man's being immortal by nature, instead of being made immortal by grace. It greatly enhances the importance of the coming of our Lord to earth, and renders obvious the prime object of that coming, namely, to give life unto the world. John x. 10. Let it be remembered that this truth underlies the whole Gospel scheme of human redemption, that "I am the resurrection and the life," (Jno. xi. 26,) notwithstanding, that popular theologians teach to the contrary, and that popular theology makes null and void this sublime and glorious statement of the Lord Jesus.

In the case of Joseph in Egypt we have a beautiful and striking type of Christ with respect to the position he occupies toward perishing mankind. As Joseph was raised up in the providence of God, to arrest the fatal effects of the famine in those days, and prevent the utter extermination of the race, so has Jesus been raised up, exalted at the right hand of God, to be a Prince and Savior, or rather Life-giver to the world. Acts iii. 31. And the prime object of his coming was to give life to the world. Jno. x. 10. The world has been and is now afflicted with a wide-spread famine; not a famine of bread, as in the days of Joseph, nor a thirst for water, (Amos viii. 11,) but one of a more dreadful nature, its effects reaching to the very soul and heart of man, relating to his future and eternal existence. It is styled by the prophet a famine of the Word of God.

Observe what Jesus says in reference to this: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." John vi. 63. These are the peculiar nature of those words of God, which a man must become a partaker of in order that he make secure this eternal life and it be perpetuated. He cannot live by bread alone in respect to this divine life; but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God shall he live as regards the higher life. Deut. viii. 3. This is what the multitudes were following the Savior for, the visible element of life, the loaves with which they were filled, the bread or meat which perisheth, and this is what thousands are following him to-day for; i. e., what they can appropriate to their own temporal and selfish use. He would thus reprove them: "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth," (in contradistinction to that bread which only sustains for a time this dying and mortal life), and he then continues here his sublime discourse on the life everlasting. Jno. vi. 27.

How many are laboring and toiling to-day with all the energies of this present life for the things of this world, for the meat which perisheth, to the utter neglect of that bread of life which cometh down from heaven, which a man may eat and live forever! How many are seeking and struggling to grasp the shadow, while they lose sight of the substance—that which is imperishable? since the life which now is is but "a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away," (James iv. 14, 15): while that which is to come endureth forever, to which Jesus the bread of life gives birth and sustains and eternally perpetuates.

When a man has become regenerated, has been begotten again of God, and is become the recipient of a new nature, a spiritual nature, which has been generated in him by "the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost," (Titus iii. 5,) that new nature will seek a nourishment, a food adapted to its wants, and that food is what our Lord here calls the bread of life. This bread is just as necessary in order to sustain the wants and cravings of this new man, and to maintain its healthy existence as the corn in Joseph's day was to keep alive the souls of those almost famishing multitudes who flocked down into Egypt, and would gladly exchange all they had in the world to procure it, as they really did.

Oh, did men see their perishing condition in a spiritual point of view, did they but see their utter destitution, their extreme poverty and fearful exposure to ruin and death, with respect to this blessed life in Christ, as the people fully realized that they must perish, must die, did they not hasten to Egypt and purchase corn from the typical savior, Joseph—the only life-giver—then, methinks, they would rise en masse and come to Jesus at once. Methinks the gates to this great pabulum of life would not stand open in vain, as now; but they would be thronged with hungry applicants daily, while some, in consequence of the crowd, would be forced to stand without, waiting like the poor invalid at the pool, (John v. 1-8,) for an opportunity to enter. But no; they seem to be blind to their own best interests; blinded, by the god of this world, so that they cannot realize their lost condition. "But if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them which are lost, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ who is the image of God should shine unto them." 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.

The people in Joseph's day felt their wants; they saw death, with all its unmitigated horrors, staring them in the face. They appreciated the necessity of the hour; they saw the only remedy, and they were bound, cost what it would, to avail themselves of it. They acted on the impulse of the moment, from the force of circumstances urging them on, and hence there were lively times at the provision store-houses of Egypt, while Joseph and his assistants had about all they could do waiting upon the starving multitudes in dealing out corn. When a man is fully conscious that he is afflicted with some fearful malady that threatens his life (which he loves), and he hears of a remedy, he will not wait to ask what it is composed of, how it is to be taken, what it may cost, but he wants to know where it may be obtained, and of whom; and it would be passing strange if he did not go for it just as the Egyptians and Joseph's brethren went for the corn.

It is difficult to make a man feel he is poor who thinks he is rich, or one to see who is blind yet thinks he sees well enough, or to make a man feel that he is in a starving condition when he persists that he is full, or that he is sick when he claims to abound in health. See Rev. iii. 17. So it is still more difficult to arouse him from his deathlike stupor, and awaken his latent sensibilities to a keen consciousness of his lost condition. This would seem to be beyond the reach of man to effect, and the prerogative of Sovereign power. We might use the written Word here: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light;" but unless it be energized by power from on high, unless it be accompanied with that divine afflatus that quickeneth all things, unless the Word be intonated as it were by the Spirit of life from God, it would fail to accomplish the desired end. A "Paul may plant, an Apollos water, but it is God who giveth the increase."

We may speak the Word in our weakness, but it is with God alone to render it "quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword," which pierces to the dividing asunder of bone and marrow. Could we but make a man feel that his life was in danger every hour, that there was a certainty of losing his life, he would make an effort to get it insured or secured against loss. The same if you would convince a man that his house was liable to be burned down at any moment, he would at once get it insured or secured against such a calamity, if possible. No sane man would act contrary to his own interest if he could be led to see it. So we hold that if men were conscious of their lost condition they would seek him who came to save that which was lost, and it may be well to remember that he can be Savior only to such as are lost, as those that be whole need no physician; and since he came "not to call the righteous (i. e., righteous in their own estimation), but sinners to repentance," so it follows as a logical sequence that none but sinners can be saved. And hence it follows that unless a man fully realizes his perishing condition, there is no hope for him; if he is saved it must be in some other way outside of that plan which God has instituted in the Gospel of his Son. This other way, unhappily for a large portion of mankind, they blindly venture on, being deceived by the devil and Satan (Rev. xx. 3), they at last find out to their utter chagrin and sorrow that their endeavors to climb up some other way, or enter God's kingdom by or through some other door than that which has been provided (Jno. x. 1-9), or thrown open, has proved a failure. They are much like the foolish Babylonians who erected that stupendous tower, dreaming that they were going to heaven by this way independent of God.

O how many thousands are to-day pursuing the course of these silly innocents, for they were all mason builders, whether free-masons or bound masons we do not know, but their works show that they were in earnest and intended to complete the work they designed of carrying that tower up to heaven, had not God come down and confounded them, as he will all who undertake to be saved some other way than by that which he has graciously devised.

They were deceived by the devil, and led on to do that by which they were confounded, and ashamed of their folly, as those are and will be who depart from or rather reject God's way of salvation; who adopt some other way of man's invention. They may learn at some time, but too late to be of any practical use to them, that God's way was the best after all.

Suppose the hungry Egyptians and Joseph's brethren, after hearing there was abundance of corn in Egypt, had proposed to go some other way, being persuaded by some wily impostor, what would have been the result? They would have perished on their journey before finding any help, as there was none to be found in the land.

"The famine was over all the face of the earth." Hence no help was to be found save at the capital of the Pharaohs; and then, and there, through Joseph alone, Pharaoh's right hand man, whom the king appointed general supervisor of all his affairs. Gen. xli. 39-44, 55.

They acted wisely and went down into Egypt, the place they least expected would prove the hope of the world, the land which they little dreamed would ever prove a source of life to them. It is possible some might be found saying, in these days, when hearing of the report that there was corn in Egypt, "Can any good thing come out of such an insignificant place?" Just as some inquired in reference to the greater Joseph when he came to provide for and arrest the greater famine, viz: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" And here, right in this connection, we call attention to one sublime passage of Scripture, that we may see the power and beauty of it in such a light as seldom before: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish (in the famine now prevailing over the face of the earth), but have everlasting life." He gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sins; to save our famishing souls from death, as he gave Joseph in Pharoh's day to "save much people alive." Gen. l. 20.

The righteous will be rewarded with eternal life upon this earth. There is no promise of obtaining it any where else. "But those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." "But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." "For such as be blessed of Him (the Lord) shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of Him shall be cut off." "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." Wait on the Lord, and keep His way, and He shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." Psa. xxxvii. 9, 11, 22, 29, 34. For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth. Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." Prov. ii. 21; x. 30; xi. 31.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," Mat. v. 5. It is plain that the righteous will be recompensed on this earth, as the above Scriptures teach. The earth will stand forever, "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; He hath established, He created it not in vain, He formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord and there is none else." Isa. xlv. 18. "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth forever." Eccle. i. 4. "God, who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed forever," Psa. civ. 5.

From these scriptures it is evident that the earth will continue throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. Paul did not expect to obtain his crown of righteousness at his death, but at the appearing of Jesus Christ on this earth. Jesus says, "For the Son of man shall come, in the glory of his Father, with His angels; and then He shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. xvi. 27.

"And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be." Rev. xxii. 12. Paul was well apprized of this fact, that Jesus had not promised to reward the righteous till He comes in His Kingdom, which is to be over all the earth. "I charge thee therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at His appearing and kingdom," 2 Tim. iv. 1, 6 8. Peter appeals to the Lord, "We have left all and followed Thee, what shall we have?" Jesus answers, "You that have followed Me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of His glory, you also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 27, 28. See Luke also, xxii. 28-31. Jesus has never promised to reward any one at death. It is when He comes in His Kingdom, which is to be under the whole heavens, says Dan. vii. 27. And in Zech. ix. 14, He is to be King over all the earth. And John says we are to reign on the earth, and that the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign forever and forever, that is from age to age. Rev. v. 9, 10, 11, 15.

JONAH PIERCE.

The rinderpest is rapidly carrying off the comparatively few head of cattle in Turkey which have escaped the ravages of war. A few weeks ago the disease was confined to the European provinces of the empire; but lately it has shown itself and is rapidly spreading through Asiatic Turkey. Thousands of cattle are dying every week in the vilayets of Smyrna and Hudavendighiar; and unless the government promptly adopt and put in force measures to prevent the further spread of the contagion, one of the richest sources of wealth of Turkey will be destroyed. Already meat is becoming scarce in the capital.

The year 1760 stands out pre-eminent in modern times for the extraordinary number of remarkable men who were born in it. These included Napoleon, Wellington, Soult, Ney, Cuvier, A. von Humboldt, Chateaubriand, Lafayette, Mehemet Ali, and John Quincy Adams.

BREVITIES.

Statisticians report that centenarians are on the increase everywhere in consequence of improved methods of living.

It is a matter of statistical fact that in the district of Gronch, which includes the pyramids, and a population of 200,000, there are 600 persons over 100 years of age, or one in every 333.

The Dead Sea is about fifty miles long and twenty broad, surrounded by bare mountains, and the water is salt, pungent, and deleterious to animal life. It is believed that it was once a fertile basin, absorbed by a volcano and earthquake. Heaps of salt are collected on its shores.

Old postage stamps are highly prized in China, and a hundred cancelled stamps will buy a baby. Accordingly, the Roman Catholic missionaries are collecting the old stamps and buying the infants, whom they bring up as Christians, while the ingenious Orientals arrange their letters as well as ever.

Mr. George Smith has in an almost completed state, the "History of Sennacherib" on the same style as the well-known "History of Assurbanipal," with the cuneiform texts transliterated and translated. All that was wanting was twenty pages, which have been supplied by the editor, Mr. Sayce. It will be out soon.

On April 11 and 12, St. Helena was visited by awful storms, which caused immense destruction of life and property. Enormous masses of rock weighing from twenty to thirty tons were uprooted and borne away by the flood. The government customs were destroyed, and no water for drinking purposes could be obtained in Jamestown.

Two Japanese, residing in Berlin, have become distinguished by important inventions. One of them, Herr Matsumatron, a lieutenant in the German army, has invented a remarkable complication in the mechanism of the Mauser rifle and the other, Dr. Dino Kitao, has constructed an optical apparatus which registers, according to rigorous mathematical rules, the variations in the perception of light by the human eye.

The Fathers of St. Louis, who are settled on the ruins of Carthage, have just proposed a new map of the site. They have conducted excavations among the ruins of Carthage at their own expense, and have purchased all the antiquities the discovery of which in the adjacent country have been reported to them. They have thus formed a large collection of Punic and Latin epigraphs, which they are about to present to the French Academy of Inscriptions.

In a communication to a scientific paper Mr. Watt, a magistrate of Dominica, West Indies, gives a remarkable instance of hereditary transmission. In 1837 an English man-of-war landed there some captured slaves; one of them, W. Laidlaw, had six fingers on each hand. Of his four children all had six fingers, and one six toes on each foot. His eldest son's children have six fingers on each hand, and the five children of his second son had the same number.

Dr. Huillet, late of Pondicherry, undertakes to show that vaccination was known to a certain Bohmandoci, who flourished several thousand years before Hippocrates. Dr. Huillet arrived at this conclusion from the contents of certain Hindoo manuscripts preserved at Pondicherry, in which are described the effects produced by inoculating the human subject with the matter taken from a man or a cow. The secondary disease is described as identical in appearance with its source, with this difference, that it is quite harmless.

Bruce, the famous traveler, was, in 1765, appointed British Consul General in Algiers, to examine and describe the many fine ruins scattered over Tunis and Algeria, a subject in which George III. took especial interest. Col. Playfair, now Consul General in Algeria, discovered Bruce's drawings in the library of Lord Thurlow, whose wife, a daughter of Lord Elgin, is great-great-grand-daughter of the traveler, and determined to follow Bruce's footsteps, and, further, to plan his route so as to include all that was most picturesque and instructive in a country still almost a terra incognita to modern travelers. The result is a very interesting book, recently published in London.

The Jesuits are quietly gaining ground in Rome, and have so far influenced the Pope that he has denounced the circulation of the Scriptures in Spain. A papal decree has been issued, directing the poor Spanish peasantry to refuse food or shelter to any protestant missionary, under penalty of excommunication. Not only the Scriptures, but every Protestant publication is denounced. His Holiness has urged the Spanish monarch to banish all missionaries; nay, more, to confiscate their property. This is the liberalism of Popery in the nineteenth century. This is the mother church to which we are urged to return. This is the climax for which ritualism, in its full development, is paving the way.—The Appeal.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 5, 1876.

MET with the little church of believers in the Gospel of the Kingdom here in Plymouth, June 30th, and preached both day and evening. Immersed a believing sister into Christ in the afternoon who had been a candidate for baptism for some considerable time, but whose baptism had been delayed on account of meeting with an accident resulting in a broken arm. May it be hers to meet the triumphant Redeemer when he returns to reign, and share in the eternal life and honors of the saved.

SOME continued articles are of sufficient merit and importance to justify their length. Others might be abbreviated without subtracting from their force and value in the least. In these days of watching and waiting some short practical articles are very desirable indeed. Let us have that diversity that will make our paper profitable and edifying. Meanwhile we will do the best we can, both for our correspondents and the best interests of THE RESTITUTION. We thank kind friends for substantial aid, and while we feel to implore that God's blessing may rest upon all our patrons and contributors, we say with the Apostle—brethren, pray for us, as in our insufficiency we feel divine aid absolutely indispensable.

JUST as we are going to press a book comes to hand, entitled, "The Destiny of Russia as Foretold by God's Prophets, together with an Outline of the Future Movements and Destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews." It is a very neat volume of 120 pages, containing a colored map of the supposed future possessions of the two great rival powers, England and Russia, in Europe, Asia, and Africa. From the summary of the volume, contained in the headings of the chapters, we feel very well assured that the work is one of interest at the present time. A crisis in human history is imminent, and England and Russia will, no doubt, be the prime actors on the stage of coming events in the grand drama of which the opening scenes are now being acted. Send orders to Thomas Wilson, 188 East Monroe Street, Chicago, Illinois. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents, postpaid.

IN the celebrated Congress of Powers assembled at Berlin to consider the interminable Eastern question, England, under the leadership of Lord Beaconsfield, has evidently, so far, the controlling influence in shaping its determinations so far as the interests of her great rival for domination in the Orient are concerned. England is not alone in her manifested opposition to the encroachments of Russian ambition southward, both in Europe and Asia, but has that allied support from other nations in their representation at Berlin that makes her expressed will law in this august assemblage. Though Turkey will have scarcely a ghost of her former greatness remaining, Russia seems destined to win but few substantial advantages for all her outlay of blood and treasure from any settlement that this congress of nations may make. She may yet appeal to the arbitrament of the sword to obtain what she deems her just rights. We await the final results of the deliberations without expressing any opinion as to probabilities. God's plans will all be accomplished and prophecy fulfilled in due time.

Discussion at Irving.

Dear readers of THE RESTITUTION, my long absence from you through the columns of our paper, has been owing to a tax upon my time partly in the school room, and partly in preparation for, and engagement in discussion—the fourth of which I am now engaged in at Traer, this state (Iowa).

For your edification I will briefly outline some of these discussions. And first of Irving. A notice of this discussion, as you will remember, was published to be held beginning May 28th. On Monday 27th, Bro. Moyer, our disputant, with many friends from Waterloo and elsewhere, arrived, and in the evening we were well entertained by remarks from Bro. Stearns, and others, in a social capacity.

Tuesday morning, Rev. Bowman, with his reporter arrived, when we had a conference with them for the purpose of arranging for the reporting and publication of the discussion. But when we talked of a committee from both sides, to be composed of good, substantial men, who should obligate themselves to defray their part of expenses and pay the reporter for a word for word report, the reporter positively declined the work, stating that the task was too great for him, and that he had come with the expectation of reporting only one side of the discussion, having heard that we would have a man to report our side. Rev. Bowman corroborated this supposition—that he also understood that we would have a man to report our side of the discussion. But Rev. Barnes, pastor in charge at Irving, replied that he knew not how such an idea ever could have grown out of anything he had written to Rev. Bowman.

I may be wrong in my guess, but my impression then was, and is yet, that Rev. Bowman's plan was to have, regardless of ours, his side of the discussion reported and published alone. The reporter took down, possibly, from the attention he gave, the larger part of Rev. Bowman's first speech—an hour in length, a part of Bro. Moyer's, and then could not be prevailed upon to stay longer. Whether Mr. Bowman's first speech, which contained in it a citation of all the texts, with brief remarks upon many of them, generally relied on by our opponents in the life and death question, will be published and distributed as a campaign document we cannot tell, but will wait and see.

Yet, notwithstanding Mr. Bowman cited all his proof texts in his speech in a loud tone of voice and with a great deal of physical force, it could only be appreciated by those who love darkness better than light, and chaos better than system, as the speech in the presentation of texts and points was without scientific arrangement.

Bro. Moyer met the arguments, (not all of them in his first speech, but during the discussion of the proposition,) in a cool, deliberate, and effectual way, giving satisfaction to his friends, and evidently shedding forth much light to the outside world, by many of which the light was appreciated.

Nothing unusual to the discussion of this proposition generally, occurred save the introduction of an old Greek text (we did not learn whose) by Mr. Bowman, which contained in it in Matt xvi. 25, the word zoe instead of psuche. On Matt. x. 28, where the word psuche occurs for soul, brother Moyer remarked that the proper rendering of the word would be life instead of soul, as the same word was thus rendered in Matt. xvi. 25. Then came in the book referred to, having the word zoe instead of psuche to break the plausibility of such a rendering of the word in Matt. xvi. 28. But this occurrence of the word zoe instead of psuche in Matt. xvi. 25, brother Moyer showed to be condemned by the Greenfield and Griesbach texts, and by Adam Clark, who also in his commentary uses the word psuche. In conversation with the presiding Elder of this district, Eld. Wolf, he also stated that psuche was the right word in the text. Also, Mr. Bowman afterward stated that whatever the word was in the text that life was its representative. Thus the quibble was lost and brother Moyer's argument stood sustained.

Bro. Moyer's summary was very comprehensive, and brought up in a beautiful array the criticisms and rebutting arguments of the former six speeches. Some of the rebutting arguments were based upon:

1. The creation of man. Gen. ii. 7.

2. Definition of spirit, and application of Scripture where the word occurs.

3. Definition of soul, and an application thereof to its various occurrences in Scripture.

4. Souls can be killed—cases cited.

5. Eternal life dependent on Christ and therefore conditional.

6. Jno. xi. 26. Six renderings—Greek, Vulgate, Italian, Douay, Englishman's Concordance and Wesley—on "He that liveth and believeth in me shall not die forever." Therefore the reverse of those who do not believe.

7. If no resurrection from the dead then the saints are perished. Not so, if their souls were immortal and in heaven, whether or not they would ever have a resurrection.

8. The dead praise not God—texts cited.

9. In death man's thoughts perish. Psa. cxlvi. 4.

10. The dead know not anything. Eccl. ix. 5.

The second proposition—the destiny of the finally impenitent—was but a reverse of the former, which enabled brother Moyer to bring out more fully and develop the Scripture on the nature of man. The scriptural terms consume, perish, destroy, burn up, die and death, were largely handled, but no apparent effort upon either side, as is frequently the case, was made to drag in Greek and Hebrew terms. Apoluami, Olethron, Kolazin, etc., hardly met with their usual salutation and place on this proposition. This was far better for the audience.

Next in order came the kingdom, in which Mr. Bowman led out, affirming that the kingdom of Christ has been set up in the earth. All the texts that apparently denote a present existence of the kingdom in any manner, were cited, with a strong reliance upon Col. i. 13. Bro. Moyer broke the force planted by Mr. Bowman at this text by associating with it in consecutive order Col. iv. 11; Acts xiv. 21, 22; 2 Pet. i. 5-11; Luke xxi. 24-31. On Acts xv. 14-17, much to the dissatisfaction of Rev. Barnes, pastor of the M. E. Church at Irving, Mr. Bowman admitted that the calling of the Gentiles in verse 14, began at Cornelius's house, and that this work of calling out of the Gentiles was the antecedent of the pronoun "this" in verse 16. With these concessions, brother Moyer had but a light task to show that the return of the Lord and the rebuilding of David's tabernacle is a subsequent work, and from verse 17, probation and blessings for the nations in the world to come.

Incomprehension of the nature and purposes of God's kingdom was greatly manifested by Mr. Bowman in his speeches.

But enough of the history of our discussion for one time—will continue next week. G. M. MYERS.

Is It So

That God, when creating this great universe of worlds, some of them more than a hundred times larger than this, was so busily engaged that an enemy seized the advantage to put evil into this one? And is it so that God has been waiting these six thousand years for poor, sin-cursed fallen man to so reform it that God would take it off his hands? Such would be the conclusion if much of the teaching of the day should be endorsed. But such is not the case, God is too wise to err or make a mistake. What we call evil is, if rightly viewed, man's greatest blessing. God designed to develop out of earth's people a people for his name, and it was in his wise purpose to have them brought in contact with good and evil. If they choose the good and overcome the evil, they are God's heroes; if they are overcome by the evil they like Adam are failures, and like him they will go back into the dust to remain. It is the tempest and storm, the heat and cold that make the old oak on the mountain side tough and valuable. It is the coming in contact with the world that gives culture and training to the student or man of business; it is the training in the shops among different kinds of men and machinery, that makes the mechanic. A man grown up in a parlor without life's practice, would be a grown up baby. God, in order to have a set of called-out ones for his name and glory, goes usually to the poor, those that see and feel most of this world's misery and want, to select his people; because from their very situation they can sympathize with and feel for others' woes. The followers of Jesus were of this class. He had over five thousand at one time, and there was not money enough in the whole crowd to buy a dinner. He fed them by a miracle. What can God's purpose be in all this? Why, in order to develop such a people they are placed in contact with evil in this mortal flesh state, and all that overcome according to the teachings of his word, will be, when God's complement is made up, associated with Jesus as heirs and joint heirs, kings and priests, and for a thousand years will have a grand practice in redeeming a world. What then? From the training in this world's evils, and the thousand years' practice with Jesus their captain, and the grand old angels that were with God in the beginning, they will have been so developed that God can elevate them to act in his name. Then in the great future they will be associated with the Father as his honored children in works of usefulness, grandeur and glory, throughout the great universe of worlds, (the inhabitants of this world having under their rule all become immortalized, and capable of self government.) Then will be brought to pass what he told us through his prophet, "Eye hath not seen, ear heard, or heart conceived what God hath laid up for those who wait for him." Oh! is it not grand! What an idea that poor, fallen man can be so elevated. What a motive to action. If this be so, then every trial the child of God has here, is but a means of polishing, of training in order to so develop a character that God can elevate. Then if this world's trials come fast and thick, never fear, stand firm for the right, the extra polish may give the brighter crown. The mechanic puts into the cylinder the coke, the pumice stone or emery sand, and with them the rough metal implements, and they are all revolved together. The process brings out the metal polished and beautiful; so in this world's great cylinder the evils of life are God's polishing materials. If his children patiently stand the test, they will come out on the immortal side God's polished ones, fitted for his great temple (whose temple ye are.) God could have made the world different, or change it at once and take out the evil so called, but in his wisdom he saw fit for our good and his own glory to make and keep it just as it is. Brethren, fresh courage take. Our troubles and our trials here will only make us richer there. D. S. M.

"Who'll be the Next to Follow Jesus?"

Dear young friends:—who have learned the truth, when are you going to obey? Who among you, will be the next to follow Jesus? What are you waiting for? For more light? It will not come without study. But if you already understand the gospel of the kingdom, if you believe the promises made to Abraham, believe in one true and living God and in His Son Jesus Christ, if you believe that Jesus died, was buried and rose again, and that it is through the merits of His atoning blood that we may have everlasting life, you are ready to obey the form or mold of doctrine. You are now, in a figure, dead. You are condemned criminals. There is no escape from the sentence, unless you find refuge in Christ. "The wages of sin is death." "You are dead in trespasses and sins. You know this. You know that God will by no means clear the guilty. And yet, you wait. You keep right on in the path of sin. You keep serving the evil one, for "whom you obey his servants you are." You may have made up your minds to be baptized, sometime; but the sometime comes, and a later season takes its place. Ah! while you wait, the blessed Savior may appear, and then, you will be left. Left to endure the great tribulation, left to endure the storms of vengeance that shall sweep over a world of iniquity, left, it may be to perish with the ungodly.

If you only knew the blessedness of serving Jesus, you would not wait, you would not put off taking His name.

Are you afraid of your gay companions? They cannot save you. Do you dread the giving up of pleasure, and fascinating society? "He who does not deny himself and take up the cross cannot be the disciple of Jesus, cannot have the promised palm and crown.

"Who'll be the next to follow Jesus?" Who will enlist? Who will take the first step towards securing the incorruptible inheritance? Don't go back, don't give up the truth, but show your faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus, by being buried in baptism, and by rising from the typical death, to walk in newness of life. Iowa Conference Report.

The third quarterly conference of the church of God in Iowa, held a session in connection with the tent meeting at New Hartford, Butler county, on June 14, 1876. The president being absent, brother G. M. Myers was called to the chair. The following resolution was offered and after being discussed was adopted:

WHEREAS, we of the church of God in conference assembled at New Hartford, and the Christian conference assembled at the same place, are

1. One in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.

2. Are one and equally interested in the publication of the glad tidings of the same to the world.

3. Are one and equally interested in the ownership and management of the tent which has lately been purchased for the advancement of the cause of Christ in this part of the state, therefore, be it

Resolved, That for the more effectual co-operation we ought to be one in organization, and to this end we invite the members of the Christian conference here assembled, to participate in our deliberations now and meet with us by delegation at our next annual conference, to be held at Irving, commencing Sept 5, 1876, for the transaction of such business as may come before us at that time and for the selection of an annual board of officers.

After which we adjourned to meet at Irving, Tama county, Iowa, Sept. 5, 1876. We were afterward invited to take part in the business deliberations of the Christian conference, at which session a favorable response to the foregoing resolution was adopted and delegates to our annual conference appointed.

Bro. C. P. Burris, of Pond, Bro. Henry Peck, of New Hartford, and Bro. J. Stevenson, Marysville, were added to the missionary board until the next meeting.

At a meeting of the board, Bro. C. C. Ramsey was engaged to act as evangelist and take charge of the tent under the direction of the board.

Those localities where tent meetings are desired will please notify the secretary at once. Seating for the tent must be furnished by the parties desiring meeting. The eminent qualifications of Bro. Ramsey for the work before him is admitted by all who know him. JOHN FITZ, Secretary.

SELECTIONS.

"Fearful to Contemplate."

Thirty-three estimates, carefully compiled, from different parts of the United States, and all brought to harmonize, show the following startling facts:

Their is drank each year, in our country, 591,000,000 gallons of ardent spirits, which, at manufacturing prices, cost the consumers the round sum of $3,844,264,000.

It kills, 164,042 persons each year, whose days are each shortened ten years, making a total of 1,640,420 years of time; put at 350 per year, this makes $82,021,000.

There are 1,523,032 regular or moderate dram drinkers, who lose one-third of their time drinking, and preparing for the drunkard's grave, which is equal to 100 days to each man in the year; put at 50 cts. per day, this makes $76,151,600.

The total amount of crime costs the government annually $32,528,437, three-fourths of which is caused by ardent spirits: 24,396,328.

Add cost of pauperism, both public and private, caused by this evil: 21,875,000.

Total, $4,046,249,428.

This amount in one-dollar greenback bills laid lengthwise (one touching another), would make a line 453,176 miles long. To count this amount at the rate of one dollar per second (eight hours in a day) would require 384 years of time, about eleven average lifetimes. And all this enormous tax for what? To degrade mankind, and hurry them off to the drunkard's grave. This vast sum, if turned in a proper direction, would educate, clothe, feed, and provide a home for every poor orphan in the land; would build up every institution of learning necessary; pay off every pastor; build every church house needed, and in a short time send the gospel to earth's remotest bounds, and no one harmed or hurried off by it. Oh, how merciful and forbearing is the Almighty!

Who go up from Year to Year to Worship the King.

Please give an explanation of Zech. xiv. 16-18. What is this "Feast of the Tabernacle," if it is in the new earth? Will people be forced to worship the Lord? Will they not worship of a willing mind? G. D. R.

REPLY BY ORD. R. KRAMER.

If we accept the Scriptural doctrine of the Millennium we think it can be understood. If, immediately upon the advent of Christ, the judgment of the great white throne occurs and the new earth is created, we know of no way to explain it. In Zech. xiv. 16-18 and Rev xix., is given a view of Christ's coming in person from heaven with his saints whom he has previously resurrected and translated. Zech. xiv. 1-5 gives us the same scene. In both we have Christ coming with his saints to destroy the armies of Antichrist. In Rev. xix., armies follow Christ from the marriage supper as he comes, as the Sun of Righteousness, like the bridegroom rejoicing from his chamber; and in Zech. xiv. 5, we read, "The Lord my God will come and all the saints with thee."

The result of this advent will be as in Zech. xiv. 9: "And the Lord will be king over all the earth." Not the new earth, but the millennial earth. In the new earth we read of no more sea, but in the Millennium, Jesus Christ "shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. All nations (we see there will be nations) shall serve him." They will be compelled to accept his sovereignty. Read Zech xiv. and Rev. xix. together. See the same result as in Zech. xiv. 9, brought to view in Rev. xx. 4. Those who reign with Christ, reign during the Millennium. But how can they reign without subjects? "To him that overcometh will I give power over the nations." These nations, and not the resurrected saints, are the subjects, and they will be compelled to go up to Jerusalem, (not the New Jerusalem, which is the metropolis of the new earth; but earth's Jerusalem rebuilt,) which is the metropolis of the millennial earth. Read Isaiah ii. 1-4 and Micah iv. 1-4, and see that there will be nations to be ruled or judged in righteousness during a thousand years.

In Isaiah xxxii. 1 we read: "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness and princes shall rule in judgment." Some persons must be subjects; they are not the saints, for they "reign with Christ." In 1 Cor. vi. 2 we read: "The saints (these princes of Isa. xxxii. 1,) shall judge the world." Admit the Bible doctrine of a Millennium, and a real, literal kingdom of Christ over the nations of the earth when he comes the second time, and Zech. xiv. 16-18 can be explained. "He shall have the heathen for his inheritance," and they must "serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling." The resurrected saints will be joyful in glory, (Psalm cxlix,) and they will reign with Christ. (Col. iii. 4.)—Bible Banner.

"A Just God and a Savior."

Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. 1 Peter iii. 18. God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Rom. v. 8.

I will illustrate this by an incident which occurred in the north of Scotland, where lived two boys. In childhood they played together, and loved one another, but as they grew up, their paths separated. They met again, under strange circumstances; the one, a criminal brought before the court to receive his sentence; the other, a judge in whose hands his case was to be placed. When the poor prisoner at the bar recognized his old play-fellow, hope sprang up in his heart. When the case was stated, the judge, instead of passing immediate sentence, called for the book of law in which the penalty attached to the crime of which the prisoner was convicted was set forth. There were two extremes—the smallest and the largest sum. The poor man thought that the judge, for the sake of their old friendship, would give the least; but instead of that, he gave the heaviest—a sum that he never could pay; and which would condemn him to prison for life. The poor man's heart sunk like lead; his head sunk upon his breast. Then he heard again the voice of the judge: "George, George, my old friend! I have judged you as a just judge, and now I will have you as a friend. I have indeed fixed the heaviest penalty, but I intend to pay it all myself, and you are free." Jesus saves us, not by setting at naught the law of God, but by saying, "I bear it all for thee." How can we walk worthy? Are we not appealed to by every sense of honor for such a debt paid? Dear friends, "Jesus paid it all—all the debt I owe."—From an address by Sarah F. Smiley.

POETRY.

"The Day is at Hand."

(Rom. xiii. 12; 1 Cor. iii. 13.)

Work, for the day is coming
When Jesus will return;
At the thought of his appearing
Our hearts within us burn;
For we shall see his beauty,
And share his loving smile.
Then let us not grow weary,
'Tis but "a little while."

Work, for the day is coming,
And though your hearts rejoice,
Yet those who never knew Him
Will tremble at his voice.
Go, warn them of the judgment
That's hanging o'er their head,
And tell them of the Savior,
Whose blood for them was shed.

Work, for the day is coming;
Work, children of the light;
See thousands round you lying,
In nature's darkest night.
Up, rouse them from their slumber!
Tell them they yet is room,
That Jesus still is waiting
And longs to see them come.

Work, for the day is coming;
Your talents may be few,
Yet, if you now take gladly,
The work He bids you do,
Although it may be lowly,
Precious to Him 't will be,
And then shall hear him saying,
"Ye did it unto Me."

Work, for the day is coming;
Work, though no fruit you see;
The Master will reward you,
E'en as the work shall be.
He marks the prayerful sowing,
He counts the sighs and tears,
The patient, faithful labors
Of long and weary years.

Work, for the day is coming;
The Bridegroom draweth near,
To call the Bride He ransomed,
In glory to appear.
He says He's coming quickly,
To take us to his home;
"E'en so," we cry, rejoicing,
"Lord Jesus, quickly come!"

The One Baptism—Water or Spirit?

BY R. WILSON.

"There is one baptism."—Eph iv 5

It has occasionally been my lot to meet with individuals who stoutly maintain that the one baptism, mentioned by Paul to the Ephesians, is the baptism of the Holy Spirit. They say that this is the only saving and essential baptism. I propose to prove that they are much mistaken, and in doing so, I hope to assist and strengthen the faith of those readers who may not have closely examined the matter.

All admit that baptism in water was administered by John, the forerunner of Christ. He baptized in the river Jordan, and in places where there was much water. Towards the close of John's mission, it is said that "Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples)." John iv. 1, 2. This also was water baptism. If it had not been said that "Jesus himself baptized not," some might have inferred that spirit-baptism was meant, because John had said of Jesus, "the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Spirit." John i. 33. It belongs to Jesus to baptize in spirit. Baptism or immersion in water then was practised by John the Baptist, and the disciples of Jesus, before the crucifixion. There is not the slightest intimation in the record that any other baptism was or could be administered at that time; but, on the other hand, we have positive proof that it could not be spirit-baptism, because the Holy Spirit was not given until Jesus was glorified. John vii. 39. The spirit was promised, but not possessed, before the ascension of Jesus.

Jesus, immediately, before he left his disciples, said, "Go, teach all nations, baptizing them," etc. Matt. xxviii. 19. The teaching and baptizing were to be done by the Apostles. If it was their duty to immerse the taught ones, though water is not mentioned in the commission, yet it is implied, as that had been their former practice, and no intimation is given of any change, the sequel will show how they understood the Master. I dare not say as some have said and published, that these companions of Jesus were mistaken, and especially so, after they were all divinely inspired. The spirit was given to direct and guide them into all truth, and under that guidance they acted in all matters pertaining to salvation, and the affairs of the church. From the Acts of Apostles, I will cite two plain proofs to show that water-baptism was practised by inspired men. In Acts viii. 36, 34, 39, the baptism of the eunuch by Philip is recorded. Water is mentioned in the account of the transaction not less than four times. Also, in Acts x. 47, it is said of Cornelius and of those in his house, upon whom the Holy Spirit had been poured out—"Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we? And he (Peter) commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Is it not strange that many at the present day who think they have had a spirit-baptism, should ignore what Peter commanded those to do who had really received the spirit? Whether right or wrong, the Apostles practised immersion in water, and this was the practice of the primitive Christian church.

But, was this the one baptism? I answer, yes. This was what was enjoined upon the Apostles to administer. We have seen that they did so. They could immerse in water, but they could not immerse in spirit. That prerogative belonged to the glorified Jesus. John the Baptist said, "I indeed have baptized you with (in) water; but he (Jesus) shall baptize you with (in) the Holy Spirit." Mark i. 8. Jesus said to the Apostles, "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you." And when the spirit had been poured out on the day of Pentecost, Peter tells the Jews that Jesus "had been exalted by the right hand of God, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." Jesus gave the spirit as he said he would. He poured it out upon the Apostles. It filled the house in which they were sitting, and they were all filled with it. They were immersed in it. So, also, in the house of Cornelius; "the Holy Spirit fell on them, as on us at the beginning." Peter recognized these two cases as baptisms, for he says, "then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with (in) water; but ye shall be baptized with (in) the Holy Spirit." Acts xi. 15, 16. These effusions of the spirit came direct from Jesus—one upon the Jews, the other upon the Gentiles.

The Apostle Paul connects the one baptism with the one Lord and one faith. Faith and baptism are inseparably connected. The Ephesians to whom these words were addressed, heard the word of truth, believed, and were baptized. See Eph. i. 13; v. 20; Acts xix. 5. It is true that they were also sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, after they had believed, but this was not a baptism. All the baptism they had was the one baptism—an immersion in water for the remission of sins, like all their brethren in those days. The Romans were baptized into Jesus Christ, thus being buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, they also should walk in newness of life. In this manner they obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine into which they were delivered, and were thus made free from sin. But I need not mention the Colossians, the Corinthians, the Galatians, and others, who were all subjects of the one baptism, as, no doubt, the reader is familiar with those references.

But, does not the Apostle Paul write to the Corinthians, and say, "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles," etc? 1 Cor. xii. 13. Yes, it was by the guidance or direction of the one spirit, that both Jew and Gentile believed the one faith, were subjects of the one baptism, and thus were incorporated into the one body. All were under the same authority—the one Lord, and were made to drink into one spirit. The middle wall or partition was broken down between Jew and Gentiles; class distinctions were done away, when they became members of the body of Christ. "There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free; there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii. 28.

The one baptism is the only heaven-appointed means by which a believing penitent can obtain the forgiveness of past sins, and become united to the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is the only rite or ceremony in which the name of the Lord is placed, and which is available for salvation. "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. But how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" Those who call must be instructed in the gospel. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. x. 10-17. Saul of Tarsus, when he was seeking to do the will of the Lord, was instructed by Ananias, who was, for the time being, an Apostle, to "arise, and be baptized, and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii. 16. He arose, was baptized, found salvation, preached Christ, and became a valiant defender of the gospel. There is only one plan of salvation for all under this dispensation. The great Apostle of the Gentiles had to be saved in the same way as those whom he afterwards instructed. The "one faith, and one baptism," he received, and taught to others.

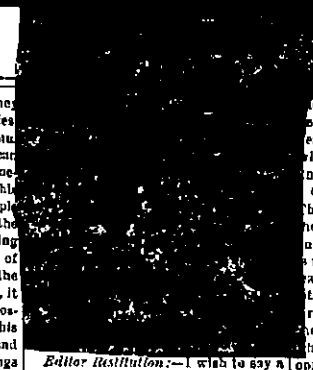
Many professing Christians have a very loose way of expressing themselves about baptism. They say it is a mere ceremony—that it is of little importance compared to the inward spiritual grace, which they define to be the new birth, or the baptism of the spirit. I have already proved what the baptism of the spirit is, how many there have been, when and where they occurred, and who were the parties; and it is useless for any one to claim to have something which they can never obtain. The new birth is something altogether different from the "inward spiritual grace" which people sometimes speak of. According to the Apostolic testimony it begins by being begotten by the gospel—the word of the kingdom—the word of truth—the incorruptible seed. In other words, it is the word of faith which the Apostles proclaimed for salvation. This good seed received into a good and honest heart produces fruit. It brings the recipient of it to the birth—a birth of water, or baptism. This is necessary, as Jesus told Nicodemus—"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. Being thus born out of the water, or baptized, he is a new creature in Christ Jesus, a new-born babe, requiring to be fed with the sincere milk of the word, that he may grow thereby. Then adding to faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. If these traits of character abound in us, we shall not be unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, but be prepared for being born of the spirit into an incorruptible and undying state of existence, to be realized only in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." It is not a mere moral birth that is here spoken of. The contrast is between flesh and spirit—two states of being—the natural and spiritual. This is illustrated beautifully by the Apostle Paul in 1 Cor. xv., to which I refer the reader. I know of no spirit-birth except this change from the natural to the spiritual,—from a corruptible, perishable, dying state of existence, to an incorruptible, unchanging, and immortal life in the kingdom of God.

There is only one faith which is necessary for salvation—the belief of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, which Philip preached at Samaria, and Paul preached at Ephesus and Rome. Acts viii. 12; xix. 8; xx. 25; xxviii. 30, 31. All the Apostles were under the guidance of the same Spirit, and consequently taught the same things for salvation.

And there is only one which has been appointed as the means of conveying salvation to us—an immersion in water into the name of the Lord Jesus, after an understanding belief of the things of the one faith. This faith is not what some call "the gift of God," "the grace of God," "the new birth," etc.; it is simply the belief of the record which God has given concerning his Son and kingdom, This is the Gospel which is the power of God for salvation to every one who believes it. And this baptism is not the baptism of the Spirit or the gift of the Spirit, as some erroneously think. These are all correct in their own place, but are not the appointed means for saving a penitent believer. Nor will the modern devices of men supply the place of the one baptism; neither the "penitent bench," "standing up for prayers," praying for pardon, the sprinkling or pouring of water on infants or adults, or even the dipping of persons in water who profess to have been already saved in some other way. All such have ignored God's plan of saving men, and follow one of their own.

Is it safe thus to trifle with God's ordinances? Such may have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, for they manifest an ignorance of God's righteousness, and a want of submission to it, while they go about to establish their own righteousness, or system of salvation. It is far better to take God at his word, though its very simplicity may be accounted as foolishness by the wise of the world.

I would not wish any one to say that I place undue importance upon water baptism. It is important, for the Lord Jesus has made it so. He has connected it with our our salvation. The Apostles also prove that it is very important by making it the means of the forgiveness of sins, (Acts ii. 38,) of saving us, (1 Peter iii. 21,) of making us free from sin, (Rom. vi. 17, 18,) of washing, justifying and sanctifying us in the name of the Lord Jesus, (1 Cor. vi. 11,) of dying, being buried, and rising with Christ, (Rom vi. 3-5,) of putting on the Lord Jesus, (Gal. iii. 27). In the light of these testimonies, and the practice of the Apostles, how can men who are esteemed as good and wise in the Scriptures ignore and repudiate the one baptism? Let all such re-examine their position, and let all who follow the lead of such teachers be careful.



Editor Restitution:—I wish to say a few words of encouragement. The truth is having good effect in Texas, as I have never witnessed such a prospect for doing good. Last Sunday Dr. Calhoun and his wife came forward for baptism, and this morning another demanded baptism at my house. We have just returned from the water.

I have been sick, but am now recovering. I am getting old, and how glad we should all be to have some able speaker among us, though we have no money for one now, but crops are good. At present one would have to come prepared to labor on a farm as well as in the gospel field, but would receive a hearty welcome.

Falls, Texas.

Editor Restitution:—I am very thankful for your paper. It contains so many truths and doctrines that I fully endorse and believe; and I hope I shall be worthy to attain, with many of the readers of THE RESTITUTION, to that rest that remains for the people of God; and I believe the time for rest is near at hand. O that we may all be worthy to have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I have neglected sending my subscription longer than I intended. I will try to be more punctual in the future. You will find enclosed one dollar. I should be glad to send more but I am one of the poor—one of God's poor, I trust, for their's is the kingdom of heaven.

Yours, in hope, PRICE HILLS.

Editor Restitution:—Your valuable paper has been received, with but few exceptions, in due time. I am well pleased with it, as I am a firm believer in the truth it advocates in regard to the promises made unto the fathers, life only in Christ, Christ's reign on David's throne, and many others which I consider important truths. I would be glad to help in sending the good news of the kingdom to others, but I am financially unable to do but little. Enclosed, however, you will find $1 as a subscription for T. G. Thompson, Tekamah, Burt county, Nebraska; you will please send THE RESTITUTION to him to the above address. I have wished that it could be arranged so you would not only give the names, but the postoffice address of each subscriber, which would enable your readers to find those of like faith in their section of the country. And would you, or some brother, give, through THE RESTITUTION, some plain statements of your views as regards the necessary qualification as to education, ordination, etc., of one who intends to preach the Gospel.

I would also say for the benefit of the preaching brethren, that if any should be looking for a field in which to labor, this is certainly the place. But as the truths set forth in THE RESTITUTION "are everywhere spoken against," one who intends to preach here would need to put on the whole armor of God, that he might successfully contend against the sectarian views so prevalent in the churches, and present the Gospel in its primitive purity, and be a practical and exemplary Christian. It would give me great pleasure to have any of the brethren call on me should they be traveling or looking at this country.

Yours, respectfully, in hope of an inheritance in the kingdom of God.

L. L. WILKINS.

Editor Restitution:—As my subscription is almost expired, I send one dollar for six months. I prize THE RESTITUTION next to my Bible. Its weekly visits are a source of great comfort and strength in my declining years. O how I wish I could send some money for the free will offering, but I am old and dependent on my dear loving children for support, from whom I get what money I send for THE RESTITUTION. Had I the means the paper should never be suspended one week. My prayer is that God would put it into the hearts of those who can assist not to let the paper stop. It seems to me the right paper for the time. Its precious truths cheer a y heart in my lonely hours, of which I have many since my companion's death. But I think the separation will not be long before loved ones will meet in our Eden home, there to greet all the faithful. May you and I, brother, be of that company. It cheers my heart to know the time will come when the earth will be filled with the knowledge and glory of God.

Courage, my brethren and sisters in Christ, the conflict will not be long; the hours and days fly swiftly; buckle on the armor more closely; Satan's host is marching on every side, ready to lead the undecided into his snares. O let us be watchful and prayerful! rejoice to see so many waking up to the doctrine of future punishment. The truth will prevail in spite of all opposers. The doctrine of eternal torment is fast fading away, while the truth of God's Word must stand, and old traditions and lies be swept from our new earth. Glorious morning! I hail thee with rapture and delight! Forever to see our Savior's loving face and be like him! O let us be faithful a little longer, and victory will turn on Zion's side! Pray for me.

Your sister in Christ.

WILCOX'S

CORRUGATED STEEL SOUTH PLEXIBLE

HARROW AND CULTIVATOR.

[PATENTED MAR. 2, 1878.]

This remarkable tool, in its perfected state, is now for the first time offered to the public, although it has been in use and given general satisfaction for three years.

It is from 4 ft. to 15 ft. in width, and has from 25 to 125 steel teeth. The teeth stand upright, or slant backward, or forward, as required.

You can have one joint in it, or two, or three, or four or five. It is, therefore, a rigid harrow or a flexible one.

It will work in rocky or stumpy land, or among bushes as well as on the smooth; and is used now safely over any obstacle without being lifted.

It will clear itself by centrifugal or other publish.

It is the best tool in the world to harrow the young grass or wheat, as it is a light surfacing or smoothing harrow. At the same time it is the best cultivator for full plowing or heavy clay soils, as it will thoroughly pulverize the ground from 3 to 6 in. or less deep without any addition of weight to the harrow.

It is the best and barrow ever invented, as you can feel security in the rapidity in running it about among trees, and then work it still deeper with the teeth straight, and readily pulverize the earlier and by turning it with the teeth projecting forward.

Finally it is simple, durable and cheap. Every harrow fully warranted one year. Agents wanted every where in the United States and Canada. Sample harrows sent for trial rates at a large discount for cash. Send stamp for circulars to

POETRY.

Nearer Home.

O'er the hill the sun is setting,
And the eve is drawing on;
Slowly droops the gentle twilight,
For another day is gone.
Gone for aye—its race is o'er.
Soon the darker shades will come;
Still it's sweet to know at even
We are one day nearer home.

One day nearer—sings the mariner,
As he glides the water o'er,
While the light is softly dying
On his distant native shore.
Thus the Christian on life's ocean,
As his life-boat cuts the foam,
In the evening cries with rapture—
I am one day nearer home.

Worn and weary, sits the pilgrim,
Hails the setting of the sun,
For his goal is one day nearer,
And his journey nearly done.
Thus we feel when o'er life's desert,
Heart and sandal-sore we roam,
As the twilight gathers o'er us,
We are one day nearer home.

Nearer home? Yes, one day nearer
To our Father's house so bright—
To the green fields and the fountains
In the land of pure delight;
For the heavens glow brighter o'er us,
And the lamps hang to the stone,
And our tents are pitched still closer,
For we're one day nearer home.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

An Open Letter From Joseph Messimore, of Millwood, Ind.

Mr. B. W. Albert:—DEAR FRIEND—I received a postal card from you a short time ago, stating that you had sent me some tracts and papers, on what you believed to be the third, and last message, of Rev. xiv., which you think is to go forth to the world before the Lord comes. You ask me to write to you after a careful perusal of the same, and to be free to give you an expression of my views on the same. So I will just here say, that I received some papers and tracts a short time prior to the reception of your card, treating mostly on the Sabbath question. But I must confess, that after a careful perusal of these documents, I fail to see any just application of the same, to the fourteenth chapter of Revelation. So I will proceed to (briefly) give you my views on some of those documents: As, for instance, what claims to be "Sixty Bible facts concerning the Seventh Day Sabbath."

1. Then, "that God blessed and sanctified the Seventh Day as his Sabbath," will not be denied by me. But that it was given to Adam, in the garden of Eden, and through him as our representative, to all nations, remains to be proven; and, I think, will forever remain so. This, perhaps, you may think, is making an unpremeditated assertion. But, I tell you, it is an easy matter for one to assume a thing, but when the proof is called for, that is sometimes not quite so easy a task. This, I deem a sufficient answer to Nos. 1-11, inclusive. Nos. twelve and thirteen read as follows, viz: "It (the Sabbath) is not a Jewish institution, for it was made 2300 years before ever there was a Jew."

Answer: The first, and only account we have in the Bible, of its ever having been given to any people, or nation, as an institution or ordinance, to be observed by such people; it was given to the Israelites, through Moses their appointed law-giver. See Exod. xvi 2:-29; also, xx. 10. Thus, we see that it belonged to the law given by Moses; and with it, it must stand or fall. This, also, answers Nos. 15-17.

No. 14, which claims that evident reference is made to the Sabbath, all through the patriarchal age, is just a payable falsehood.

Query: Did the children of Israel really know anything about the Sabbath observance before the Lord made it known unto them by Moses, their leader and law-giver? Answer: "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven; and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments, and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant." Neh. ix. 13, 14; Exodus xvi. 23-29; xx. 8-11.

Query second: Why was it necessary for the Lord to make his holy Sabbath known unto them on Mount Sinai, if it was known by them all through the patriarchal age? Consistency, thou art a jewel, indeed.

As Nos. 18-21 simply refer to the giving of the law, its preservation, and its authority over the children of Israel, during that dispensation, I will just pass it by for the present, as I will have occasion to refer to it again.

No. 22 claims that the Israelites were destroyed solely because they profaned the Sabbath. This is not true; which any one can see, by reading, carefully, the text referred to. Ezek. xx. 1-45, to which the reader is confidently referred.

With reference to No. 22, I will simply say that it is only true with respect to the Israelites during their dispensation, which ended with the bringing in of the Christian dispensation. Exod. xxxi. 13-17; Rom. vi. 14; Heb. iii. 7-19; iv. 1-8; xiv. 5, 6; Gal. iii. 1-25.

With regard to No. 24, I would state that, notwithstanding, there is no condition expressed in Jer. xvii. 2-8 than the strict observance of the Sabbath, with regard to the promise of Jerusalem should stand forever, yet, keeping of all of God's commandments, statutes and judgments given to Israelites by Moses, is certainly surely implied.

Proof: "I have set before thee this day, life and good; and death and evil in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God; to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments, his statutes and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply; and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest, to possess it." Deut. xxx. 15, 16, see also chapter xi. 26-28.

I will now notice No. 25, by which it is claimed that God sent the Jews into the Babylonish captivity solely for violating or breaking the Sabbath. And, No. 26 claims that he destroyed Jerusalem for the same thing. In answer, I boldly aver that both these statements are untrue.

With reference to the first, there is not the least intimation given in the text referred to, of such being the case. The prophet simply asks them the question: "Did not your fathers thus?" "Seeing God has brought this evil upon us and upon this city, (for our sins and transgressions,) will you yet bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath?" That this is the true meaning of the text, will evidently appear from the reading of the 9th chapter of Nehemiah, 29 to both verses. Neh. xiii. 17, 18, reads thus: "Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, what evil thing is this that ye do, in profaning the Sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus? And did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? Yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath."

Not a word said in all the above, that the Lord sent them into captivity simply for breaking the Sabbath day. No! That was not the penalty attached to the law for breaking the Sabbath.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, the man shall surely be put to death; all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the Lord commanded Moses." Deut. xv. 35, 36; Exod. iii. 14, 15.

Had our Sabbatarian friends read the whole book of the Prophet Nehemiah, they would have known better than to assume that the Lord sent the Jews into captivity for simply breaking the Sabbath day, to say nothing about the penalty of the Sabbath law.

The above also fully answers No. 26. But here is the text upon which they rely as proof of the assumption that Jerusalem was destroyed for violating the Sabbath.

"But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the Sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched." Jer. xvii. 27. See its fulfillment recorded in Jer. lii. 12, 13.

Not a word in all this text about the destruction of Jerusalem. Hence I pass it by as a false assumption.

Nos. 27-29 are bare-faced assumptions without a particle of proof. But, lest you might think that I can't answer them, I will give each of them a passing notice separately.

In No. 27, the 6th verse of Isaiah 56th chapter is referred to, to prove that God has pronounced a special blessing on all the Gentiles who will keep the Sabbath; while it is a notorious fact that the Gentiles are not at all referred to in this text, except such as should become proselytes to the commonwealth of Israel, and lay hold on God's covenant, and so, in effect become Israelites, and consequently might lay claim to all the promises made to Israel under the law. See Num. ix. 14; also xv. 15, 16. 29.

No. 28 really does not refer to the Sabbath at all, but simply asserts that the 56th chapter of Isaiah refers wholly to the Christian dispensation; which is as false as anything can well be. For I have read it over and over, and I can't find anything in the entire chapter that refers to the present dispensation. So much, then, for No. 28.

No. 29 refers to Isa. lvi. 2, as proof that God promised to bless any man who will simply keep the Sabbath day.

This, also, is untrue. Let us see. "Thus saith the Lord; Keep ye my judgments, and do justice. . . . Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the Son of Man that layeth hold on it; ("this" and "it" what? Answer: The foregoing;) that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand apparently denote a present existence of the kingdom in any manner, were cited, with a strong reliance upon Col. i. 13. Bro. Moyer broke the force planted by Mr. Bowman at this text by associating with it in consecutive order Col. iv. 11; Acts xiv. 21, 22; 2 Pet. i. 5-11; Luke xxi. 24-31. On Acts xv. 13-17, much to the dissatisfaction of Rev. Barnes, pastor of the M. E. Church at Irving, Mr. Bowman admitted that the calling of the Gentiles in verse 14, began at Cornelius's house, and that this work of calling out of the Gentiles was the antecedent of the pronoun "this" in verse 16. With [illegible] conversation—Jesus's the condition of the 13th verse, reads as follows, viz: "Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father." Whose father was Jacob?

No. 31 is based false, for it does not contain a single [illegible] cited in Isa. lviii. 12, 13, to which it refers.

No. 32 is admitted by all candid Bible students.

Nos. 33 to 35, all refer to the Savior's keeping the Sabbath, and, as he was under the law given by Moses, (Gal. iv. 4,) it was needful that he kept the law. So this is enough on that point.

No. 36 refers to Mark ii. 23-28, to prove that Jesus vindicated the Sabbath as a merciful institution, designed for man's good. Now, I beg leave to say that I can see nothing of the kind in this text. All that I can see in it is this, that inasmuch as he is Lord of the Sabbath, whatever good thing or deed he sanctions on the Sabbath is not sinful. Hence, he refers to an act of David's, which, under ordinary circumstances, would have been unlawful; in justification of his disciples' plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath. Hence, this goes to show to me that Jesus did not make a hobby of the Sabbath, as our Sabbatarian friends do.

No. 37 asserts that Jesus carefully taught the observance of the Sabbath; and cites Matt. xii. 1-13. Now, I declare I am at a loss to know how Sabbatarians can make Scripture mean exactly the reverse of what it says. The instance, the fifth verse of the text cited above, reads thus: "Have ye not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath days, the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, and are blameless?"

Now, how any one of a sound mind can construe the above language so as to teach the careful observance of the Sabbath, is entirely beyond my comprehension. For it certainly reads right to the reverse of that. And right here I will add that neither Jesus nor any of the Apostles ever enjoined, nor taught the necessity of Sabbath-keeping to any of their converts, either Jew or Gentile.

By No. 38, Matt. xii. 12 is cited as proof that Jesus taught his disciples that they should do nothing upon the Sabbath day except what was lawful. This I believe with all my heart; and this is true with regard to every other day, as well as in regard to the Sabbath. But the text cited above proves neither.

No. 39 assumes that Jesus instructed his Apostles that the Sabbath would continue, and should be prayerfully regarded, as late, at least, as the destruction of Jerusalem. If this were even true, the text referred to does not prove it; for it says nothing at all about it. Here is the text.

Matt. xxiv. 20: "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Now, all that this teaches, is simply this: In the winter their escape would be more difficult, as also on the Sabbath day they might be hindered by those who kept the Sabbath. As the Jews, who did not believe on Jesus, would still continue to be sticklers for the law.

With regard to No. 40, as to the women resting on the Sabbath day, according to the commandment, I have no objections to offer at the present.

No. 41 refers to Acts xiii. 14, as proof that the Holy Ghost, thirty years after Christ's resurrection, expressly called the Seventh Day the "Sabbath." Well, here is the text referred to. "But when they departed from Perga, they came unto Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and sat down."

Now, friend A, was it the Holy Ghost that here spoke, or was it only Luke, the historian? Undoubtedly, the latter. And so, No. 41 is found to be an untruth.

Nos. 42, 43 and 44 claim that Paul, Luke and Gentile converts called it "the Sabbath day." Then come the questions: "Did not Paul know?" "Can we not believe Luke?" and, "Why did not Paul correct the Gentiles?" With regard to the first two, I answer, yes. And as regards the third, it seems to me altogether natural that they should thus speak of this day, even though it were not couched in the new dispensation; because the Jews who wished to live out the law to the letter still kept it, and strenuously contended for its strict observance. And Paul, regarding it as neither having connected with it any salvation nor condemnation, just passes it by without saying anything in favor of, or against its observance.

Hear him, Rom. xiv. 5, 6: "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike; let every man be fully persuaded (assured) in his own mind. He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord: and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it." Again, Gal. iv. 10, 11: "Ye observe days, and months, and times and years. I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain."

Once more, Col. ii. 16, 17: "Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect to an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."

In this we can plainly see the reason why Paul neither commanded, nor forbid the observance of the Sabbath. It was simply because he did not consider it essential to justification or salvation. You might ask, then, what did he consider more necessary than Sabbath keeping? Answer: "Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man (Jesus) is preached unto you, the forgiveness of sins; and by him, all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."

SELECTIONS.

A Silent City—The Excavated Wonders of Ancient Pompeii.

Naples is always crowded with visitors. All the tourists "do" Pompeii, as the saying is. A railroad runs from Naples to the city, a delightful ride of about forty minutes' duration, which takes us along the beautiful Bay of Naples in full view of its blue, limpid waters, and carries us over the ruins of the twin city in the dreadful destruction, far-famed Herculaneum. The remains of Pompeii are all under the control of the government, which charges an admission fee of two francs for which amount visitors are also furnished with competent guides. The gateway by which you enter is only a few minutes' walk from the railroad depot, and you are at once within the precincts of the Silent City.

Eighteen hundred years ago the city was full of life. Nearly 30,000 people promenaded its streets, and it was a scene of Roman luxury and voluptuousness. Its situation on the sea made it a most fashionable place of resort for the wealthy Romans, and the Emperor Claudius had his pleasure house there, and the great orator Cicero a residence. It was likewise a commercial sea-port, and a lively traffic was carried on by its merchants. But in August, A. D. 79, Vesuvius belched forth a mass of burning lava, ashes, cinder, hot water and mud, and the town was totally buried. Since that period other eruptions have heaped up more volcanic matter on the site of the city, and for nearly seventeen centuries Pompeii remained dead to the world. About one hundred years ago the entombed city was discovered, and immediate action was taken to excavate as much of the ruins as possible.

The work has been going steadily on but no more than one half of the city has yet been exhumed. Still, many acres have been dug over and miles of streets have been brought to the light of day. The buried portion is still covered with tons of stones, ashes, cinders, and hardened mud, to a depth of from ten to twenty feet above the tops of the houses. Over this are two feet of rich soil, which is exceedingly productive, and covered with trees.

The government employs every winter about two hundred people, comprising men, women, and children, in excavating this part. The men dig; the women and children carry away the rubbish in baskets. The exhumed portion of the city lies open to the bright sun, and is somewhat slightly elevated above the level of the surrounding country.

The present city is now a perfect picture of a Roman city over two thousand years ago. The streets, pavements, temples, images, theaters, dwellings, columns, household goods, baths, arches, fountains, forums, shops of various trades, musical instruments, weapons of war, implements of labor, marble or bronze statues, mosaics, frescoes and drawings, dining-rooms, bedrooms, and kitchens, with their appropriate furniture; food for the hungry and medicine for the sick; glassware, vases, and pottery; gems, medals, coins and fruits, flowers and shrubs, are all seen as they were on the terrible night when the city was doomed to sudden destruction.

The streets are narrow, some being not more than eight feet across, but they are straight and regular. The pavement is composed of large flat stones or blocks of lava, and the deep ruts cut in them by the Roman chariots are clearly perceptible. At the crossings are large stepping stones for the use of pedestrians, so as to keep their feet from the mud. The dwelling houses are generally one-storied, and are built of stone and brick, plastered on the outside with mortar. An open court is in the center, and the different rooms are arranged arround in the oriental style. Most of the roofs are destroyed, having been crushed down by the weight of the ashes. In the dining-rooms the tables are of stone, and many are covered with petrified food. Beds and couches are in the sleeping rooms.

In one of the kitchens was found a fowl put in the skillet, and a stew pan containing a small pig for roasting, all prepared eighteen hundred years ago. Many beautiful mosaics were found on the walls, and they look as bright and fresh as if they had only been finished a few years. The frescoes, pictures, mosaics, and sculptures, and even jewelry discovered in some of the houses show a terrible depravity in morals. Many are so indecent that the public are not allowed to look at them. In the "House of Vestals," upon the door sill, is the word "Salve," welcome. A mosaic with the representation of a fierce dog, with the inscription, "Cave Canem"—beware of the dog—is near the threshold of the "House of the Tragic Poet."

In the streets are many shops which still have the signs over the doorways. In one there is some marble partly sculptured, with the artist's tools lying around; in another, medicine and surgical instruments; in a third, a marble counter with stone liquor jars behind it, and the stains made by the wet glasses on the counter prove that this was a drinking saloon. Then there is an eating house. Meats and delicacies are on the counter; the places to keep the soups and meats warm are still in the room. The same building contains a grist mill and bakery. In the baker's shop a batch of loaves was found that had been in the oven ever since Aug. 24, A. D. 79. The mill was turned by horse power.

The various temples that have been exhumed contain idols made of marble, silver and gold. The Temple of Isis is eighty-four feet long and seventy-five broad. The ashes of victims were found on its altars. The skeleton of a priest sitting at a table on which was spread a meal, is here, while near the door was another priest, holding in his skeleton hand a hatchet, with which he had tried to cut his way out of the temple. Three hundred skeletons were discovered in the Temple of Juno, all crowded together and buried beneath the ashes. At the very hour of their destruction the priestess was offering sacrifice to the queen of the gods. The forum occupies the central portion of the city. On each side are rows of columns and long porticos, which show the outline of this spot. Pedestals on which formerly stood famous statues, are dotted here and there. The public meetings were held in the forum, and a notice was found of such a meeting called for the very night when the city was destroyed.

The amphitheatre, which is about half a mile from the present excavations, is in a splendid state of preservation. It is built of stone, is in the form of the Coliseum at Rome, and was used for the gladiatorial shows. It is four hundred and thirty feet long by three hundred and fifty-five feet wide. The stone steps seat fifteen thousand spectators. Placards with the announcement of theatrical performances are still to be seen on the walls. The doors, seats, pillars, entrances and caves for the wild animals are as perfect as they were two thousand years ago.

The "Villa of Diomede," so called because a tomb bearing that name was found near by, and for this reason it was supposed to have belonged to Diomede, is the one that has been pondered famous by Bulwer's description of it. It stands just outside the "Herculaneum Gate," and the supposed owner was discovered in his garden with a bunch of keys and a purse filled with gold and silver coin in his hands. In the cellar of Diomede's house, huddled together in a corner, were found eighteen skeletons, mostly females, supposed to have been members of the family. All were encased in hardened mud and ashes. One was an infant, whose form still clung to the bony bosom of its mother. Some of the victims had rings and bracelets encircling their skeleton fingers and wrists, and old ornaments on their necks.

Over six hundred human skeletons have already been exhumed, but fortunately most of the inhabitants managed to escape, having heeded the warning of the burning mountain. Only the bones remained of the victims, the flesh having mostly perished, but now and then a little tuft of moldy hair has been found clinging to the skull. The positions of the bodies, in every possible form of contortion, all indicate a violent death. A miser was found grasping a bag of gold in his hand.

In one room a family group embracing each other in death, in another the bones of dancing girls, mingled with broken instruments of music, can be seen; in another place the skeleton of a cock at his place near the stove in the kitchen. One house contained bones scattered about bearing marks of having been gnawed, while near by lay the skeleton of a dog, showing that the brute had survived and eaten his master. Here is a company of young and old, flocking to the sea; there the remains of a mother, vainly trying to shelter her three little children from the fiery storm. Outside of the gates, in his sentry box, stands a Roman soldier, in complete armor, with a key of the city gate in his hand. After standing faithfully at his post for seventeen centuries, he was discovered clad in rusty armor, the helmet on his empty skull, and the spear in his bony fingers. In the city prison, not far distant, were found the prisoners, some with their "feet made fast in the stocks."—N. Y. Telegram.

The most laudable ambition is to be wise, and the greatest wisdom is to be good.

If you intend to do a mean thing, wait till to-morrow. If you are to do a noble thing, do it now.

Feeds the ravens when they cry,—
Can it be that Pity unnoticed

Christian faith is a grand cathedral with divinely pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory nor can possibly imagine any; standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendor.

Let no man presume that he can see prospectively into the ways of Providence. His part is to contemplate them in the past and trust them for the future; but so trusting, to act always on motives of human prudence, directed by religious principles.

A smile costs the giver nothing, yet, it is beyond price to the erring and repenting, the sad and cheerless, the lost and forsaken. It disarms malice, subdues temper, turns enmity to love, revenge to kindness, and paves the darkest paths with gems of sunlight.

Some thought flies, day by day,
Of coming rest,
As birds that far away
Seek their true nest:
'Tis but a feeling, yet
It sounds within,
That all sad hours will set
And joy begin.

The best thing to give your enemy is forgiveness; to your opponent tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to your child, a good example; to a father, deference; to your mother, conduct that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all men, charity.

The every day cares and duties which men call drudgery are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time, giving its pendulum a true vibration, and its hands a regular motion, and when they cease to hang upon the wheels, the pendulum no longer swings, the hands no longer move, the clock stands still.

Wave after wave rolls toward to the land,
Then comes the wail and then the parting hand,
And those for whom we would have freely died
Are borne away upon the ebbing tide;—
We weep and mourn, we bid the sea restore,
It mocks our grief—and takes one idol more.

Life would be impracticable unless it were the primary rule to believe what is told us. There is not a single relation in adult life in which we are not compelled to depend upon the word of another—of a husband, a wife, a friend, or an agent. We believe certain things respecting them—in their honor, their chastity, their affection, their faithfulness. To what kind of condition would life be reduced if we were to apply to these matters "the universal duty of questioning all that we believe?"

It is a perilous thing to try to stand still in our consecration, and to think that because we "gave up" all once in our religious experience, we need not continue to give up all. Let us beware how we tie up one pound in a napkin, as did the unprofitable servant. And if the pound entrusted to us is gaining five pounds or ten pounds, still let us remember to say to the Lord, "Thy pound hath gained," and give it all back to him. Thus doing, we may become fitted for greater things; God will be glorified, and we shall receive the blessed "Well done!" from the Lord.—Christian Advocate.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets--how the world began. It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the judgment-seat of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life preparatory for final salvation.

GOING TO HEAVEN.

My Dear Friends:—We have all been familiar with the doctrine of going to heaven from our childhood up. We have heard it in preaching, in exhortation, in prayer, and in social conversation. We supposed it was a Bible doctrine, and accepted it as such. But is it true? Does the Bible teach that good men will go to heaven when they die, or at any other time? What does the Bible say about it?

Christ said, "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven." Peter said, "David is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us to this day, that David is not ascended into the heavens." Christ did not ascend into heaven until forty days after his resurrection. In these instances, as I have before shown, personal names follow the body. Christ went to heaven to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. He said, "If I go away I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also." He did not say they shall go to be with me, but I will come to be with them. There is nothing said about his going away again after he has received the kingdom, and come to reward his people.

Why then, do you ask, have Christian people so generally believed in the doctrine that good men will go to heaven when they die? It is because we have believed in the immortality of the soul. That the soul is the real responsible man that lives in the body while the body is alive, and can live independently of the body when the body is dead, that it is capable of being rewarded and punished after the body has returned to dust. This soul must live somewhere. It is conscious, and therefore it must be happy or miserable; and as we recognize the good and the bad among men, there seems to be a necessity for them to have a place suited to their characters. Hence, they may go to heaven or hell. It is just as easy to imagine that the souls of good men go to heaven, and that the souls of bad men go to hell, as that they will go anywhere else. They must go somewhere. What will become of such souls is wholly imaginary, as the Bible does not say anything about it. It is because we have believed in the immortality of the soul, that we have believed in going to heaven or hell at death.

Where do men go when they die? What does the Bible say about it? It says, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This is what has been appointed to all men. In speaking of men and beasts the wise man says, "As the one dieth so dieth the other; they all go to one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and their wives were buried in the cave of Macpelah. David was buried in his sepulchre. Christ was buried in Joseph's new tomb, and Stephen was buried. All men, good and bad, and all beasts go to one place, according to the original appointment, dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

What do Christians hope for when they die? They hope to be made alive again. They hope to be rewarded at the resurrection of the just. They hope for nothing between death and the resurrection. They expect to die as Christ died, to remain dead as he remained dead, until made alive again. The being made alive again at the coming of the Lord is their hope. As Christ their living head was made alive from the dead, so they hope to be made alive as he was. As his vile body was fashioned into a glorious body, so they hope that their vile body will be fashioned like unto his glorious body. As Christ was raised from the dead incorruptible so that he could die no more, so Christians hope to be raised from the dead incorruptible, and immortal so they can die no more. As Christ was declared to be the Son of God in power by his resurrection; so they hope to become the children of God by being the children of the resurrection. As Christ was raised from the dead to sit down on David's throne, so they hope to be raised from the dead to sit down with him in his throne. As Christ, when he sits upon his throne, will have power over the nations to subdue them and to bless them, so they hope that when they sit down with him in his throne, they will jointly with Christ, have power over the nations to subdue them, and to bless them. Christians hope for all this at the coming of the Lord and beyond, but they hope for nothing this side of that event. They do not hope for anything between death and the resurrection.

But do not the saints have a great reward laid up in heaven? Yes, "Great is their reward in heaven." "They are to lay up treasures in heaven, where moth does not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." Their hope of eternal life is laid up in heaven. "They are to seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God." "They have in heaven a better, an enduring substance." They have "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that faileth not away, reserved in heaven for them."

But in none of these descriptions is there any assurance, or even intimation that the saints will ever go to heaven. It is enjoined upon Christians to lay up treasures in heaven, and we have inferred that they will go to heaven to receive their treasures, but no such promise is anywhere given. It is no where said that the saints will go to heaven at any time to receive their reward, but on the other hand it is said that "they shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever."

How then will the saints receive their reward? It will be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ. When he comes he will bring their reward with him. They will be made alive at his coming. "Their life is now hid with Christ in God, when Christ who is their life shall appear, then shall they also appear with him in glory." When the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, the dead in Christ will be raised; those that sleep in Jesus will be brought from the dead. When he comes the just shall be recompensed. When he comes, having received the kingdom, he will reward them. To one he will give authority over ten cities, and to another over five, to every one according to his ability. When he comes, the twelve Apostles will sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. When he comes, not only the Apostles, but all who love his appearing, will receive their crowns and positions of authority and work. When he appears they will receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. When he comes they will sit down with him in his throne and have power with him over the nations.

All these things and many more will be given to the saints when he comes and beyond. These things are affirmed over and over again, but not one word is said of what will happen to them before their resurrection, except such as these: They slept with their fathers—asleep in him—dead in Christ—died in faith not having received the promise—if there be no resurrection of the dead, then those that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished, and our preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain, ye are yet in your sins; and if the dead rise not, let them eat and drink for to-morrow they die.

From this lesson we have learned the following particulars:

1. That good men do not go to heaven when they die, but they return to dust. That good and bad men all go to the same place, according to the commandment, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

2. That the reason why we have believed in going to heaven or hell when we die, is because we have believed in the immortality of the soul.

3. That the hope of the gospel is the hope of the resurrection from the dead, and what is beyond. It is begotten by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, and cannot be consummated without the resurrection of the saints. If the dead rise not, all are lost in death, even the saints are perished. The whole scheme is a failure. A hope that can be consummated without the resurrection of the dead cannot be the hope of the gospel.

4. That this hope is reserved in heaven. It is hid with Christ in God, as long as Christ remains in heaven. It is reserved there for the saints. It is laid up in heaven for them.

5. It will be brought unto them when the Lord comes. He will bring his reward with him, to give to every one according to his works. He will bring the life, the immortality, and the kingdom.

Hoping that you will accept this offering, and profit by it, I remain your friend as ever.

SELECTIONS.

The Pope in Jerusalem.

Editor Restitution:—I herewith enclose an article from the New York Graphic, upon the subject above named. That the Greek and Latin churches will ultimately unite and form the beast or government with two horns has been my opinion for many years. And it must be clear to any one who will look at the subject, that it is to be the special work of that power to make the image beast or a government like Rome. This image is fully explained in Rev. xvii., and called the scarlet colored beast. You will take a deep interest in this article, and, undoubtedly, the readers of THE RESTITUTION will be much interested in its perusal. Events are rapidly coming to the front. "Blessed is he that keepeth his garments." Your brother,

H. V. REED.

Chicago, Ill., July 24, 1878.

LONDON, July 8.—It has become known that before Earl Beaconsfield left London for Berlin, with the secret treaty with Turkey in his pocket, he had private interviews, on successive days, with the Duke of Norfolk, Cardinal Manning, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and a priest of the Greek Church attached to the Russian Embassy here. What was the object of these interviews?

There is reason to believe that in the busy brain of the Premier there is revolving a scheme for the accomplishment of no less a purpose than a reunion of Christianity and the installation at Jerusalem of the Pope as its head and ruler.

But Earl Beaconsfield was born a Jew.

Yes; and so was St. Peter, St. Paul, and all the Apostles. For that matter, so was Jesus Christ and his blessed mother.

Jerusalem,—the cradle of the Church,—if it become its throne and chief city, would none the less become also a secure home and abiding place for such of the Jews as might choose to dwell there. And, as Disraeli is a Christian, he may believe that the spectacle of a united Christendom, numbering 315,000,000 of adherents, with its earthly head enthroned in the Holy City, might have a most powerful effect upon the minds of devout Jews, leading them to a revision of their ideas concerning the coming of the Messiah, and inducing them to accept Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of David, who is to restore the kingdom of Israel.

In the days of the darkest and most cruel persecution of the Jews, they often found in the Popes of Rome their most powerful protectors. When kings tortured, plundered, and exiled them, they dwelt in peace at Rome. The days of persecution for the Jews have ended, save in Roumania and Russia; they must soon end there; but with the Pope in Jerusalem, placed there by the act of the Great Powers, and guaranteed in his sovereignty by their authority, there would be no question as to the security and the equality which the Jews dwelling there would enjoy.

So much for the Jews. But how about the Christians? What is the powerful solvent which is to melt away the prejudices, or the principles which separate the Roman, the Greek, and the Anglican Churches? What is the flux which is to weld them together in one great, harmonious, and beautiful body?

What are these differences?

The Greek Church is separated from the See of Rome by nothing more than four points of dogma, and a number of matters of discipline. The former are the Filioque in the Nicene Creed; the dogma of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin as defined by Pio Nono; the doctrine of the official infallibility of the Pope, as declined by the Vatican Council, and the general assumption of the supremacy and primacy of the Roman Pontiff as the first bishop of Christendom. The final separation of the Greek from the Roman Church took place in 1468, although before that time the Greek Church had been repeatedly excommunicated, and as frequently readmitted to communion. During the 425 years that have since passed, the Papal See has never ceased to make attempts to win back the Greeks; in 1848 Pio Nono formally invited the entire Eastern Church to return to a corporate union with Rome, but his proposition was rejected, and again in 1869 his invitations to the Greek Bishops to attend the Œcumenical Council were declined. Many of the Russian nobles and families of distinction have, however, returned to the Roman communion; and it is Earl Beaconsfield's opinion that, if sufficient inducements can be held out to the Patriarchs and Bishops, they will no longer refuse assent to the reunion. His scheme provides these inducements.

The doctrinal difficulties, in his opinion, can be overcome without much difficulty. At the Council of Lyons, in 1274, the head of the Greek Church submitted to the Filioque, and what was true dogma then cannot be heresy now. The Filioque really involves only a metaphysical refinement of dogma. In the Nicene Creed there are the words, "And in the Holy Ghost, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son."—Filioque,—while in the Greek version of the creed is, "who proceedeth from the father." Subtle theologians draw from the omission of these words conclusions inimical to the Roman and Anglican doctrine of the Trinity; but at the last conference of the "Old Catholics" and Anglicans at Bonn, at which some of the Greek prelates attended, a formula was devised which it was thought would enable the Greek Bishops to accept the Filioque. As to the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, the Greeks to a very great extent already hold it, and object only to the authority that defined it. The Greeks, in fact, have always cherished the highest veneration for the Blessed Virgin, and have gone further in what Protestants term Mariolatry than the Catholics. The dogma of the official infallibility of the Pope, when properly explained by such scholars as Father Newman, for instance, presents no difficulty which need cause a Greek theologian to reject it; and as to Papal supremacy and primacy, if the Church were once reunited, it would, of course, have but one head, and the supremacy and primacy of that head would follow as a matter of course. Besides,—as Earl Beaconsfield is said to have acutely remarked in his conversation with the Greek priest,—the Greek Church holds to the infallibility of Œcumenical Councils; it recognizes the first seven as Œcumenical, but denies that the subsequent ones were. "Now," said the Premier, "the Council of the Vatican is not ended; it has been only adjourned; if called together again, and attended by the Bishops of the Greek Church and of the Anglican Church, it would certainly be Œcumenical, and you not only could have no objections to recognizing its decisions, but would be bound to accept them. It would, of course, confirm all that Rome had defined,—for the Roman Bishops would be greatly in the majority; but according to your own principles its voice would be that of the Holy Ghost, and you would be bound by it."

As to the points of discipline, they could be easily adjusted. The Greek Church holds in common with the Catholics the doctrines of the seven sacraments; of the mass; of the veneration of the saints, images, and relics; of the merit of fasting; of the hierarchical orders, and monasticism. Its differences in practice are that it baptizes sometimes by immersion, sometimes by pouring; it gives confirmation and communion to children immediately after baptism; it forbids images in relief, but uses those in paintings and engravings; and it ordains married men as priests, but does not permit a priest who is single to become married, nor allow a married priest to become a Bishop, Archbishop, Metropolitan, or Patriarch.

Now, in Earl Beaconsfield's opinion, all these matters of discipline could easily be reconciled and conformed gradually to the Roman rule. The inducement which he proposes shall be held out to the Greek prelates is, that the patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, Constantinople, and Jerusalem, the three metropolitans of Russia, the senior Bishop of Cyprus, the two Hungarian metropolitans, the Archbishop of Czernowitz, the Archbishop of Sinai, the metropolitan of Montenegro, the metropolitan of Attica, and the five prelates who constitute the Hellenic Synod of Athens shall be made Cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church, while all the Bishops of the entire Greek Church shall be recognized as Roman Bishops and entitled to sit in Œcumenical Councils and to be made Cardinals to fill vacancies in the Sacred College. These nineteen Greek Cardinals would swell the college to eighty-nine. If all the existing vacancies are filled; but there are still some other additions to be made from the Anglican Church. The whole number of Patriarchs, Archbishops, and Bishops belonging to the Greek Church throughout the world is 208 and the number of the laity is about 75,000,000.

But in Earl Beaconsfield's scheme not only are these nineteen Greek Patriarchs and metropolitans to be made Cardinals, but there is to be an understanding to the effect that after the death of the present Pope his successor shall be chosen from the Greek hierarch, his successor from the Anglican hierarchy, and his from a selection from the Roman prelates, and so on in secula seculorum.

I am unable to give any account of the manner in which the Archbishop of Canterbury received Earl Beaconsfield's great scheme. I am advised that the Earl went over the whole ground with him; pointed out the tendency of the aristocracy and middle class people in England to go over to Rome; urged upon him the consideration that a united Christianity could alone successfully combat and repel the formidable advance of infidelity and socialism; argued with skill upon the flimsy nature of the doctrinal differences that separated the Anglican from the Roman Church, and finally exclaimed: "Leo XIII. will not live long; the Greek patriarch who will succeed him is sure to be an old man; your turn will come next; reflect upon how much grander it would be to live in history, not as an Archbishop of Canterbury, but as Pope of the truly Universal Church."

The following account of the Premier's interview with Cardinal Manning and the Duke of Norfolk has been prepared for me. I give it without voughing for its correctness: "Prior to Earl Beaconsfield's departure for Berlin, he had an interview with Cardinal Manning and the Duke of Norfolk. To them he made known, in confidence, the treaty that had been concluded with Turkey for the cession of Cyprus and the protectorate of Asiatic Turkey, and he asked them whether, in their opinion, the Papal See would not be wise to transfer the seat of its authority from Rome to Jerusalem, on condition that the Holy City, the Holy Places, and if need be the whole of Palestine, should be transferred by a solemn act of all the Great Powers to the Church, with a guarantee for its perfect independence and security. Cardinal Manning is understood to have replied by asking whether this proposition was suggested by the government of Italy, and whether they had been approached on the subject, to both of which inquiries Earl Beaconsfield replied in the negative. The Cardinal then said he was in nowise authorized to speak for the Church, or for any of his fellow prelates, on such a matter; but that he could foresee almost endless objections to the proposed plan. Earl Beaconsfield is understood to have gone on and explained the outlines of his great scheme for the reunion of Christianity. With the Pope installed at Jerusalem, and made secure in his absolute sovereignty there, the next step would be the healing of the schism which had separated the Greek from the Latin Church. Earl Beaconsfield said he had reason to believe that the theologians of the Greek Church were prepared with formulas that would enable them to accept the Roman definition of these points. If so, the Pope's path to a healing of the schism was clear. Upon the acceptance by the Greek Synods of the whole schema of the Catholic faith as now defined in Rome, the Pope could issue a brief announcing the reconciliation, and to emphasize it he should appoint as Cardinals the Patriarchs and the Archimandrites of the Greek Church. There might even be an understanding to the effect that the next Pope should be one of these prelates. At this point Cardinal Manning remarked that the choice of a Pope depended upon the will of the Holy Ghost, and that man could not bargain for it. Earl Beaconsfield then went on to say that the reunion of the Greek and Latin Churches would inevitably be followed by the coming over to the mother church of the greater part of the Anglican Church, and very probably of all that was left of the Orthodox Lutheran Church. He pointed out that the church, thus again united, would number not less than 315,000,000 of souls, and that her action against the rising tide of infidelity would be irresistible. Would not Pope Leo XIII., he asked, be anxious to go down to posterity as the Pontiff under whose reign this glorious work had been accomplished? Would not the prophetic motto on his coat of arms—Lumen ex cœlo—then be most miraculously fulfilled?

"Cardinal Manning is said to have been most reticent and cautious in his replies, but to have promised to take steps to acquaint the Vatican without delay of the Premier's observations. The Duke of Norfolk was more enthusiastic, and declared himself warmly in favor of the scheme. The next day a messenger from the Cardinal set out for Rome; and it is now more than four weeks since the Pope has been made aware of what is proposed. There have been numerous consultations, and messengers have traveled between Rome, London, and Berlin. The matter was thought to be too delicate to intrust to the telegraph, even in cypher. At the Quirinal, where the matter has been confided to the King and his Cabinet, there is a conflict of opinion. At Vienna, the Emperor and the Empress are said to favor the plan, but Count Andrassy is inclined to treat it coldly. As respects the Czar, it is said that he would give to the scheme his warm support on condition that there should be an agreement that the next Pope should be chosen from the Greek Cardinals. The difficulties that would arise with relation to the rights of the different nationalities and faiths at Jerusalem have been discussed, but methods of overcoming them have been devised. One portion of the scheme involves a joint guarantee of all the Powers for the independence and autonomy of the Papal See at Jerusalem; but this is an alternative to the suggestion that the Protectorate should be given to France alone, with the understanding that the other Powers should sustain her in it if necessary. The last information concerning this matter is, that Cardinal Manning, the Pope, and King Humbert each is disinclined to favor it, the King's objections being that the departure of the Pope from Rome would rob the Eternal City of its great glory as the Capital of the Christian world. As respects the rights of the Jews in Palestine under this proposed arrangement, Earl Beaconsfield is said to have remarked that the Jews, as a body, did not wish to return to the Holy Land, and that, under the Papacy, those of them that dwelt there now, or who went there in the future, would suffer no disability or wrong."

The pleasure of doing good is the only pleasure that never wears out.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 7, 1878.

We will give place to communications on hand as soon as possible, though it will be some weeks before several can appear for want of room.

We have received from W. Hunter, 477 Washington St, Boston, Mass., Nos. 6 and 7 of "Restah." These two pamphlets treat on "Divine Politics." The whole series, with maps of the land of Immanuel in Israel's future restoration, are from the pen of George Dean Wilson, and are of an interesting character to the student of prophecy. For the work, address W. Hunter, as above. Terms, twenty cents a number.

Through the kindness of Brother H. Heyes we have a late number of the Manchester Guardian. The present number of THE RESTITUTION is so nearly full that we have no room left for extracts, although it contains interesting details regarding the treaty effected by the Berlin congress. The following item from Cyprus is one of importance:

"This morning (July 15,) the British flag was hoisted here by Admiral Lord John Hay, who acts as governor until the arrival of Sir Garnet Wolesley. The troops expected from Malta have not yet arrived."

Cyprus is only sixty-five miles distant from Syria. This is a grand move toward the fulfillment of prophecy.

As a result of astronomical observations of the late total eclipse is the discovery of a planet within the orbit of Mercury. From irregularities in the movements of Mercury, Leverrier, as early as September, 1859, asserted that such a planet existed between Mercury and the sun. It was in March of the same year that Dr. Lescarbault asserted that he discovered a new planet within the orbit of Mercury to which he gave the name of Vulcan. During the late eclipse of July 29, Professor Watson feels certain that he discovered this planet at the distance of two degrees distance from the sun. This, like the discovery of Neptune in 1840, is a wonderful scientific triumph as verifying the exceeding accuracy of theoretic computations. That beautiful aurora of light, that surrounds the moon's dark orb during a total eclipse, was ascertained to be light reflected from the sun, instead of ignited gas as had been heretofore supposed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Downfall of Turkey in the Light of Prophecy.

The following from Dr. Keith, written nearly forty years ago, now seems to be almost prophetic: "The downfall of the Turkish empire, and of the papal power, the restoration of the Jews, accompanied by a time of universal and unparalleled commotions, the conversion of Israel, the universal diffusion of the light of the gospel, the establishment of the reign of righteousness, followed at last by peace upon earth, seem to be truths so plainly written on the table of prophecy, that they who look on it with unprejudiced eye cannot but see them clearly, even though running while they read."

That we are in the very midst of the great events alluded to above, there can be no question. The ablest students of prophecy, the most devoted and holy men are now moved upon to proclaim "the kingdom of God as nigh at hand." Luke xxi.

We are fully conscious of the fact that much fanaticism has been the result of uncultivated explorers in the fields of prophecy, and that much real injury has been the result, but this misfortune is common to all departments of human knowledge. Philosophers and scientists meet with the same obstacles in their investigations. Men run before they have patiently matured the simplicity, beauty and power of truth. But truth survives all these rash expositions and is received by the honest in heart regardless of the failures and mistakes of unwise and unlettered agitators.

It has been the opinion of the leading expositors of prophecy during the last one hundred years that the sixth vial of the Apocalypse referred to the Turkish power, and that it must be overthrown or paralyzed so that "the kings of the East might be prepared." The prophecy reads as follows: "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. And he gathered them into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." Rev. xvi. 12-16. The leading points in this remarkable prophecy are:

1. The pouring out of the sixth vial which brings us within a very short time of the end; for the seventh vial introduces the judgment and the transfer of power into the hands of our coming Lord.

2. The mystic river, Euphrates, is to be dried up during the pouring out of this vial. There is a general agreement upon this point, that Turkey is meant.

3. The object of the downfall of Turkey is to prepare the kings of the East, or the kingdoms of Asia for the great battle of the day of God. All nations cannot be gathered unto Jerusalem to battle until Asia is armed and ready for the conflict.

4. The three unclean war-like spirits from the Roman earth, the dragon, beast and false prophet, are the agents by which the nations will be gathered to the final battle.

5. The admonition is given to those who are watching to keep their garments, lest they walk naked and become exposed to the hour of temptation which shall come upon the whole world.

6. The saints are to be gathered by the Lord unto the Mount of God, or the Armageddon of his meeting place. Christ will gather his people while the unclean spirits will gather the nations.

These are some of the more prominent points presented in this wonderful revelation of the sixth vial, and a part of which is already past. There may be some points in the above subject to criticism, but in the main we are satisfied that it is correct. Without any possible doubt, Turkey is the mystic river in the great Babylonian confederation of the Roman earth, which must be dried up before the mystic city can be destroyed. Says Isaac Ashe, A. B, in his notes on Revelation: "By this emblem (Euphrates) is denoted the Turkish empire which originally arose from the banks of the Euphrates." See chapter ix. 14.

This writer calls attention to the many different agencies which have been operating upon that great power to destroy it. He gives data upon each of the following points: Increasing political weakness, physical causes, war, mutual slaughter, famines, fires and pestilence.

Says Frederic Fysh, M. A., in his Divine History of the Church: "The outpouring of this vial (sixth) commenced in 1820. Its contents were discharged upon the mystical 'Euphrates,' that is upon the Ottoman Empire."

Says Dr. Alexander Keith, in The Signs of the Times: "The gradual wasting of the strength of the Ottoman Empire is strikingly foretold in Scripture, under the emblem of the drying up of the great River Euphrates, that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared. No prophecy could be in a course of more striking fulfillment; and as simultaneously with the accomplishment of this prediction, the 'marks' of the last days are becoming daily more strongly impressed on the men, and opinions, and events of the present generation; it peculiarly becomes the church to be standing on her watch-tower, looking with interest, sobriety, faith and hope, on the things which the Lord is bringing on the earth." Vol. 2, page 630.

E. B. Elliott, in his great work upon the Apocalypse, refers this emblem of the Euphrates to the Turkish Empire, and in his chart claims that this mighty empire will wane under the sixth vial. Time has confirmed his exposition of the prophecy.

Says Dr. John Cummings, in his lecture upon the sixth vial: "The great River Euphrates, as I have already shown, denotes the Turkish or Mohammedan power. Like a stream that had overflowed its banks, the Turko-Mohammedan nations had overspread vast portions of the earth, and impressed their principles completely over a great part of Christendom." "From the Chinese frontier," says Gibbon, "he stretched his jurisdiction west and south as far as the neighborhood of Constantinople, the holy city of Jerusalem, the spicy groves of Arabia Felix, an extent of dominion which surpasses the Asiatic reign of Cyrus and the Caliphs." The evaporation of this Euphrates was fixed by Daniel. Chapter viii. 15-26.

We see from the foregoing extracts that men of eminence in prophetic exposition have been looking with intense interest upon this subject. Recent events have confirmed their most earnest expectations. Russia has succeeded in releasing nearly all of the Christian provinces from Turkish rule, and driven the power of Islam south of the Balkans. England has taken control of Asia and holds Cyprus. Sixteen millions of people are placed under the British flag. Jerusalem, and all Syria, are under the watchful care of the Lion of the seas. The land of Palestine is now partially free from Turkish rule, and Hebrews, Greeks, Catholics and Protestants can now worship in the Holy City. The Asiatic tribes are being armed for future contingencies, while the whole world stands in awe of the wonderful things now taking place. The Rothschilds hold the purse strings of the nations, while Beaconsfield, a Jew controls the congress of empires. Said Luther: "Just in proportion as the Turk goes down the Jew will come up." How true. Truly, these are momentous times. It is grand to live in these days of swift events. Happy is he who is watching that he may be ready for the call to the marriage supper of the Lamb. The Bride, arrobing herself in white and will soon come forth as queen of the millennial day. Great events are just before us. We can write no more this time. More anon. H. V. REED.

Review of a Tract Written by J. W. Burroughs—Entitled "Return of the Jews."

(Concluded.)

The next argument of the tract is as follows:

1. "The Jews never were cut off as a nation." Had the proof of this been made clear, it might have saved all other effort, but as it is—with all candor—it seems to me the average mind will be unable to see the drift of this statement. That it is certainly not clear is shown in the fact that the writer himself is evidently confused about it, for in his summary he both asserts and discards it. On page seven under his thirdly it reads as above, and on the next page in his fifthly it reads, "They were rejected of God, their city destroyed and their nationality taken away from them forever." Now, does not such confusion in the mind of the writer's ability indicate the weakness of the foundation upon which his cause rests in this matter? Further, we are told they were nearly all cut off from the new covenant, but does this mean it will always so continue? How can we so understand it when the same scripture tells us the meaning to be they are only blinded until a certain time, at which time we are shown their sins will be forgiven and they consequently brought into a relationship with the new covenant? Thus it is clear the cutting off is not perpetual any more than was to be that of Christ. Isa. liii. 8.

We are now referred to the good and wild olive trees, treated of in Rom. xi. We are told they represent the Jewish and Gentile nations. Very good. We will proceed upon this basis—symbolical trees are made to represent literal national powers. See Ezek. xxxi.; Dan. iv. 10-26. The reference by Paul to olive, we understand, is to indicate God's relations up to them, and while God has given, as present, the sway of earth to the wild olive tree, it is in its relationship to him, wild. Consequently it will not always hold its sway. God's word confirms this by saying, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled." So Paul explains here in connection with this olive tree figure (verse 25) "that blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." The power of the good olive tree, then, is only suspended until all the necessary elements are provided for its complete success, and we hail the day of its completeness as truly near. Soon will its subjects be gathered home to their Eden land; soon will the beloved Master be ready to take the throne with his fair bride, who has been made ready and for whom he has been waiting. Then will the wild olive tree power be gone, and the good olive tree sway its sceptre, inaugurating peace and righteousness upon our earth, filling it with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. May the Lord hasten the joyful day when all nations shall bow to and render him complete obedience, lifting up no more the sword nor learning the cruel arts of war. Yes, kind reader, we entertain a solid hope of such a change, and we desire to believe each part of the grand whole. With so many plain "thus saith the Lord" promises we dare not say that the Jews will not—though now a scattered, blinded people—have their eyes opened, their sins forgiven, and nationally exist as one part of God's great purpose. And Paul in the same chapter, 25 to 31 verses, leads us emphatically into this great truth. But the tract has not brought this to light; but stopping short of it, takes us back to Jer. xix. to show, if possible, the reverse of this. Here we read an account of their terrible destruction and desolation, fulfilled, we are told, at the time of their complete scattering by the Romans. An argument is presented that this will be perpetual. The words upon which it depends read, "Even so will I break this people and this city as one breaketh a potter's vessel that cannot be made whole again," and from this language he concludes that God includes his own power in this, and therefore they never will be made whole again—adding, "this is God's word and it must forever settle the question of their return." That God does not include his own power and purpose we will show—calling your attention to other language just as strong, put in the mouth of the same prophet, and where a conclusion is reached directly opposed to that of the tract under consideration. It is found in Jer. xxx. 12. We read "Thy bruise is incurable." Now will anyone say that "cannot be made whole again" is stronger language. Then if God declares that He will at last have mercy and heal as regards the one utterance, we must, of course, conclude that he means to do the same by the other. That he does in the one is shown in the 17th and 18th verses, "For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds saith the Lord. . . . Thus saith the Lord; behold I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof." Here then we have it "Thus saith the Lord" most clearly pronounced, and in the language of the tract "this is God's word, and it must and will forever settle the question of the return of the Jews to Jerusalem." So while no earthly power can heal and restore, or make whole again, God can and will.

We are next referred to Ezek. vii. 8-15. The 15th verse reads, "For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive; for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life." Mark the words "although yet alive," evidently referring to the multitude taken captive, which could not return in their lifetime, showing clearly the captivity to be longer than a lifetime, and plainly has nothing to do with the return which God purposes hundreds of years afterward.

We next reach a reference in which we think it would puzzle most anyone to find a basis for the argument adduced. It is Isa. xxv. 2, reading "For thou hast made of a city a heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be rebuilt." Now, without the least proof we are called upon to believe this refers to Jerusalem, but all its language and the verses just before and after show the contrary. The prophet is here speaking of God's majesty and power. He having brought down many a city which never will be rebuilt. But Jerusalem is not doomed to an unending destruction as are many others, so is not here spoken of, which to show we have only to go to the last verse of the previous chapter where it is shown to be in existence in the great day. It says, "then the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously." Christ says that it was only to be trodden down until the times of the Gentiles is fulfilled. Isaiah tells of its glorious restoration in lxv. 18, 19, and if the reader wants still more abundant proof we refer you to Isa. lxvi. 10-14; Joel iii. 16, 17, 20; Zech. ii. 4, 12; xiv. 11, 16, 17; Psa. cxlvii. 2. In all these passages Jerusalem spoken of, while in the single passage brought forward by the writer of the tract it is not mentioned; surely we rightly judge when we call it a hard cause that has to depend on such barren proof. The next point reached is the use of the words, "thy day," by the Savior when upbraiding them. Their day, under human rulership, failed to bring them up to the standard. Ezek. xxxiv. So also have the Gentiles, under the same kind of rulers, failed, and their day is nearly ended; but in the day of the Son of Man the despised Jews under an immortal and infinite leadership, even Christ their King, will make no failure.

We are next told that Gentile times are the last times from which the deduction is drawn, that they have no time to be brought back. But again, this deduction comes in conflict with the sure "Word." Zeph. iii. 10, 20, reads: "Behold at that time I will undo all that afflict thee; and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame. At that time will I bring again, even in the time that I gather you; for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord." So here, also, God has provided us with a "saith the Lord" for the time, and this difficulty vanishes. We now think that we have taken into consideration every argument brought forward, and feel that we have given every one a fair and candid weighing by the light of God's word, and ask, in conclusion, if we have not shown that they, each and all, stand foundationless, or to sum them up in the order of the writer, we find,—

1. That the Jews are far from being so numerous but what they can dwell upon what God calls their own land, and, in his wonderful provision, find ample subsistence.

2. The unconditional promises of their restoration were not by any means so fulfilled when they were restored out of their Babylonish captivity, and, consequently, there must be a future fulfillment.

3. That the statement "they never were cut off as a nation," is in direct conflict with Himself, and that while the Jews, as individuals, can come under the New Covenant now, as a nation they are blinded; but this only lasts until the time of the Gentiles is fulfilled, when they will be brought under the New Covenant nationally.

4. That, though Jeremiah says they "cannot be made whole," and their "bruise is incurable," yet he states, in direct connection with the latter, that God purposes to heal and restore them, showing that we cannot draw correctly from the words "cannot be made whole" the deduction that the tract in review has; and that where Ezekiel says they shall not return, the explanation is, that it was, "although they were yet alive," showing merely no restoration during the life time of those that went into captivity. Also, that Isaiah was not speaking of Jerusalem when he said "it shall never be built," because he speaks of it as in existence in the coming day.

5. That God's word declares a time for their restoration, and it will, therefore, assuredly be provided.

BREVITIES.

It is said that within a fortnight eleven clergymen of the Church of England have withdrawn and joined the Church of Rome. Earl Percy and Rev. G. R. Burrows are also said to be preparing to enter the Catholic communion.

Rev. John Ingram, of Unst, who for forty years has been colleague to his father, Dr. Ingram, preached in Free Greyfriars church, Edinburgh, recently, and, at the request, of the congregation, spoke a few words about his father, who in April last entered upon his 103d year, and to-day is said to be the oldest minister in the world.

It was without anticipation of the treaty of Berlin that the Italian Ministry took the action they did shortly before the assembling of the congress. Roumania having proposed a commercial treaty between the two countries, was informed that the subject would not be considered unless she would agree to give Italian Jews temporarily staying within her jurisdiction equal privileges with foreign citizens of other religions. By similar action Austria obtained equality for her Jewish subjects in Roumania some years ago. The Roumanian conscience was reached through the Roumanian pocket.

A memorial has been presented to Her Majesty's Secretary of the state for foreign affairs by the Armenia committees of London and Manchester, who on behalf of the Armenian residents in England, submit to his lordship a statement of the sufferings of their fellow-countrymen in Turkish Armenia, and of the measures which seem needed in order to deliver them from present evils and secure their future welfare. "Their condition," they say, "is more pitiable than that of any other of the Christian subjects of the Porte, and their claims to be favorably considered by the Powers of Europe are certainly not less strong." The total number of Armenians in the Turkish Empire is about 4,000,000, and of these nearly 2,000,000 live in Armenia proper.

More than a year ago an exploration was made across the Isthmus of Darien by an expedition under Lieutenant Wyse, of the French Navy, with a view to an inter-oceanic canal. The project originated with a company having its seat in France, and after careful exploration Wyse reported in favor of a line from the point of Gandi on the Atlantic, along the valleys of the Tupisa and Tiati, to the river Tuyra, near where it discharges in the Gulf of San Miguel. Recently he went to Bogota to negotiate with the Columbian Government, and news has been received that a contract has been concluded. The canal will be neutral, and free to the commerce of the world. The company is to receive a grant of land for 600 feet on each side of the canal, and a million acres in any part of the country they choose. The work is to be completed before 1895.

Dr. Klein, of Cologne, has discovered on the moon's surface a great black crater on the Mare Vaporum, and a little to the northwest of the crater Hyginus. He says it is about three miles in diameter, deep and full of shadow. Having frequently observed this region during the last twelve years, Dr. Klein feels certain that no such crater existed in this region at the time of his previous observations. On subsequent occasions he obtained further observations of this new crater. He found it to be either without a wall or with a very low one, but to be a deep, conical depression in the surface. So far, the English observations have been in accord with those of Dr. Klein, and, if the existence of this new crater be confirmed, it will form the strongest possible evidence of volcanic change on the moon's surface.

In 1809, when the London Society for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews was founded, it is said that the most diligent search could only discover thirty-five Christian Hebrews in the whole of England. Since then more than 20,000 have embraced the faith and been baptized. As a rule, with but rare exceptions, they have been intelligent, respectable, and earnest. They are to found in all the professions, all departments of learning, commerce, and industry, leading exemplary lives. More than one hundred have been ordained clergy of the Anglican Church, many of whom have risen to prominence, four becoming bishops—the late Bishop Auer of Liberia; Bishop Alexander, the first Anglican Bishop at Jerusalem; the present Bishop Hellmuth of Huron; and Bishop Scheraschawsky of Shanghai. The present state of Judaism in this country offers special openings for Christian effort. Already during the past year twelve Jews have been baptized by clergy of New York.

POETRY.

Wait.

Christian, wait—the nations trouble,
Shaken to their utmost bound—
Men their terror ill dissemble,
Dread and panic spread around;
There's no prophet now to call us—
To behold in vision true,
What events will soon befall us—
Wait, and see what God will do.

Christian, wait—the muttering thunder
Gathering on the sky afar,
Need no bring dismay or wonder,
Doubt, or fright, or pallid fear;
Stay your soul on his protection,
He will guide you safely through,
Banish every sad dejection,
Wait, and see what God will do.

Christian, wait—Jehovah reigneth
On his throne of mercy still,
And the wrath of man restrain-th,
When it worketh not his will;
He secured the future story
To the days now dark to you,
Will record his work of glory—
Wait, and see what God will do.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—July 28th was spent in Brother Griffin's grove. "The wisdom of the world contrasted with the wisdom of God," and "The promises of the gospel to be fulfilled on the earth," were the subjects considered. Respectable audiences were present, and good attention was paid.

But now comes the matter of rejoicing. After the afternoon service, Sister Savannah Kizer arose, at our request, and signified her desire to put on Christ by baptism. A number of friends accompanied her and us to the shaded banks of Bel river, and as we sing

"In all my Lord appointed ways
My journey I'll pursue,"

she was buried and was raised that she might be made free from the law of sin and of death. Our prayers go with the lonely orphan. May she be kept unwavering in her faith unto the end, receiving then the salvation of her soul. "Who'll be the next?"

God bless you all.

Editor Restitution:—Please find enclosed renewal of our subscription for another year, as we would not do without the paper as long as we can get the means to pay for it. The silent teachings we receive from the papers is all the preaching we have, and we hear more from the brethren and sisters in this paper than any other. We two are the only ones near here who believe this precious truth. I am trying each day to live nearer to Him, and to get ready for those things that I believe will shortly come upon the earth. May God, in his mercy, keep us all, who are looking for the appearing of Jesus, that we may have a shelter of safety in his love. May God bless you and give you an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God, with all who love and serve him.

Your sister in Christ,

Editor Restitution:—Please give us a small place in our paper to report our success in Texas. Brother Gower is still contending for the cause of truth, and is preaching sometimes on Saturday, and every Sunday, and the truth is progressing well in this portion of the state. We should be glad if some preaching brother would come this way, for I believe the truth will take hold of the minds of many here, for the people are reading their Bibles, and I think there are many who are convinced. There is one who came forward for baptism last Sunday, who is to be baptized next Sunday, when Brother Gower preaches on Denton Creek.

May God give us freedom and courage in the gospel, and patience to endure, that we may be accepted in the final welcoming time.

Yours in the one faith.

J. R. WILLETT.

Fells, Texas.

Editor Restitution:—The true light is beginning to shine on this Pacific coast, and may many sons and daughters be converted and made heirs by obeying the truth.

We are looking for the speedy return of our great High Priest, who is now at the right hand of the Father, where he is to remain until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. We believe that the sanctuary is about to be cleansed, the man of sin revealed, the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, restored, and that he who has the right to rule will sit upon the throne of his father David.

I just write this to cheer all the brethren, and let them know that we have some encouragement at present; as there are some noble hearted brethren who are proclaiming the truth and serving the good Lord of the kingdom, all over the Willamette valley and on the Columbia river. My prayer is that the truth may spread, and that error may lose its hold upon the minds of the many.

Yours in hope of the coming kingdom.

Z. S. BRYANT.

Editor Restitution:—The cause is still on the advance here in Texas. The only difficulty is, we have but one preacher, and he is so old and so near worn out that I am afraid he will not last much longer. More laborers are greatly needed here in Texas.

THOMAS GOODE.

Falls, Texas.

Editor Restitution:—I take great pleasure in reading the cheering letters that appear in THE RESTITUTION, bearing tidings of the progress of the good work in different portions of the field, with regard to increase of numbers and the preparation of the Bride that she may be ready to meet the Bridegroom, when he shall signify that the time has come for the union to take place. We are informed by the Word that God is now taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name, and that after this is accomplished he will return and build up the ruined places, that the residue of people may seek after the Lord. So we learn by these reports of the gradual and constant gathering out of the Gentile nations this "chosen generation," a "peculiar people," and "royal priesthood."

I am rejoiced to have the privilege of reporting that another has become a portion of the Abrahamic seed. A short time since Mr. J. G. Haupt, of Davenport, Iowa, (an entire stranger to me,) wrote to me that he would like to have me assist him to put on Christ at Austin. I then wrote to him and made arrangements, and on Sunday July 21, baptized him into the saving name. On the occasion of the baptism, Brother Thomas Wilson delivered a discourse entitled, "Jerusalem as it will be."

Brother Haupt is principal of a school near Davenport. I should judge that he will make an able public proclaimer of the glad tidings. He is now determined to faithfully serve his Master, and we may expect to hear that good results will follow his labors. That God will prosper him is my sincere desire.

Yours, patiently watching.

WILLIAM H. WILSON.

Editor Restitution:—Since my last to you I have held three grove meetings, in Canada. The first was in the neighborhood of Norwichville, and was the nineteenth meeting of the kind I have held in that locality. Although the fore part of the day was rainy, and in the afternoon it looked as though it might rain any moment, yet there were some seventy-five vehicles well loaned with human beings, in attendance, besides those who walked. Some came a distance of fifteen miles. The best attention was given while I discoursed for an hour and a half on the judgment. Left an appointment for the same place on the last Sunday in June, 1879, at 10:30 a. m. and 2:30 p. m.

Monday and Wednesday evenings I preached in a school house full of attentive hearers.

Tuesday afternoon I immersed two young men into the name of the Anointed Jesus for the remission of sins. And in the evening I preached in the private house of Brother Davis, on baptism and the memorial supper, to an intelligent congregation, who listened with deep interest. After the discourse we ate the supper. All remained to witness the solemn scene; and it was truly a heavenly time.

On the last Sunday in June we held our eleventh annual grove meeting near Swealburg. The day was fine, the congregation was large and gave excellent attention while I discussed the following subjects, selected by the brethren: In the forenoon, "How Immortality is to be Obtained;" in the afternoon, "The Second Coming of Christ." One requested baptism. Left an appointment for an appointment for another grove meeting on the first Sunday in July, 1879, at 10:30 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. After the close of the services in the grove, we retired to a private house where we ate the memorial supper. All felt to praise the Lord for such a blessed privilege, and for his truth.

On the 5th of July I reached Brother Madill's. Met with a warm reception. Had a blessed time on the Sabbath in discussing different subjects—subjects which are ignored by some. On Sunday I gave two discourses in a beautiful grove about a mile from their house to an interesting congregation, who listened with deep interest to a couple of strong discourses, as they were called, on advanced subjects—truth. Fraternally yours,

H. V. LYON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I left home June 28th for the Lamark, Illinois, meeting, and arrived there at an early hour—about 2 o'clock next morning. Brethren Stephenson, Jacobs, and others, had already arrived, and Saturday found a large attendance of brethren from Fairfield, Plum River, Foreston, Adaline, Antioch, Mt. Carroll, and other points. The meeting was better attended from abroad than had been anticipated. After the selection of a chairman and secretary there was but little business done—nothing in the way of resolutions, as is often the case at meetings of the kind. A free inquiry into the cause of a want of energy upon the part of many brethren was had; and various notions were advanced. It was very observant that those congregations which kept up weekly meetings were about all which were doing anything in the cause of Christ. I am fully satisfied from observation for the past few years, that were our preachers to insist on it, and our congregations unanimously to fall into the old Apostolical order of weekly meetings that there would be more life possessed by the brethren, better meetings, and far more accomplished than now is. Brother Stephenson and I alternated in the preaching till the close of the meeting Monday night. On Sunday afternoon five persons were immersed into the Christ.

On Tuesday, from Lamark I visited Foreston. There I stayed two or three days and made two discourses, principally practical in their nature. At Foreston I found an Advent congregation of about twenty-eight or thirty members moving on under the care of Brother Augustus Smith. They are full of life and zeal, and are somewhat free from prejudice, with their ears open to hear and learn of the things concerning the kingdom of God. Some of them are fully persuaded of the restoration of Israel and the establishment of the kingdom of God and the reign of the Christ over the nations of earth; and others are learning. On the whole, I was pleased with my stay among them, and so were they.

From Foreston I visited Adaline where Brother Jacobs lives, and a small ekklesia of twelve or fifteen members. I spent here a few days pleasantly in visiting from house to house, and spoke to a fair size audience considering the extreme heat and that there were several other meetings in the village. We spoke on Saturday evening, and three times on Sunday. In this vicinity we learned of several Christadelphians, but made no especial effort to meet them, as we learned that they were almost inapproachable, and in many respects different from folks of the same name in our state—Iowa. However, we visited one of them—Henry Jacobs—Dr. Jacobs' son, whom we found, though he has much of this world's goods, to be well posted in his Bible, hospitable and sociable at his house, and a man, to all appearances, whose heart is set more upon the cause of the Master than the things of this age. May he reach the kingdom.

From Adaline, on account of extreme heat and harvest being just on hands, instead of visiting the brethren at Silver Creek, as was expected, we returned to Foreston, made two more discourses there, and on the 16th came to Oregon where we now are visiting among some of the brethren.

Yours truly, G. M. MYERS.

Keagle and Myers Debate—No. 2.

After our direct argument upon our affirmative proposition we then proceeded with the accumulative, which we give below in the order presented, for the benefit of those who are young in our faith and have not studied the subject maturely.

ACCUMULATIVE ARGUMENTS ON BAPTISM FOR THE REMISSION OF SIN.

1—a. In Christ Jesus there is no condemnation. Rom. viii, 1.

b. Baptism brings us into Christ. Gal. iii. 27.

c. Therefore baptism is essential.

2—a. We are cleansed from our sins by the blood of Christ.

b. His blood was shed in his death.

c. We reach his death in the act of baptism. Rom. vi. 3.

d. We reach his death by an application by reaching his death.

e. Therefore baptism is essential.

3—a. Anciently God met with the high priest and forgave the sins of the people at the mercy seat which overshadowed the ark of the covenant.

b. Now God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. 2 Cor. v. 19.

c. Baptism brings us into Christ, where God can be met. Gal. iii. 27.

d. Therefore baptism must be complied with.

4—a. The old man—the old relationship—must be put off before the new can be put on.

b. We put off the old, and put on the new, man in baptism. Rom. vi. 6.

c. Therefore baptism is important.

5—a. In Christ we are made new creatures. 2 Cor. v. 17.

b. We are brought into Christ by baptism. Rom. vi. 3; Gal. iii. 27.

c. Therefore baptism is essential.

6—a. The quickening into new life is together with Christ. Eph. ii. 5.

b. Christ was quickened into new life from the grave.

c. Therefore for the quickening power to new life we must come to the emblematical grave.

d. We reach the emblematical grave in baptism. Rom. vi. 3, 4.

e. Therefore baptism is important.

7—a. There is a form (mould) of doctrine which being obeyed renders us free from sin. Rom. vi. 17, 18.

b. A death in affection to sin by faith, a death in practice to sin by repentance, and a burial of the old man of sin by baptism is that form or mould. Rom. vi. 2-6; 1 Cor. xv. 1-4.

c. Therefore baptism must be obeyed.

8—a. "But will thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" James ii. 21.

b. Baptism as a command of the Lord will lead us from faith in the doctrine of perfection.

c. Therefore baptism is essential to the perfection of faith.

9—a. Not the man who simply hears the word, or simply looks into the law of liberty, is blessed.

b. But the doer of the word is blessed (not before, but) in the deed. James i. 22-25.

c. Therefore the blessing connected with the commission of Christ does not come before, but in the act of obedience.

10—a. "Jesus being made perfect, became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Heb. v. 9.

b. Baptism is a command of Jesus. Mark xvi. 16; Acts x. 48.

c. And therefore for this salvation it is essential that the command be obeyed.

11—a. "Strive to enter in at the straight gate; because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. vii. 13, 14.

b. Jesus says: "I am the way."

c. Therefore one must come into the Christ which is the way, in order to walk therein.

d Baptism brings us into Christ. Rom. vi. 4; Gal. iii. 27.

e. Therefore baptism is essential.

12—a. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. vii. 21.

b. Baptism is a part of the will of the Father expressed through Christ and the Apostles. Mark xvi. 16; Acts ii. 38; x. 48.

c. Therefore one must be baptized.

13—a. A resurrection in the likeness of Christ is all-important. Phil. xxiii. 10; Phil. iii. 21; 1 John iii. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 45-49.

b. A means of obtaining this is by being planted together with him. Rom. vi. 5.

c. This planting is done by the act of baptism. Rom. vi. 3-5.

d. Therefore baptism is absolutely necessary.

14—a. Says God: "In all places where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee." Ex. xx. 24.

b. God now records his name in the institution of baptism. Matt. xxviii. 19.

c. Therefore for his presence and blessing we must come to the institution of baptism.

15—a. "Go ye, therefore, and teach (disciple) all nations, baptizing."

b. This discipling is done by baptizing them as a consummating act as the word indicates, and as Mr. Hibbard, the standard Methodist author on infant baptism, says, p. 96.

c. Therefore baptism to carry out the commission given to the Apostles must be obeyed.

Crenshaw, Crenshaw co., Ala., are requested to receive donations.

ILLINOIS, ETC.

To the scattered members of the Church of God scattered abroad, greeting: By the decision of the committee who had charge of our last annual meeting, to dispense with the usual place of holding a camp meeting of the churches in southeastern Missouri, southwestern Arkansas, and southern Illinois, the 14th, 15th, and 16th of August, (which will be both an unpleasant and inconvenient time for many,) we, and some half miles east of Phillips, Lawrence Co., Ill., about half way between Springfield and Carthage on the district road. We would invite all the churches in southwestern Missouri will convene at the same time and place, August 9. All coming from a distance will kindly bring with them a bottle of Elder Bo Rhea, who Providence has so blessed in the above named section. It is desired to meet the meeting should be well attended, as it may be the last general meeting of the three States—and we trust that all who feel so disposed will come, will not be over anxious what to be present, for all who can come prepared to take care of themselves, as there are but few of us in this vicinity. Let's have a good old-fashioned camp meeting, and we will do our very best to provide for all. There are many for whom that have been entertained by Brother Lee Palmer, that we hope to meet at this meeting, and there are many more whom we have no doubt the pleasure of seeing that we should be happy to meet at that time. Come one, come all, for we have a good time. We hope that all the churches in the three districts will send at least one representative, for as many more as convenient. Come by order of the church, come open your own authority, come prepared to take care of yourself, come four in a conference of you, come by conveyance or on foot as you may best suit your circumstances. Having met ourselves and built ourselves up in the most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, we will then be able to be of some benefit to the scattered, and that God will accept that effort, to the glory of your brother.

JAMES BELL, Pres.

MONTEREY, CALIFORNIA.

The first conference held in California by the faithful few, to meet as we can learn, will convene here 6th August, continuing to commence on or about the 23d, and including over two Sundays, if any of the preaching brethren happen not this way we should be very glad to hold as well to make this as convenient as possible, if they should choose to stop with us, that we may enough to assure help here. And if any of the brethren who have valuable notes that would do some good on this occasion, they will be gladly received by us.

CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE.

A conference for the members of the Church of God, of the state of California, is designed to be held at the Willow Slough School House, seven miles southeast of Woodland, in Yolo county, California, commencing on Friday, August 8th, at 3 o'clock, p. m., and to continue over the two following Sundays. The brethren and sisters in the state are especially invited to attend. In point of notice we are weak, and our numbers are about. We are living isolated from each other, and most of the brethren and sisters in the flesh. Therefore a meeting of this kind is desired, that the brethren and sisters may become acquainted with each other, and to adopt some plan of cooperation by which the gospel may be more effectually preached in places where persecution ceases to operate. The brethren are invited to come together for the purpose of this with other business which will come before the conference. We are living in perilous times, and what we do in sounding its word or deed others may hear, mind be observers. The brethren are making an effort to purchase a tent and have it ready by date of the conference. The tent is to be our meeting house in traveling over different portions of the state. Any brethren or sisters from any and all other states are invited and will be welcomed at the meeting. Bro. H. V. Reed is especially requested to make his undesignated wonderful visit at this time and attend the meeting. Will he comply with this request? Have answer. Any other preaching brethren who can see we would be glad to see come. Some desire to see this state, and would not like to see a good time to meet. Persons coming from the east by way of Sacramento, will take the railroad leading to Vallejo, but change cars at Davisville, and go north to Merritt's station, four miles distant. Those from the south, west or north, will go to Merritt's. The place of meeting is about three miles west of Merritt's station. Persons from 3 distance will please notify Brethren H. H. Hibbard, P. A. Arnold and T. Hagar, S. Woodland, when they will be at the station. Brethren and sisters, leave your cares and come! Let's see the days of Acts in action!

POETRY.

God's Way Right.

What God does is surely right;
For perfect is his will;
Whilst he my pathway ordereth
I gladly hold me still.
For he, my God, shall in my need
My guide and guardian be;
And naught I fear whilst this I know
He watcheth over me.

What God does is surely right,
He never can deceive;
Or those who in his love confide
Alone unaided leave.
In his protection I will trust,
And patient wait the day,
When, at his bidding, all my grief
Shall pass for aye away.

What God does is surely right,
His love can never fail;
No other remedies, but those
He gives me, can avail
To heal my wounds; I therefore bow
Submission to his will,
Upon his truth I build my hopes,
And trust his goodness still.

What God does is surely right,
He is my life and light,
Who nothing evil can ordain
To those who trust aright.
Though hidden are his dealings now,
The time fast draweth near
When all his wisdom, all his love
Shall openly appear.

What God does is surely right,—
Gives he a bitter cup,—
I will not fear but at his word
Obedient drink it up.
The day shall surely dawn at last
When peace shall overflow
My aching heart, and all my wounds
His healing touch shall know.

What God does is surely right,
This truth will I maintain;
Yea though my path in life should prove
Rough, thorny, full of pain.
My Heavenly Father's arm shall be
My never-failing stay;
And naught I fear whilst this I know
He ordereth all my way.

Intemperance.

COMPILED BY AUSTIN CURTIS.

Mankind have been cursed with the vice of drunkenness from time immemorial. The withering curse of intemperance numbers its victims by thousands at the present time. In the language of another, "The votaries of intemperance enter the downward path at every point in the social scale. They are drawn from all classes of society, from pulpit and press; from forum and senate; from the halls of science, and the haunts of toil; from the artisan's shop and the artist's studio; they range through every condition in life, from prince to peasant, and include all classes, civilized, savage, and barbarous. But whatever may be their starting point, they all at last reach a common level of wretchedness, misery and ruin. The brightest intellect sinks in imbecility and idiocy when once bowed beneath the sway of this demoniac power. Under the influence of this dire enchanter's spell the kind become cruel, the refined coarse, the gentle brutal, and the pure vile. Whatever a man may have been, let him once yield to the demon of strong drink and it requires no prophet to tell what he will be. He inevitably goes down. Manliness fades out of his nature, and the tokens of honesty, intelligence and integrity vanish from the face that is now flushed with excess, and jaded with riot and debauchery. He becomes a worthless idler, a miserable cumberer of the ground. In the busy hive of human toil there is little indeed that he can do, and he has no inclination to do even that. Poor, forlorn creature! An outcast from all that is high and holy! He may, at times, give a sober thought to the graves where slumber those whom once he loved, and whose love for him endured while life remained. But reflection is bitter to his soul. Memory stings him as with scorpion fangs. His brain, benumbed with poison, is no longer thrilled with thoughts that wander through eternity. And so he whose genius once irradiated the land, and whose eloquence charmed the listening multitude, now cracks his maudlin joke, sings his bacchanalian song, and so stupefies and benumbs himself that his pain and sorrow are forgotten."

Friends, is it a wonder that between seventy and eighty thousand persons annually fall victims to intemperance, when we realize that King Alcohol has an army of six hundred thousand tipplers who are forging their own fetters and writing their own death warrant? It is astonishing to think of such a vast army of men and women who are, by occasionally gratifying their abnormal appetite, forming a habit whose "persistent influence haunts like a spectre, clings like a relentless pain, and holds with a grip of tremendous power, which unmans manliness, dethrones the sovereignty of will, and threatens to abjure the power of grace itself."

"It calls for something more than brawn
Or muscle, to overcome,
A foe that maroheth not
With banner, plume and drum."

According to statisticians, there were, a few years ago, in the United States alone, twenty-nine thousand distilleries, and one hundred and thirty thousand liquor shops! There were two hundred and seventy thousand persons employed in the shops. This vast army of men annually distilled seventy-two million five hundred thousand gallons of liquor, which was yearly consumed by the people, (only a fractional part of it being used for mechanical purposes,) at an expense of one billion dollars.

The deterioration of labor in consequence of intemperance, amounts to one billion five hundred million dollars annually. Rum sickness costs ten million dollars. The courts and jails rum requires cost one million dollars. So much for the pecuniary aspect of this subject, which is now agitating the minds of candid men and women throughout the breadth of our land.

America has become famous for the civil and religious liberty vouchsafed to her inhabitants, and yet she has within her borders thousands of men and women who are abject slaves to an abnormal appetite. "The boon of freedom is one of God's greatest, grandest gifts, but there are chains that chafe deeper than any fetters man can forge; there are manacles that bind the soul, and drag it captive at Satan's chariot wheels."

"He alone whose ears are open to the lion's roar and the raven's cry can catch the numberless accents of that wail of incurable anguish and uncontrollable despair that has been wafted heavenward for generations, until the vault of heaven itself has become one vast whispering gallery to prolong and reverberate the groans of those who have slain their own peace by their voluntary empoisonment. He alone by whom the hairs of our heads are all numbered can count the widows who are widows because of drink; the mad men who are mad because of it; the gray heads it has made gray; the sad hearts it has o'ershadowed with sadness; the peaceful homes it has desolated; the bright and happy boys and girls it has blasted into shame and misery."

In the language of a noble temperance worker, Canon F. W. Farrar, I would ask: "What does the luxury of strong drink cost in human misery? Ah! how can I tell you? Can I count the leaves of the forest, or the sands upon the sea shore? And the sounds of this misery are like the sighing of the leaves of illimitable forests, and the plashing on the shores of unfathomable seas."

The following extract, from the pen of Mr. Carey, presents in terse language the work of strong drink:

"Strong drink cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affection, erases conjugal love, blots out real attachment, blights paternal hope, and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence, and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, poverty, disease and crime. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses and demands your asylums. It engenders controversy, fosters quarrels, and cherishes riots. It crowds your penitentiaries, and furnishes victims for your scaffolds. It is the life blood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, emboldens the thief, and encourages the blasphemer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud, and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue, and slanders innocence. It incites the father to butcher the helpless offspring, helps the husband to massacre his wife, and aids the child to grind the parricidal ax. It burns up man, consumes woman, blasts life, curses God, and despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perjury, defiles the jury box, and stains the judicial ermine. It bribes votes, disqualifies voters, corrupts elections, pollutes institutions, and endangers government. It degrades the citizen, debases the legislator, dishonors the statesman, and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness; and with the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and, unsatiated with its havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins mortals, blights confidence, slays reputation, and wipes out national honor; then curses the world and laughs at its ruin. It does all that and more. It murders the soul. It is the sum of all villainies, the father of all crimes, the mother of all abominations, Satan's best friend, and man's worst enemy."

In view of such terrible results, we are admonished by the inspired penman, "Be not among wine bibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh; for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags." Prov. xxiii. 20.

"Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." Prov. xxiii. 29-32.

"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. xx. 1. "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them;" or, according to the marginal reading, "till wine pursue them." Isa. v. 11. They first follow strong drink," until an appetite, or thirst is created for the burning fiery fluid of death; then it pursues them. Instead of being the victors they are the victims. Persons who habitually follow gayety, feasting and drunkenness, "regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands." Verse 12. "They also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink; they are swallowed up of wine; they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment." Isaiah. xxviii. 1, 7.

The fearful denunciations of God's Word rest alike upon the rumdrinker and the rumseller. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest the bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness." Hab. ii. 15.

"Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe unto that man by whom the offense cometh." Matt. xviii. 7. "Woe unto the wickedl it shall be ill with him: for the reward of his hand shall be given him." Isa. iii. 10, 11.

Such are the expressions of the peerless Book of the Ages. Just as truly as God loves virtue, he hates vice; and intemperance is a vice. Drunkards are classed with the worst of sinners, and drunkenness is ranked with the foulest of crimes. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in times past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. v 11; vi. 9, 10; Gal. v. 19-21. Drunkenness is the crowning apex in in the great pyramid of crime, with its base set deep in the wickedness and depravity of the unregenerate heart, for "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?" Jer. xvii. 9.

A gifted author recently stated, in an able article on intemperance, published in a Boston paper, The Wayside, the following suggestive thoughts:

"No matter what the station or capabilities of a man may have been; no matter what he is competent to perform, or what he is expected to do, drunkenness ruins and incapacitates him for the performance of any duty or the accomplishment of any good. One indication of the untold horrors of this curse is found in the fact that drunkenness is held as a sufficient explanation of any conduct of any one, no matter how irrational, criminal or outrageous it may be. Drunkenness may not always excuse evil conduct, but it always explains it. If a doctor kills his patient, a commander wrecks his vessel, a general loses his army, a rich man comes to poverty, a business man becomes bankrupt; or if a man is cheated, swindled, robbed and ruined; if a church member swears, or a peaceable man fights, or a quiet man makes night hideous with his brawling, or a minister of the gospel falls into deep disgrace, these three words, 'He was drunk,' so fully explain the whole that no one thinks of seeking any further solution of the mystery. No man is astonished at anything which a drunken man does. Men may be astonished that he should touch the intoxicating cup, but when once a man has come beneath its influence, when the frenzy of insanity is upon him, it is well understood that he is so utterly irresponsible that nothing which he can do can be a matter of surprise. And now the question arises, What right has any man to incur the possibility of such crimes and calamities as are lurking within this deadly cup? He who shuns the poisonous draft, who does not look upon the wine when it is red, and who abhors strong drink escapes all these ills. He who dares to tamper with the temptation, or to indulge in the least degree in this unholy habit, runs the risk of sinking into the depths of ruin and despair. He allows himself for an hour to become a madman, and that hour may suffice to blight his hopes and wreck his life."

"If persons could see the end of their course from the beginning, there are many who would turn from the path they are pursuing. But unhappily many persons, closing their eyes to the results of their actions, and following the lead of passion and appetite rather than of judgment and conscience, drift thoughtlessly on, and do not dream of danger until they are engulfed in ruin.

"The man who undertakes the sale of intoxicating drinks acts with a certain amount of foresight and forethought. It may be presumed that what he does he intends to do, as the course he pursues tends to his own pecuniary advantage; and yet probably very few dealers in intoxicating beverages have ever honestly and squarely looked their business in the face, and candidly considered its terrible results. If at the beginning of a druseller's career, he could be confronted with the entire results of his lifelong traffic in intoxicating drinks; if he could see before him as he obtained his license, the whole dark array of trouble, sorrow, pain, disease and death which would result from the business which he undertakes; if he could see the sad procession of widows and orphans, of criminals, paupers, and maniacs ruined by his agency; if he could hear the cries of children, the complaints of wives, and the horrid shrieks of the demented victims of his avarice and their own lust; if the panorama could be widened until it should take in the whole array of giant evils flowing from his traffic, and extended until amid the awful splendors of the judgment day he should meet the question: 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?'—surely he would shrink back with instant horror from the fearful sight, and dash to the earth as an accursed thing that cup which he is now putting to his neighbor's lips to make him drunken."

"So, on the other hand, if he who first enters the gilded saloon of the dramseller, and who there first drinks the intoxicating draught, could read his own history as it is read by the omniscient eye; if he when looking upon the redness of the sparkling wine, could see hidden beneath its ruby depths the serpent which at last should sting his soul with agony, and twine around his shuddering form its slippery coil; if he could see that in that haunt of pleasure he should lose not only his happiness but the very power to be happy—not only every enjoyment; if he could see that there lay before him sorrow and darkness, anguish and despair, and that the wife he had vowed to cherish and the children he so tenderly loved would lose in that cup, home, and wealth, and joy, and hope, and sink down in sorrow, bitterness, and despair; if he could see as a result of his entering that place of mirth and revelry, a ruined constitution, a blighted life, a desolate home, broken hearts, and a dark, dishonored grave;—surely he would pause upon the threshold, and looking up and reading above the doorway:

"Abandon hope,
All ye who enter here,"

he would start back astonished at the awful sight, and would flee for his life to escape a doom so dark and dire. Alas, that men's eyes should be so holden, so closed to all their interests; alas, that although all this is so clearly visible to "the prudent man," who "foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself;" yet, as of old, "the simple pass on, and are punished." Prov. xxii. 3.

"Perhaps nothing more clearly shows the fearful peril of the drunkard's course than a comparison of the condition of the families of the rum-drinker and the rum-seller. They start alike, in comfortable circumstances, young, prosperous, healthy, happy, and respectable, but from the time one man becomes the rum-seller and the other a rum-drinker, a change is constantly going on. As one ascends in the scale of wealth and comfort, the other descends with still greater rapidity. As the dramseller's wife adorns herself with gems and jewels, the dramdrinker's wife begs vainly for needful clothing for her little ones. As the dram-seller's family gather around him and talk of pleasures, friends, amusements, and delights, the dramdrinker's wife in her comfortless home looks upon the wreck of all her hopes, a drunken husband, over whom she weeps with unavailing pity, while her wretched children look upon him with disgust and fear. And as the years roll on she sees no brighter prospect before her; each successive day sets in still darker night. The transient penitence and the futile resolves of the enthralled victim give no encouragement of permanent reformation; the dreams of her happy girlhood days have ended in blackness and despair; struggling beneath crushing poverty, burdened with a disgrace which she no longer tries to hide, she waits in sad suspense the blow by which a madman's hand may end her own wretched life, or the frenzied hour when, in some nightly carousal, he may provoke the terrors of the law, and find himself an inmate of a murderer's cell.

"While the strains of music float through the spacious mansion of the dealer in strong drink, and his family clad in purple and fine linen, fare sumptuously every day, while social pleasures brighten their luxurious home, the dramdrinker's dwelling is the scene of furious anger and brutal rage, of blows and shrieks and wanton devastation, until the helpless victims of a husband's wrath and a father's violence, fly from a home which has been to them but an earthly hell, and seek protection from the cruelty of him who has vowed to be their protector and friend.

"Such are the natural results of the drunkard's evil course; such are the legitimate fruits of the rum-seller's fearful traffic. Who would enter the beginning of this path, could they clearly see its end?"

Some individuals who are addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks, seem to think that the vice of intemperance is a thing of small account; that it is of little moment whether a man lives a life of sobriety or drunkenness, apparently forgetting that "it is impossible for us to rightly estimate the consequence of any sinful act. That which may seem of the smallest moment to us, is perhaps the most important event in our whole lives. The waving of the banner may effect more than the firing of a gun; and some twinkling beacon light, lit by a childish hand upon a distant hill, may be fraught with greater consequence than the fierce onset of ten thousand men. A speck of dust in a chronometer may send a noble vessel wide of its course, crushing upon some rock-bound shore. An iron filing lying near a compass, may work the ruin of the ship and the loss of all on board. We speak of little sins, but one little decayed spot will spoil the fairest fruit; one little pimple may eat out a human life; one little match may kindle a wholocity in flames; one little plague spot may poison a nation; one little tongue may ruin the peace of neighbors and communities, by setting on fire the course of nature,—it being itself on fire of hell; one little word may blast a cherished reputation or break a loving heart; one little example may turn the feet of some bewildered child into the ways of death; one little key may unlock the hoarded treasures of a lifetime; and one little unguarded gate may cause the downfall of a city which no enemy was strong enough to take by storm. Beware then of undervaluing little things. Only God who sees the connection of all things can tell us what is important and what is of small account."

Many a strong man has been brought down to a pauper's grave in a potter's field by the insidious habit of imbibing intoxicating drinks. Alexander, who conquered the world, was himself conquered by wine. Men should emulate the noble example of the Rechabites of old, in firmly resisting temptation. See Jer. xxxv. 1-6, 8, 14, 16, 18, 19. Anciently, young men, who were incorrigible gluttons and drunkards, were delivered into the hands of the elders of the city, to be stoned to death. Deut. xxi. 18-21. The contagious example of drunkenness had to be removed from their midst. Aside from the millions of money annually squandered in this unholy traffic, persons who are addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks are the losers also in physical strength, intellectual power, and moral worth. Who that loves God and man, and pities sorrow and distress, can fail to put forth earnest and persistent efforts to abate this terrible curse, and carry to these lost ones that Gospel which has power to save from this terrible sin, and to produce that temperance against which "there is no law." Gal. v. 22, 23. There are motives pure as God's throne and weighty as eternity, to induce fallen men and women to reform.

All the glories of futurity are held out as incentitives to purity and virtue. In the words of Eld. Platt, "Here are those with inborn perversities—proclivities to evil so reprobate that they seem begotten of the devil, and hunger, like death, for pollution; proclivities that so take hold on hell, that attraction, and affinity and momentum all impel with infernal power toward the pit. Hear ye fiend-crowded, passion goaded victims, hear! The strong hand of omnipotent arrest is by your side, the spirit of divine assurance pulses in the air, while, sweetly as the voice of benediction scoudeth in your ears, 'My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness.'" 2 Cor. xii. 9. Here are victims of diseased or perverted organizations, hanging a pall of despondency over the earth, and veiling out the glories of the skies by the mists of doubt; or, irritable as the charged battery, answering with a spark of fire to every adverse touch, or, lusting, like the open grave, to find their fill of pollution,—goaded, lashed, frenzied, hell-struck by desire,—the barriers of judgment worn down by mere attrition, conscience worn out by ceaseless strife, the opposition of the better nature trampled beneath the heels of the massed charge of wild, rampant passion. Good heavens, what a life! But hark! The glorious old apostle to the Gentiles (those people steeped in corruption and rotten to the core) is ready for us as well as for them, as he hurls across the seething gulf of human perversities the God-given assurance. (1 Cor. x. 13.) "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Make way for liberty! was the commanding challenge of Switzerland's noble son, as he gathered a score of thirsty spear points of his country's embattled foes in his arms and cushioned them in his heart. Liberty rushed through the broken ranks of leveled weapons and Switzerland was free. Make a way to escape! was the sentiment of the dying Son of God, as he bared his heart to all the barbed darts of darkness, and charging ranks of deliverance have ever since swept through that breach to the rescue of the trusting, tempted ones."

"It is a horrible fact that the drink, which we, as a nation, are drinking, not from the necessities of thirst, but from the mere luxuries of appetite, drink often adulterated with the vilest and most maddening ingredients,—yea this rubied and Circean cup which we sip and smile while it is converting thousands of our brethren into swine—this subtile, serpentine, insidious thing which we cherish in our bosoms, and laugh and play with its brightness while it is stinging thousands of our brothers into raging madness—costs us, as I have shown, millions of money, myriads of criminals, thousands of paupers, thousands of ruined women, hundreds of thousands of men and women, goaded by misery into suicide or madness, with every blossom in what might have been the garland of their lives, blighted as by a Fury's breath. And again I say: 'Is it nothing to you all, ye that pass by?' Is it nothing to you, young men, who, if you be worth anything at all, better than to cumber the barren ground of wasted and useless lives, will be called upon, a year or two hence, to take up your cross, and the mirth and brightness of youth being ended, to take your happy and holy part when God shall place you in the ranks of the great battle against sin and death; shall it be nothing to you that the blood of your brothers and sisters in this great family of God is being daily poured out upon the alters of this deadlier Moloch of a Tophet more awful than that of Hinnom's Vale; while in disavowing that you are your brother's keeper, you become his Cain?"

A recent traveler in Palestine was astonished by the number and preservation of roads built in the Roman era. They were laid out on all main routes, and were constructed so perfectly that in many sections they endure to-day as well as if finished not long ago. The country of Palestine was one of the most difficult sort to carry a system of roadways over, and yet its obstacles were surmounted with the least possible expenditure of labor. Every route was curbed on each side by lines of stones projecting from one to two feet above the surface of the soil; between these boundaries the avenue was paved; streams were crossed by bridges, whose style remains preserved alone in those of Italy to the present hour—as, for example, those of Venice; valleys were traversed by viaducts; and causeways carried the line up or down mountain sides, either by piers of masonry or in channels sufficiently wide cut out of living rock. Often zig zags and steps were resorted to in climbing steep ascents. Whenever the street passed over solid rock, the wear of chariot wheels in the course of time made ruts, which remain to-day as plain and deep as when the last car passed over.

Interesting news comes from Berne, Switzerland, of the discovery of the remains of an old Roman military encampment in a woody peninsula in the Aar, near the town of Berne. A number of houses in good condition have been unearthed, and a large quantity of interesting archæological remains, vases, weapons, &c., have been found. Curiously enough the half of a large vase, which forms part of the trouvaille, is found to be the wanting portion of a broken vase which is already in the Berne Museum.

TO CORRESPONDENTS,

THE RESTITUTION acts under the dual "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the bodily resurrection of the dead; the final exaltation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a heart belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life essential for final salvation.

The Sabbath—Or the Gospel, Not the Law.

J. B. COOK.

The wise man builds on the rock; the foolish builds on facts and inferences aside from it "on the sand." Matt. vii. 24-27; Mark ii. 21 28.

The strong point is that we can not build on both! As all Christians do wish (or profess) to build on "the Rock of ages," Isa. xxvi. 4, margin; it is delusive to attempt to confound what God has made so distinctive. We can not serve two masters, Moses and Christ.

1. "The sermon on the mount opens the way of life to us and forms the rock" on which the Great Teacher Messiah will build his church. Matt. xvi. 16-18. On this we may build our blessed hope of all gospel grace that prepares for the glory of the kingdom to come. All inferences from "the law" to complete this foundation are foreign to the gospel. They are "old bottles" that cannot hold "the new wine." They belong to the "old garment" which "the new cloth" will not mend, but make the rent worse! Mark ii. 21-23.

These two parables open up to the Sabbath question. The Pharisees were mighty to enforce the Sabbath. But Jesus turned their own Scriptures directly against them for accusing his Apostles. He pronounced them, so accused, "guiltless," and made it "lawful (like the priest in temple) to do good on the Sabbath day." Matt. xii. 1-7. Now, let any who feel competent, succeed better than did the Pharisees, in mending "the Old Covenant" by an insertion from "the new!" But, no; the two dispensations are distinct. It is "the foolish man," who, admitting Jesus' Messiahship, presumes to build on it his "hay, wood and stubble"—his inferences from the law, like the Pharisees, or from himself and science. "The wise man builds on "the Rock of ages." He builds with gospel material—"gold, silver and precious stones." He accepts "the righteousness of God by faith in Jesus—the Mediator of the New Covenant." He takes "the new wine into new bottles and both are preserved!" Matt. ix. 14. Wisdom and folly belong to the builders. Wisdom builds on "the Rock." Folly builds, like the Pharisees, on the sand. Wisdom says: "Ye are complete in him—as Christ is the end of the law, for righteousness, to every one that believeth." Folly makes "Christ of no effect" by being "justified by the law," and so, such "are on the sand—fallen from grace!" Gal. iii. 2; v. 1-4; Rom. iii. to x. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. iii. 11. The believer hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation, (by Sabbath, or otherwise) but is passed from death (under the law) unto life." John v. 24; Rom. viii. 1, and verses 31-39.

2. On what does the voice of God centre our faith throughout this gospel age? On Jesus; "Hear ye him!" Matt. xvii. Moses and the prophets, Saints Paul and Peter, echo the same. "Him shall ye hear in all things whatever he shall say unto you." Acts iii. 22; Rom. iii. 21 31; Eph. ii. 20; Rev. xix. 10.

3. Under what law are we then? Answer. "We are under law to Christ." Rom. viii. 2; 1 Cor. ix. 21. "Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace!" Rom. vi. 14; vii. 6. "The ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, but much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory!" That, as a system, was "abolished—done away." This, "which remaineth, is more glorious." For, by this, "all that believe are justified from all things (Sabbath law, etc.) from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Acts xiii. 39; 2 Cor. iii. 7-11.

The priesthood being changed (from Aaron to Christ) there is made, of necessity, a change also of the law." It is a change from "the Old" to the "New;" from Moses to Christ; from "the Old Covenant" to the New! "All things to be new." Heb. viii. 13; 2 Cor. v. 17 21; Rev. xxi. 5. This leaves no occasion for a single patch of "the old garment."

4. But, does not our Lord embrace "the law and the prophets—every jot and tittle—till all be fulfilled?" Yes; precisely so. This is our platform—"the Rock." The mistake lies in your presuming to merge "the law" into "the gospel,"—to put the "new wine into the old bottles," where "the wine runneth out and the bottles perish!"

In contrast, "the gospel" puts the Christian "in Christ, to appear in white robes, the righteousness of saints! the Bride of the Lamb!" Rev. xix. 7-9; Eph. ii. 3-7; v. 32. This is "the name of the Lord—an high tower"—beyond the reach of "condemnation" from whatever law. Hence, there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, Rom. viii. 1; John vi. 39, 40. He has obeyed the law of sin and death! "Death hath no more dominion over!"

True, the Pharisees who knew not Jesus to be the Christ, tried to condemn the Apostles for breaking the Sabbath; but the Judge himself, pronounced them "guiltless." "If ye had known what this meaneth; 'I will have mercy and not sacrifice;' ye would not have condemned the guiltless." Matt. xii. 7; Hosea vi. 6; Micah vi. 6-8; Psa. l. 7-15; 1 Sam. xv. 22; James ii. 13.

This doctrine, personified in Jesus, is the rock—bottom truth, that takes precedence of all ritualism, Sabbatic or sacrificial. Hence, "Christ is the end of the law, for righteousness" to all true believers. Rom. x. 3-11.

5. To crown all proof to open the subject to the apprehension of the humblest Christian—I remark that "God is never a hard master." He never reaps, except where he has first sown." He demands obedience where he leads the way, and makes it righteous and consistent. He "remembered the Sabbath day" and provided for its observance, just as he revealed "the sanctuary" and provided skilled labor and abundant material for its erection! Exodus xxv. 7; xxxi. 1-10; Exodus xvi. 27-29. God said "It is a sign between me and you." Exodus xxxi. 12-17; Lev. xix. 30; xxvi. 2.

Then he remembered to give them food in advance, and also, to work a four-fold miracle for every Sabbath day; through their first forty years, (over eight thousand in all). Nay, he did the same for "the Sabbath year!"—and thence on, seven times seven years, to the jubilee, in "the fiftieth year!" Lev. xxv. 1-13.

This was national and dispensational—the Prophet, Priest and King—the Sabbath, sanctuary and sacrifice—the altar, the incense and hallowed fire, were each parts of the one system—"a shadow of good things to come." Heb. x., "In the world to come," and altogether under Christ the antitype, will be consistent! The Sabbath, sanctuary and miraculous provision will open and crown "the day of God!" Then, the city to come, the kingdom to come, and the rest (the Sabbatism that remaineth) will have come, and "all flesh see the salvation of our God." Luke iii. 4-6; Psa. xcviii. 2; Isa. lii. 10.

This dispensational view of the Sabbath, and all like questions, commends itself to every man's conscience in the sight of God. Yet some will go back of the Rock and take one part of the law, while others take other parts, and thus we see rents "made worse" all through Christendom! Hence, the ragged and tattered, the striped and pendent "garments" of all sectarian Christendom, present a painful contrast to the seamless robe of Christ—"the truth as it is in Jesus"—supreme and all-saving! There is, however, no occasion or excuse left for thus turning from "the gospel" to "the law" that always cursed, but never did justify or save a single soul. Gal. iii. 10.

Those who are tempted to build under the "yoke of the law" which none could "bear," Acts xv. 7-11, should learn to take "the yoke of Christ, which is easy and light." Matt. xi. 30. That condemns, this justifies and glorifies.

The Sabbath is urged because it is named over forty times. But the priesthood over seventy times, (but pleads for Jewish priests); the sacrifice over forty times; the temple over thirty times; the altar over twelve times; and other terms relating to the Mosaic ritual, manifold more times. But while the Sabbatarian assumes its binding authority on Christians, he ignores all the rest, and so should stand convicted of his folly and falsity. They all belong together as parts of "the law." It was, "do and live," or omit and die!

Surely every motive to accept of the promise of pardon and "perfection" by faith in the mercy of God, should constrain us to leave "the law," as Christ has done for him to fulfill.

The precepts of the law that belong to us in common with Israel, in our human relations, are re-inforced, and made a part of the Christian code of morals; while "the fourth command" of the decalogue is not so noted at all!

All the wondrous acts that culminated in "the Old Covenant" bound Israel to obey God as he commanded by Moses, so all the miraculous events at the coming of Christ, in mercy to forgive and save, bind us to hear him; and build our faith, and hope on his higher teaching. For Moses and Moses' God say, "Hear ye him! obey him!" Our standing is not on a righteousness of law, but of grace. Rom. v. 21; 1 Cor. xv. 1; 1 Pet. v. 12. "Sin hath reigned unto death, but now grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life" by Christ.

The Feet—How Made Beautiful.

BY ASA W. BUTTON.

The Hebrews used to express any religious or moral condition by the feet. The firmness in integrity was the sure standing of the feet. The weakness of yielding to enticements and temptations would be expressed by the feet sliding. The feet represent standing, motion, progress, as well in morals as in natural functions.

"As for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well nigh slipped." What was the cause? It was the same that has shaken the integrity, for a time, of many a good man with his human feelings. It was dissatisfaction. "For I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked."

Again: "He brought me up out of a horrible pit, and out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise into our God." There is a sorrowful song in Psa. li., which was pleading for forgiveness. It is suspected that the "horrible pit and miry clay" was the terrible depth fallen into for the sake of the wife of Uriah; for in that matter his feet stuck fast in the clay of a deep pit of moral horror. He wrote his penitence in the Psalm referred to, and God signified his forgiveness. But trouble always followed this fall. He never was fully cleared of it. Like a man broken, his bones, so to speak, ever after felt the pain, although he praised God for deliverance.

Another: "He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places," signifying his ability, we suppose, to maintain himself in the high and difficult places of the kingly office, as this kind of sure-footed deer could go safely on high peaks of mountains, inaccessible to other less sure-footed quadrupeds.

Habakkuk, in the last verse of his most sublime prophetic poem, iii. 19, uses nearly the same words in relation to his feet: "The Lord God is my strength, and he will make my feet like hinds' feet, and he will make me to walk upon mine high places." While the troubles of the Jews were great by the warlike Chaldeans, he would walk over the calamities on the moral altitude of faith and trust in God, like the sure-footed hind; as the hope of Israel was secure in God.

But the oddest and most fanciful Hebraism alluding to the feet is that which embellishes them with beauty, as: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, and publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good; that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." Isa. lii. 7. There is certainly the great charm of beauty in such good tidings of Zion's future. And there is an enchantment in the hope with such a strong support as that of the assurance that it is Zion's God who reigns. And so the good tidings of good cannot miscarry. We can easily see the beauty and enjoy the faithfulness of God in his herein declared adhesion to his design of bringing the Deliverer out of Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, so that all Israel's remnant shall be saved; the manifest token of which is the causing the good tidings of this to be published on Israel's mountains for the support of hope.

But with all this joy of good to come, how do the tidings give beauty to the feet of the publisher?

"How beauteous are their feet
Who stand on Zion's hill,
Who bring salvation on their tongues,
And words of peace reveal.
How charming is their voice!
How sweet the tidings are."

Yes, very, very true and beautiful, put into rythmic measure, but nothing is explained. Often in youthful anxiety to understand, we found a problem here not at all easy of solution, how and wherein the beauty of the feet could be made apparent, Not in form, shape or size; not in artistic ornament. Goliath had boots of brass, and Homer's heroes, we believe, had foot gear, also, of brass and some of copper. When you go among people in these times, they first hastily glance in your face, briefly noting your features, then down along your apparel to your feet. They make an estimate; they judge, they place you; your standing and worth relatively. Who is not subjected to this scrutiny of the feet, whether a passenger in the street car or on the crowded steamer? We suppose the half sensible and superficial enjoy this reading of the boots. We suppose a sort of relish and respect is felt for you, though it may be weak and small, if they discover the finest material and make, and a polish like the mirror, on your boots. Of what worth, though, to a sensible man, is the valuation awarded him by the beautiful leather that clothes his feet?

"Worth makes the man,
And want of it the fellow."

Truly. But is a man's worth in the leather on his feet? Ten dollars is about all the worth you can put on in boots. Put on forty to seventy dollars more in apparel, and you have a man just as he stands or sits, worth about eighty dollars. And this is a cheap man. If you have got his whole worth in the computation.

Bobby Burns, the poet, met a man and manifested much pleasure in shaking his hand warmly. "I wondered," said an acquaintance, "at your cordiality With that man." "Indeed! why?" said Bobby. "Did you look at his butes?" said the friend. "Oh," he said, "I was glad to see the man, not his butes." Bobby Burns had sense enough to forget the boots. I beg pardon for this digression. I had a chance to kick folly, and I could not neglect it. Pray excuse it.

The striking beauty of the feet, as we take it from Isaiah, consisted in no adorning that art could attain. It was the office and the qualification consisting of a rare mental store of wealth of the peculiar material that imparted the beauty to the feet.

Let us attempt to explain our idea. Moses, in Deut. xxxiii. 3, says of Jehovah: "Yea, he loveth the people; all his saints are in thy hand; and they sit down at thy feet; every one shall receive of thy words." It was an honorable place for men, figuratively sitting at such feet. It was distinguishingly blessed to receive light from such a source.

Mary, an interested and attentive hearer of the discourse of Christ, not necessarily crouching low down at his feet, yet it is recorded that "Mary sat at Jesus' feet and heard his word." To Christ's believing disciples the place of hearing was attractive. The sweet simplicity of his speech, the beauty of his uttered thoughts, the heart-cheering matter of the good tidings of the coming kingdom of God, affirming and confirming the hope of Israel, and making it an expectation perfectly safe and secure—as God is Zion's God, and reigneth—with such words as: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Such hope-giving and hope-confirming matter made the place of the learner at the feet of the Teacher beautiful, by the beauty of the matter disclosed. And by a Hebraism, or a Jewish turn of thought—by a simple metaphor, as we should say, cause the expression, "How beautiful are the feet of him that bringeth" these "good tidings of good tidings," instead of a strictly literal phraseology. So the beauty of the message was expressed by transferring the beauty to the feet of the messenger, near which the listener sat. And the feet of Jesus and the feet of the Apostles were beautiful on the mountains of Israel because of the glad tidings expounded to the listeners at their feet.

A lady of intelligence once said to the writer, "You have a beautiful theory of religion," but she was too deep in sectarian doctrines to embrace its beauty. At another time, another, with remarkable clearness of perception, in answer to the writer's explanations, said, "You have a beautiful religion, but I don't believe it." Alas! it was apparently too good and too beautiful in the estimation of these intelligent persons, to be true. Its very beauty made it suspicious and repulsive.

This is very terrible, that this, "The thing of beauty, should not be the thing of joy, forever." But if rejecters, even, are constrained to confess the glad tidings beautiful, are not the feet of those who now faithfully unfold the design of him who built the universe, and made it so grand, made beautiful according to the Hebrew mode of expression, by the sweet message they proclaim?

Paul "brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers." But the feet of this law teacher are not called beautiful, for there was none of God's beauty in the matter and manner of the law as the doctors taught it. A perversion of Divine truth destroyed its beauty. It neither retains its symmetry of proportions or its pure bright color and glory when men attempt on it their manipulations.

In the beautiful allegory in Eph. vi. 10-17, drawn by Paul, the whole armor of God is described from the head to the feet. The latter are to be adorned thus: "And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." The preparation does not mean an improvement or working and dressing over the crude article. It is a preparation acquired by learning and obtaining a full knowledge of the theory and its application, just as it stands in its own presence and rich fulness. This would cover the feet with the beauty of the message of Zion's peace, according to the idea of Isaiah. It is a more lustrous coveting than the boots of shining brass or copper. It would fit the Christian warrior to march against the rulers of the darkness of this age, and conquer ignorance and subdue darkness—to dispatch error and whatever high things that are met exalting themselves against the knowledge of God. Such is the gospel of peace that clothes the feet. Paul took the idea from the prophet, and did not modernize it, or change its form, or weight it with additions.

It was the preacher's errand to men to publish tidings of future peace to Zion. Of this Paul has left his endorsement. Rom. x. 15. It anticipated this, namely, "For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my Redeemed is come." Isa. lxiii. 4. It is the gospel of the kingdom of God preached in all the world.

Gibeonites that come with craft and falsehood, have "old shoes and clouted on their feet." "Their garments are old and their bread is dry and musty." Joshua ix. 8. There is no beauty on the feet of such messengers. Let us have the beautiful message.

It is rough work that polishes. Look at the pebbles on the shore! For Ireland, where some arm of the sea thrust itself deep into the bosom of the land, and expanding into a salt loch, lies girdled by the mountains, sheltered from the storms that agitate the deep, the pebbles on the beach are rough, not beautiful; angular, not rounded. It is where long white lines of breakers roar, and the rattling shingle is rolled along the strand, that its pebbles are rounded and polished. As in nature, as in art, so in grace; it is rough treatment that gives souls, as well as stones, their lustre. A great invasion of kangaroos recently occurred in various parts of Australia, especially Queensland, the animals being, no doubt, driven from the interior by the drought and its effects in search of food. They came in thousands, devouring everything in the shape of herbs or grain, so that the sheep and cattle were often reduced to dry leaves for fodder. The colonists promptly met the attack, in some cases driving the kangaroos into an enclosure and shooting them. In the battle more than 4,000 kangaroos were killed in four days.

ON Friday evening, Aug. 9, a destructive tornado swept over portions of eastern New York, the New England states, and Canada, doing immense damage by lightning, wind and floods. In the village of Wallingford, Conn., a school house, a church, forty houses and fifty barns, were demolished. From twenty to thirty persons were killed and many more badly injured.

BUSINESS has been almost suspended in New Orleans on account of the prevalence of yellow fever. There were 406 cases of this disease there last week, of which 126 proved fatal. The disease, at latest accounts, was not only spreading in the city, but extending to other localities in the southwest. In Granada, to which place thousands of the citizens had fled, the fever has made its appearance, and there were twenty-one deaths out of 112 cases. At some other points along the river cases are reported, some proving fatal.

STRONG reasons are said to exist for believing that the English government intends to gain a footing in Asia Minor. A port on the Iskanderoon Gulf, with which the town of Aleppo, seventy miles inland, is in commercial communication, is said to be the objective point. Aleppo is situated on the only safe and feasable route between Syria and eastern Asia, and is the great center of the Damascus and Bagdad caravans. England is evidently grasping for the control of eastern commerce.

ALTHOUGH the Russians are preparing to withdraw their troops from the conquered Turkish towns, in compliance with treaty obligations, yet Muscovite ambition is as restless as ever. It is now stated that Russia has sent an accredited representative to Labul the capital of Northern Afghanistan, and that this mission was received with high honors. It is said that the expedition aims at the occupation of certain localities reducing the distance between Russia and India to 325 miles. A leading French paper looks upon this movement as a grave affair.

IT appears that the territorial changes made by the Berlin congress are not of a satisfactory nature to the populations of the provinces concerned. The occupation of Bosnia by Austria is sternly resisted by native inhabitants, and the Austrian army is said to have lost 1,000 men already, though so far victorious. In Asia the local chiefs have decided to resist the occupation of Batoum by the Russians. The people are arming and preparing to oppose the possession of their country by force. The dis-affected insurgent mountaineers number 20,000.

BY the latest dispatches it appears that there is an actual state of war in Bosnia. The advance of the Austrian army of occupation meets with the most determined resistance. There is said to be a formidable force of 100,000 armed men opposing the possession of the provinces by Austria, composed of Bosnians, Turks, Albanians, and Arnavts. In a battle on the 8th, the Bosnians are reported to have lost 500 killed and 700 prisoners. In two several engagements the Austrians lost seven officers and 100 men were wounded. Thus it seems that assured peace has not been the immediate result of diplomacy.

The Relationship Between Apostasia and Aphistemi.

Will you give me your views of the relationship between ἀποστασια—apostasia—and ἀφιστημι—aphistemi?

T. W.

The noun apostasia is derived from the verb aphistemi, which occurs fifteen times in the original of the New Testament, and which is defined to put away, depart, withdraw, induce to revolt, fall away, etc. Some verbs in Greek have three voices, of which the active voice expresses an action passing over from the subject to some object when the verb is transitive; the middle voice denotes an action that the subject performs on itself, the subject being, therefore, both agent and object; while the passive voice denotes an action of which the subject is the recipient. The verb aphistemi has two of these voices,—the active and the middle, and the passive is wanting. Now, while it is true that the action in every instance specifies some kind of personal departure, it must be borne in mind that the person is never the recipient of the action in the sense of being acted upon by another, although in the middle voice of this verb the subject is both agent and object. In Acts xii. 10 it is said "the angel departed—apestee—from him." This, and some other like cases are examples of the active voice indicating simply removal. In Luke ii. 37, we have an example of the middle voice, where, speaking of Anna, it is said that "she departed—aphistato—not from the temple," which means that she did not withdraw herself from the worship of God in the sacred place. Again, Luke viii. 13, those on the rock represent the ones that in time of temptation fall away—aphistantai—where the meaning is, they separate themselves from discipleship. In 1 Tim. iv. 1, it is predicted that "some shall depart—apostesontai—from the faith," which means, by the force of the middle voice, that they shall veer or disunite themselves from the faith. Now, the noun ἀποστασια—apostasia—is derived, both in its form and signification, from ἀφιστημι—aphistemi—in its reflective meaning, and, consequently, expresses in substantive form that kind of action where the agent is both subject and object—action terminating on ones self. Apostasia occurs only twice in the New Testament, once in Acts xxi. 21, which, literally rendered, reads: "They are informed concerning thee, that thou teachest an abandonment, or renunciation—apostasian—of Moses." The other occurrence is 2 Thess. ii. 3, where it is foretold that the day of Christ will not come without a certain departure—apostasia—taking place beforehand, which, from etymological reasons, we are compelled to take in the reflective sense of a self-separation. Compare apostesontai, which is a future indicative middle, as it occurs in 1 Tim. iv. 1, with the derivative apostasia from the middle voice form of the same verb, and the signification of the noun becomes clearly apprehensible as an act of self-removal. Its meaning is the abandonment of some cause or defection from some party. The verb has no passive voice; hence its derivations of the substantive form can not mean a passive removal effected by another.

1 Cor. xv. 29.

Editor Restitution:—Please explain the preposition for in 1 Cor. xv. 29. Does the Greek word there used ever indicate place, in the sense of over or above?

Your brother in the faith.

J. G. HAUPT.

The passage referred to above reads: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" The phrase involving the preposition is Επει τι ποιησουσιν οι βαπτιζομενοι υπερ των νεκρων, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead?"

Macknight supplies the words τον αναστασιν— "the resurrection"— and reads: "Otherwise what shall they do who are baptized for the resurrection of the dead if the dead rise not at all? and why are they baptized for the resurrection of the dead?"

The Greek preposition υπερ, huper, means over, above, and beyond, when followed by an accusative case; when followed by a noun or pronoun in the genitive it is used to denote purpose, or, in general, that in respect to which anything is done. In the verse under consideration the preposition is followed by a noun and its preceding article, both of which are in the genitive, and the word for, denoting purpose, is grammatically correct.

The preposition occurs 106 times in the Greek of the New Testament and is translated for in the Common version 103 times. It is followed by an accusative sixteen times, when it is translated either above or more than in fourteen places, and in one beyond, and in another to. In Luke xxii. 19, 20, the reading, "My body which is given for you," and "My blood which is shed for you," gives us a very good idea of the genitive of purpose.

Christ lays down his life for the sheep —for his friends—for the people; the Spirit maketh intercession for us—for the saints; prayer is to be made by "one for another"—"for all men." These and many other instances illustrate the sense of the Greek genitive, in respect to, as given in the best grammars of the language.

The accusative occurs Matt. x. 24—"The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord." Christ has a name above every name—and is head over all things to the Church.

This preposition is not once used in the New Testament with the genitive in a local relation denoting resting or abiding over or above a place or object. Kubner says that the Greek language regards the relation of the genitive as not merely local but as implying action, or a relation of dependence. Hence when huper is employed with the genitive of anything locally above there is some idea of activity. As an example he gives the Greek of the following: "The summer sun passing over—huper—us and our buildings projects a shadow of both." This preposition is not used by any New Testament writer to express this genitive of local relation, but on the contrary, is always used to express a cause, or purpose for, or that in respect to, or in behalf of which anything is done.

Wakefield supplies the word other, and translates: "Besides, what advantage above—huper—the other dead will they have who are constantly submitting to baptism? Why, indeed, are they thus baptized, if the dead will certainly live no more?" This would be to supply a pronoun in the accusative, and the construction would then be using the preposition as expressive of measure, in which sense it is sometimes used in the New Testament; as, "loveth father or mother more than me"—"loveth son or daughter more than me"—"tempted above that ye are able to bear," where the Italicized words represent huper in the original. If there be no future life the dead in Christ obtain nothing by being baptized, more than, beyond, or above the other dead who have never been baptized. Macknight's construction is preferable, as the Apostle is evidently regarding baptism as a symbolism or figure of the resurrection.

"Baptism being an emblematical representation of the death, burial and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, as well as of all his true disciples and followers, (Rom. vi. 4,) was fitly made the rite of initiation into the Christian church; and the person who received it, thereby publicly professing his belief of the resurrection of Christ and of the dead, might with the greatest propriety be said to have been baptized for the dead."

Our direct and short answer from the premises is that the Greek word huper is never used in the New Testament with the genitive to indicate place, in the sense of over or above, nor anywhere else, so far as we know, without some accessory idea of activity in the relation of dependence.

Trust.

Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass.

Perhaps no subject in the Bible has been more abused than the question of trust in the Father. It seems hard for people to occupy rational and Scriptural grounds on this subject. Some virtually take the position that they have nothing to do but to trust in God, while other people supply their wants. And others claim that the Creator has nothing whatever to do with the universe; that having once created things, and set the machine in motion, he folds his hands and turns his back on the creatures he has called into existence. His eyes are blind to their suffering, and his ears deaf to their cries. He has henceforth no business whatever with the world until the time comes for judgment and awards.

These extremes are equally unscriptural and God-dishonoring. The Bible nowhere encourages laziness or general shiftlessness. Its uniform tenor is that we should be diligent, be faithful, working with our hands, despising not the day of small things, be faithover little, etc.

God's blessing never comes upon idleness, any more than it does upon dishonesty. But it does not therefore follow that man is an independent being who can work out his own salvation, both in this world and the world to come, without any assistance from the Divine Father.

Some of our people have tried this theory, and whole churches have died natural deaths under its influence. No man or woman can lead a Christian life without trust in God. They may lead moral lives—they may lead decent lives—infidels sometimes do that—but a Christian is a man who does his best in every department of life, always trying to square his life by the great standard of Bible truth, "Running with patience the race that is set before him, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

How can we be God's children, unless we accept him as Father? "Ye have received the spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba Father."

In the relation between father and child there is no estrangement—no indifference. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Here is a plain declaration that the sorrows and heartaches of God's little ones find active sympathy in the bosom of the Father. He feels our pain, he listens to our cries, he pities us as a father pities his children. Often he delivers us out of our troubles —often he scatters the blows that meet us in life's vicissitudes. But man is under the sin penalty and under the death penalty. It is not God's purpose to deliver us from all pain and trial until we work out characters worthy of redemption. Suffering develops the noblest virtues—trials test our good resolutions and develop moral strength and Christian patience. "He chasteneth every son whom he receiveth," and although "No chastening for the present seemeth joyous but grievous, nevertheless it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them who are rightly exercised thereby." Many a despondent hour might be saved if we, while working cheerfully and heartily in the present, would trust the future implicitly in the hands of "Him who cureth for us."

Many a gloomy day might be illumined with God's blessed sunlight, if we could only realize that however weary the way, and sharp the thorns, "All things work together for good to them that love God."

Many a burden might be lifted from weary hearts, and troubled nights be passed in quiet rest if we would but heed the admonition, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."

"Alone, and not alone, we drift
Across life's dark uncertain sea;
And near or far, God's Islands lift
Their psalms for you and me.

"Alone, and not alone, we roam,
For as the storm may rave or cease;
And, trusting, we shall journey home
To realms of perfect peace."

Report of Labors.

Editor Restitution:—As I had not the privilege of attending our conference of June 7th, for the satisfaction of some of our people I will give a brief synopsis of my work the last year. I continued carpenter work until December 15, 1877; went on that date to Story county; held a meeting during the worst muddy weather last winter for four weeks; baptized thirty in the faith, and organized the Church of God of sixty members; went from there to Irving by the request of Brother G. M. Myers; held a meeting with him about four weeks. We baptized about thirty. (Here I must drop a word concerning this brother. If any one can have a stay and staff aside from Jesus, I feel Brother Myers has been such to me. When I have felt like giving up preaching he seemed to know just what was the matter, and what to do. With his mild honest ways he truly has won my confidence.) I went from Irving to Marysville to help Brother Prime out in a meeting already begun; continued it about ten days and we baptized eighteen; twenty-two joined the church. I went from there to Dresden; held meeting about two weeks in a very bad time; was getting the people interested when I took a severe cold and my voice gave way; went home and found my folks had sent me money to make them a visit in Carthage, Missouri. Went to Carthage and astonished my folks with the new doctrine I had imbibed; most of them believing the things concerning the kingdom of God, but only two accepted the things concerning his name. Sickness prevented me from holding meeting there. I only preached twice in the M. E. church; think the doors would be closed if I should return; created much street talk next day among the Methodists—my old brethren. Came home and went to Traer; preached one week in the Advent Church; baptized four, and six joined the Church of God. Went from there to Marysville to attend a discussion between Brother G. M. Myers and Brinkerhoff. Went to Palo; held a meeting about the first week in May; baptized two; went in the country west of Traer on two different occasions, and found, after preaching, a number to be baptized. They went to work and raised two hundred and fifty dollars for preaching every two weeks. I requested Brother Macomb to try at camp meeting to have the tent committee let the tent be sent to this place first. I went from there to Goodland, Ind., by request of Brother H. V. Reed, to attend the conference, June 16th. Brother Reed and Stephenson were both there; had a good time. One man, a doctor in Goodland, confessed Christ Sunday after Brother Reed had preached Christ about forty minutes. Brother Stephenson baptized him and a sister next morning. Went to Remington; held meeting four evenings; baptized four; went to Rensselaer and preached Saturday evening, and three times Sunday and returned home. May God bless the earnest brethren I found in Indiana. I think they are not as well supplied with the number of preaching brethren as we are in Iowa. I am thinking of moving to Goodland; the brethren there and at Remington have already raised one hundred dollars for me to move. May God direct me right.

I went back to the neighborhood west of Traer. Brother Ramsey had been there and had held meeting one week, and left the tent stand for my appointment. He baptized six. I held the meeting one week longer and baptized eight more. I came from there to Palo, where I am now writing, to fill a regular appointment. Two confessed Christ and will put him on this evening, perhaps more will obey. I have filled up my time in regular appointments; thus my time is all occupied. How I get my living I can hardly tell, only my God provides. At one time when I was feeling rather blue, Brother Myers caused ten dollars to be raised for me; who told him I was in need, I don't know. At another time Brother George Moyer pulled out five dollars and made me take it, and like Jesus, said, tell no one; and again, when I was in need, an infidel was converted under my preaching, and when I baptized him, he gave me five dollars, and to top it off, his wife gave me five dollars more. Thus, the Lord will provide at times and ways we are not expecting, and I am convinced that we should trust him now. I expect to wear out in the glorious cause. I came out of the M. E. church into the Advent Christian church, but when I began to preach the restoration of Israel and the reign of Christ and his brethren over the nation, they cast me out; and, as I owned the church building, and could not stop me from preaching, they quit coming and would not hear. This was in Cherokee. At Traer the Advent Christian church voted that Brother G. M. Myers and I should never preach in their church again. I hope our Advent friends will soon see the folly of rejecting the restoration spoken of by all the holy prophets. The termination of the last congress in Europe should convince all prophetic students that the nations are ansping to bring about the restoration of Israel and the invasion of Gog.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—These are perilous times. Scarcely anyone will read outside of our own faith. Light untruthful literature is the chief reading matter of the day. Yet we will still try hoping that some, perhaps, may be brought to see the truth as it is in Jesus. May the Lord help me to hold forth the true faith is my earnest prayer. MRS. H. BARBER.

Salem, Columbiana County, Ohio.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar for THE RESTITUTION for the next six months. We would like to do more, but cannot at present. As we are almost alone in this place, and have no preaching, we cannot think of doing without the paper. The teaching of the sects seems so blind and confused that I thank my Heavenly Father for bringing me into the true light of the gospel, and my heart yearns daily for others that they may also be brought to the knowledge of the truth. In hope of the soon coming Kingdom of our Lord, your sister in hope. CAROLINE SNELGROVE.

Chatham, Ontario.

Editor Restitution:—I wish that there were many more who would take THE RESTITUTION and read it, but the world seems to be becoming insane in the pursuit of pleasure, and to have no time to read the truth to learn about the things that are coming on the earth, nor will they believe when told of the doom awaiting the ungodly at the soon coming of the King to render to everyone according to their deeds. The sectarian churches are taking the lead in all the pleasure parties, and it is no wonder that the people of the world follow them. But those that have been chosen out of the world should stand firm in the faith that was once delivered to the saints, looking forward to the time when our beloved Lord and Master shall return to remove from this earth all things that offend, and establish truth and righteousness in the world. My prayer is that he will keep his few humble followers from falling till he comes to take them to himself. That we may be among the chosen is the sincere prayer of your humble sister in the Anointed. MRS. CHARLES LEE.

BREVITIES.

Among the British Indian troops now quartered at Malta there are some black Jews, members of the community of the B'nai Israel, existing on the coast of Malabar. They claim to be descendants of the Jews sent by King Solomon to India to collect ivory and precious stones. They differ very materially from other Jews in many of their religious ceremonies, and only observe the Jewish Sabbath and the Passover.

A company of scientific, literary, and artistic men, under the direction of Profs. Panchich and Valtrovich, and Milutinovich, an engineer, will start this month from Belgrade on a tour through the newly acquired districts of Old Servia for the purpose of examining the old churches and monasteries there, taking sketches of the historic remains and collecting MSS., and what other literary curiosities are to be found.

A strange mystery of the sea is reported in a despatch from San Francisco. The schooner Parallel reports that on the 7th inst., off the coast, about 100 miles north of San Francisco, she fell in with a Japanese junk. There was not a living person aboard, but a number of corpses were found, some shackled together. They must have been dead a month at least. Some of the bodies were dressed in costly material. There was no food on the vessel.

The Jews have long been well treated in Paris. Visitors to the Exposition found the military that attended at the opening under command of a Jew. The army has three Jewish Generals, there are two Jewish Prefects, and the presiding officer of the Court of Appeals is of the same extraction. There are Jewish synagogues that Roman Catholics have built, and the government contributes largely to the support of Jewish schools.

Mr. Hormuzd Rassam, the successor of the late Mr. George Smith in Assyrian exploration, is on his way home with the antiquities which he has secured for the British Museum. He considers them too precious to be left to the care of others. He writes from Smyrna under date of the 19th of June, that he will wait in Constantinople the permission which Mr. Layard will obtain for the shipment of the antiquities. Mr. Rassam had much difficulty in getting permission to carry on the research in which Mr. George Smith was hailed.

There are 188,000 children in the schools under the charge of the London Board. The Bible is read, and Scripture instruction given daily in all the schools, and prizes are given for proficiency in Scripture knowledge. A School Board fete was given at Crystal Palace on the 13th inst., and 4,000 Bibles and Testaments were distributed as prizes. There had been 105,000 voluntary competitors. It was stated that a greatly improved moral tone prevailed in the schools since the introduction of Scripture instruction.

Highways in the Desert.

Says the English Railway Times, of the 27th ultimo: "On Wednesday His Excellency Musurus Pasha inspected Mr. Haddan's system of steam caravans, designed by the inventor to open up rough countries like Asia Minor and to act as test lines for grand undertakings like the Euphrates Valley Railway. Sir F. Goldsmid and His Excellency discussed the best point of departure for this line, and the Gulf of Ayas, as proposed by Captain Cameron and Mr. Haddan, was regarded as by far the best."

Good-bye is a hard word to say sometimes. Let us restore it in our thoughts to its old meaning. When we have to say with our lips, good-bye, let us say in our hearts, God be with you. I may not be with you, but may a greater, a better, a more loving than I be with you—may God be with you. I can speak to you and hear you no more; but may God cheer you, and guide you, and keep you, and bless you with his very presence. So let us turn our good-bye into a prayer. It will be easier to say then. I do not say that our parting will have no pain in it, but our good-bye will pour a healing balm upon the wound. And can we pray a better prayer? Can we have a richer blessing than to have God really with us? If God be with us, who can be against us? Surely this is our best farewell. We only really fare well when God is with us. We are happiest, holiest, safest, when we are walking with God; for then, though our best loved ones may be far away from us we are walking with love itself, for God is love.—Rev. J. E. Sampson.

POETRY.

"Looking for the Mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto Eternal Life."

ABBY A. PERRY.

Behind the clouds, our Savior's face
Hath been long years concealed,—
But oh, the glory, and the grace
When He's again revealed!

"Our Great High Priest within the vail,"
Pleading for dying men;
His intercessions will prevail,
And we shall live again.

"A little while"—the world rejoice,
And you shall mourn and weep;
"A little while"—you'll hear my voice,
Calling my scattered sheep.

"I go away, and come again,"
Our dear Redeemer said;
My friends shall all be with me then,
For "I will raise the dead."

O glorious hope! Lord haste, and bring
The long-expected time
When, "Thy dead shall awake and sing"
In every land and clime.

With evil now the earth is filled
With sorrow, care and pain;
With labor hard the earth is tilled,
Weeds grow instead of grain.

The lightnings flash—and thunders roll,
And earthquakes shake the earth;
Causing dismay from pole to pole,
With tempests, fire and dearth.

The curse is surely everywhere,
"The whole creation groans;"
Thy children, Lord, must take their share
Of all the sighs and moans.

The elements are all at war
In men, and nature too;
And there's commotion every where,
The whole creation through.

We shrink beneath Jehovah's frown
And hasten, oh, to hide
Within the rock, once cleft for man
"In Christ, the crucified!"

"Lord Jesus come," "O rend the vail,"
And end this age of strife!
O come and end creation's wail,
And bring "eternal life."

Discussion Continued.

SECOND SESSION.

In opening the argument, Bro. Myers alluded to the charge of misrepresentation on the part of his opponent, and remarked that if he had misstated it was not from a desire to do so, and was thankful to be corrected.

Again referred to 2 Pet. i. 5-11, and called attention to the admission that a person must first be a Christian and then add the Christian graces, and if so, it shows that he is not in the kingdom in this life. Dan. vii. 7, and onward was then adduced as proof, and is enough to show that the coming of the Son of man to the Ancient of days is after the beast is taken and given to the burning flame.

His opponent averred that because it is said he comes to the Ancient of days, it is in the past tense, but he inquired who is the author of this? Daniel, and if this is so, Christ came more than 537 years ago. Hence it proves too much. The language of a prophet is almost always in the past future tense. Example, Isa. ix. 7, "Unto us a child is born," a prophecy fulfilled hundreds of years afterward.

As it was affirmed that Bro. M. found fault with the translation of Col. i. 13, he set that matter at rest by stating that he did not understand it should be translated unto, and accepted the present rendering. He then used some apt illustrations, showing that Christ could be reigning ex officio but not de facto, by referring to the election of President Grant. After his election he was called President Grant but was not inaugurated for several months after. So Christ was not and is not reigning yet as king.

The question is whether this is a momentary act or not? The work of the Christian is gradual and not completed until Christ comes, as Col. iv. 11 will show. This transitional work covers the whole Christian life.

Reference was again made to 1 Pet. i. 6-10, and Acts xiv. 19, as they had not been harmonized with the theory of his opponent.

In replying to this last argument the statement was made in the outset that Bro. M. was trying to cut off the leading principles of the word, but he failed to show that such was the case. He then referred to Dan. vii. 9 onward and objected to Bro. M. reading straight on or connectedly and thought it was not correct to read it in that way, and then alluded to the expression "came to the ancient of days," and remarked that he went there for that purpose to receive a kingdom.

He took up Isa. ix. 7 and said that was an exception, &c., and again referred to the expression "came," remarking that if it was in the future it should be "come." Then called attention to Christ as a priest after the order of Melchizedek, and referred to Heb. vii. 3, 9, and Acts ii. 30. This latter text reads: "Therefore let all the house of God know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus both Lord and Christ"—that is, Priest and King; therefore, was now exercising these two offices, and when he leaves the throne on high it is to come to execute judgment and give reward. Again, attempted to use Col. xiii. and Acts xiv. 19, but to no purpose. In conclusion, quoted 1 John iii. 1. G. M. briefly reviewed the remarks made by his opponent, showing their weakness, and then proceeded to make his affirmative arguments. He referred to the statement that there is conditional and unconditional prophecy, and called for a conditional prophecy; and referred to another bold assumption that, when Christ comes, his kingdom ceases, which is directly in opposition to the statement made by the angel to Mary, that he should rule over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end;" and that when he makes such statements he ought to be told of it.

Heb. i. 6-8, was then quoted and compared with the Emphatic Version and Bible Union, showing the perpetuity of his throne. Another good argument was then brought out by quotations from Matt. xiii. 10, 11; Acts i. 1-9, and Ezek. xxi. 25-27, showing, conclusively, that these predictions were not met in his first coming, and, hence, must be in his second.

Luke i. 32 was then appealed to, and the question raised: Did he ascend to sit on the throne of David at his baptism? or, when will he sit on his throne? God gave David a throne on earth, not in heaven. How long was he to reign? Was it during the Jewish age? Did Christ reign on the throne of David? These questions exposed the weakness of the negative greatly. In proof of the enduring character of this kingdom Isa. lxvi. 22-24 and Jer xxxi. 35, were appealed to, upon which Brother M. commented at some length, and clearly proved its continuance.

J. W. B. then took up Dan. vii., and averred that Brother M. had not made any remarks on it worthy of note, and so left it. Then referred to Rev. xx. 4, where the Revelator says: "I saw thrones and they sat upon them," etc., and denied that "they" are the saints, remarking they are not, no never, never; my opponent is against God.

An attempt was then made to sustain the idea that there is two classes of prophecy, conditional and unconditional, but no text was brought proving it. Referred to Heb. i. 5, and remarked that this was fulfilled at his first advent. Reference was then made to Luke ii. 1; iv. 5; xxi. 26; Acts xi. 28; xvii. 31, onward, adding some concluding remarks, but not giving anything new on the subject.

Third session—Brother M. restated the proposition and briefly recapitulated his former arguments, and gave some additional thoughts on Col. i. 13. After saying it was properly rendered he called attention to this point, whether the translation was momentary or not, and that it was only to be settled by determining whether it covers all the time between the incipient stage of the Christian life and the resurrection.

Acts i. 6 was then quoted. If they had been taught by the Savior that the kingdom was already in existence, it was strange they did not understand it existed in any sense at that time.

Reference was again made to Ezek. xxi. 25 and Luke i. 32. Here the word "forever" is used from aion, and describes the continuation of an event. What does the house of Jacob signify? The descendants of Abraham. See Jer. xxxi. 35. This being true, undoubtedly Jesus will reign over the kingdom of Israel. Ezek. xxxvii. 7, and other prophecies show they are to be brought back. Was that ever fulfilled? Were they ever brought back?

This telling argument was followed by J. W. B. remarking on the review of Brother M., but no solution was given to the puzzling texts given him. The thrones of Rev. xx. 4, he averred, were papal thrones, and the Protestants were slain during the time "they" sat on these thrones.

Col. i. 13 was again referred to, which denotes an action past and not our final deliverance. This was considered a plain text, and from its frequent use, was greatly relied on.

He also remarked, I do not wonder he twists and wrests the Scripture, but I fail to see a single attempt to do so by Brother M. On Acts i. 6, he remarked they did not understand it. Acts i. 4, referred to the expression "kingdom of God is among you," to show that it was then present, and again to Acts ii. 30. Then affirmed we shall show you that he did reign, and for proof, referred to Ezek. xxi. 25.

The manner of his coming is shown in Zech. ix. 9. Reference was made to Luke i. 33: "He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." And the question asked, Did he reign as King when here upon earth? 1 Cor. xv. 24-28 was then quoted to show the duration of his reign, and that he did reign. Rev. xx. 4 and vi. 9-11 were appealed to by J. W. B. as proving that the saints reigned during the papal persecution.

He was then followed by Brother M., who asked, Is it a reign? No it is a rest. Where are they? In their graves. Can it be possible that my friend has been converted to the immortal soul theory! The position assumed that the saints reigned at that time presupposes that they were alive; hence, it is an argument for the intermediate state of living. Where is his consistency? Are we to understand he ruled and reigned over the house of Jacob two years? Acts xv. 16 was then used to show the object of the gospel and the return of Christ, and proved a very strong affirmative argument. Amos ix. 11 and Hosea iii. 5, were also cited as parallel texts confirming the same.

In conclusion, the question was raised, Where is the Church ever called Israel? A question that could not be answered in harmony with the position taken by his opponent. J. W. B. then followed with remarks on Rev. xx. 4, affirming that it referred to the thousand years of papal reign as did Rev. vi. 9-11, and that they reigned before they were killed. At this point I left, but understand that nothing particularly new was offered.

Fourth session. After appropriate introductory remarks, Brother M. reviewed at some length, and then referred to Rev. vi. 9-11 and xx. 1-4, and presented some queries for his opponent to answer, which could not fail to impress upon the mind of the thoughtful the fallacy of his opponent's position. After which he alluded to the contradictory positions taken, and remarked, I do not know what to believe to-day, as he has shifted his position so many times. Again called attention to the literal return of the Jews, and confirmed it by the prophets. Referred to Deut. xxxii. 44 and Heb. ii. 1, onward.

He showed by this latter quotation that salvation and the glorification of Christ was subsequent to the Apostle's writing, which was in A. D. 64, and hence, is another argument in favor of the future reign of Christ, and closed with appropriate remarks on the nature of the great salvation, etc. J. W. B. then followed, and again remarked that, all that were beheaded, lived and reigned with Christ. Rev. xx. 4. Then quoted from Luke xvii. 20, 21, showing the manner of his coming, and also Matt. xxviii. 19. He remarked also, that Christ was first King of the Jews and then of believers, and went to Jerusalem to be inaugurated as King. I say Christ's reign is in this dispensation. On Acts xv., where the Lord declares, "after this I will return and rebuild the tabernacle of David," etc., he remarked that he did return in the person of his Son. As regards the dispersion and gathering of the Jews, it was remarked that it was conditioned on their doing so and so; and that the Bible is full of conditional prophecies. In conclusion, related some of his experience, which consumed time, and was not pertinent to the question at issue.

G. M. M. in his closing speech, remarked, on Luke xvii. 20, where the expression kingdom of God is used, that it had already been shown that the kingdom of God and of Christ are one, and this was admitted, and yet, according to his opponent's view, one was a progressive, while the other was a perfected kingdom. If it is the kingdom of Christ now, why quote that the kingdom of God is among you? The election of Lincoln was referred to as a comparison to show that, whereas, quite a period of time elapsed between the time he was elected and was inaugurated; that it was similar in the case of Christ. He was born King, but did not reign for some time afterwards. This comparison was accepted as conveying a correct idea, but the question was asked: Was he exercising his functions as King when he was born? And, if not, then at what period in his life did he commence to do so? And, in taking the position he did, Brother M. charged that he was following Rome, the mother of harlots. He then referred to other Scriptures, especially to Heb. ii. 6, where Paul declares: "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, of which we speak"; and showed that it was to be done for Christ, etc.

Brother M. then closed his part of the discussion by a general summing up of his own arguments, and did not fail to make a good impression upon the intelligent part of the audience. This, of course, was followed by a closing address by J. W. B.

Thus closed this discussion, and, as the second proposition was not debated on according to agreement (as to time) on account of the non-compliance of J. W. B. to do so, there will be no report on it. This is but an imperfect sketch for which I claim the forbearance of all interested, and hope it may tend to confirm our faith in the millennial reign of Christ.

Keagle and Myers Debate—No. 3.

Our second affirmation in the discussion, though illogical, was:

Resolved, That immersion in water of the candidate is the only Apostolical baptism.

We had to accept it in the above shape to get an investigation at all. Mr. Keagle positively refused to affirm that sprinkling or pouring is valid Apostolic baptism. We then proposed to affirm the negative, Resolved, That sprinkling or pouring water upon a candidate is not valid Apostolic baptism. But he refused to accept of this.

The proposition as discussed, though it is what we believe and teach, yet it is illogically stated, and gives our opponents the advantage of play upon the other definitions of the word Baptize; and yet this play without ever coming to our true difference.

In the outset we admitted that the word had other definitions than immerse, such as to dip, to plunge, to sink, to wash, to soak, to dye, etc., but denied that it ever in any case admitted of sprinkle or pour.

After reading the definition of the word as given by forty-five different lexicons, we then laid down the following propositions, which were never called in question.

1. That there is not a lexicographer on this continent who gives sprinkle or pour as a definition of baptize.

2. That there is not a lexicographer on the continent who gives sprinkle or pour as a first, second or third definition of bapto, the root of baptize.

3. That baptо nowhere, in Old or New Testament, is used in connection with a religious ordinance.

4. That God never has, since the world was created, commanded pure, unadulterated, unmixed water to be sprinkled or poured upon any one.

We then stated that unless these propositions could be controverted and shown to be false they forever ended the dispute on this question.

Next we showed from Num. xix. 1-17, how the water of purification was prepared and applied, and that it typified not the institution of baptism, but the atonement blood of Christ. From this we turned to Ezek. xxxvi. 25, and showed that it is to be water of this kind sprinkled upon Israel in his restoration, and not pure unmixed water; that this is not for Gentiles now, but for Israel in his return; then we read from A. Clark on this text and 24th verse, where he makes Israel's return yet future.

Upon the baptism of our Savior, our opponent stated that it was but a purification and a consecration of Christ to the office of priesthood, and therefore was done not by immersion but by sprinkling. That John belonged to the family of Aaron, that his father was a priest, and therefore he must have been a priest and had the right to set Jesus apart to that office.

We replied to this:

1. That we read nowhere of John ever being consecrated to the priesthood.

2. That we read nowhere of his ever acting as a priest.

3. That it does not follow from the fact that his father was a priest that he also must be a priest.

4. That priests officiated at the altar and not upon the banks of the Jordan.

5. That the place for consecrating priests was at the altar, (see Exod. xl. 12-15; Lev. viii. 3-13,) and not upon the banks of the River Jordan.

6. And lastly, that Christ was not a priest while here on his mission. See Heb. viii. 4.

On the baptism of the Savior, further, we showed that eis—literally into—was on one side of the act, and that though apo is on the other in some Greek texts, ek ought to be there. For so stating that ek, and not apo, was the correct word in the text, we gave, 1, Tregelles, 2, Tischendorf, 3, Alford, 4, Green, 5, Bengal, 6, Lachman, 7, Meyer, all of which have ek in the text; 8, Greenfield, gives ek in the margin; 9, Griesebach gives ek in the margin. And as rendering of the text—

1. Rhetus (Catholic) has—Coming up out of.
2. Geo. Campbell—Arose out of.
3. Bible Union—Coming up out of.
4. Improved Version—Going up out of.
5. Sawyer—Going up out of.
6. Wakefield—Went up out of.
7. Living Oracles—Arose out of.

Sixteen authorities that will defy the world to oppose.

We then stated that certainly if circumstances could ever describe an act, here with eis—into—upon the one side, ek—up out of—on the other, and the River Jordan between, it must be described—immersion.

The old routine of arguments common to this question were then by our opponent introduced; such as the coldness and rapidity of the waters of the Jordan; insufficiency of the waters in Jerusalem; the desert way to Gaza; Paul's standing, etc. But as all these cases and replies are familiar to most of the readers of THE RESTITUTION, we will not give them.

More next week. G. M. MYERS.

Swallowing Jordan.

The celebrated J. Vardeman, of Kentucky, though a stiff Baptist, always manifested the utmost courtesy toward other denominations, and attended their ministry when he could. Being at the monthly meeting of a Presbyterian Church, on a very hot day, he sat, as was his custom, near the pulpit, and close to the table in front. Being thirsty, he several times drank from a bowl of water on the table, probably supposing it was put there for that purpose. But at the close of the service the minister called for certain infants to be brought forward for "baptism," and descending to the table discovered there was no water. Handing the bowl to a friend sitting near he requested it might be filled. Vardeman, struck with the mischief he had done, startled the people by crying out: "What! did I drink up your Jordan?"

The Rev. Dr. Margoliouth, vicar of Little Linford, England, who is a Hebrew Christian, is advocating the establishment of a government in the Holy Land similar to that of Syria, under the protection of the powers, and the colonization of the country by Christian Israelites, whom he estimates to be no less than 200,000 in number.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Witness says: "The Berlin Congress is considered by the French to have secured the peace of Europe for five years till pacific powers have time to look around them, note new positions, and make due preparations for the coming Armageddon."

INDIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The brethren have determined to hold the annual conference at Argos, Indiana, commencing on Thursday, August 15, 1878, to continue over Sunday if in their judgment it is necessary. It is expected that this will be one of the most important and interesting meetings ever held in the state. Recent events in the world, the prospective gathering of Israel, the impending conflict between the nations of Europe and Asia, the wonderful changes now going on among the different religions, and the heralding of the coming of the son of man, from the East, together with the ending of the dayes prophecy and the appearance of the Sign of the Son of man among the evils of earth, now crowding in upon us. It is grand to be living in these like these. But how few are ready! The times are coming and tell us of a new world just in our future. Brethren we are rapidly coming to the final change. Let the world run its race, and let the truth have free course, that brethren at Argos are able to see, so shall all who come to our annual feast. Lay aside your cares and come and join with the brethren in this worshipful feast. Don't let the world get the start of you. Be diligent and faithful. Let your life and daily agree, and may we all be worthy of the well done. Come and give us the benefit of your presence and warm hearts of love, and let us work together for the glory of truth and the God of truth.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 14, 1878.

PLEASE write us short, practical communications for a while. We have more long ones on hand than we can dispose of for weeks to come.

Do not forget THE RESTITUTION. Let all our brethren and friends be prompt in renewing. This is particularly a close time of year for newspapers.

LETTERS from a British steamship in the Gulf of Saros declare that the Russians are still fortifying the coast, and that they do not expect the peace to be permanent.

GREAT mortality prevails on the west coast of Africa. At Lagos nearly a quarter of the European population died of fever and dysentery during the two months ending July 4.

HOPEFUL SIGNS.

The Eastern Question Rapidly Approaching Solution.

Through the thoughtful kindness of our dear brother, H. Reyes, in England, I have received some of the English papers which contain fuller and more satisfactory details of the proceedings and results of the late congress at Berlin—a kind of European Areopagus—than any we get from our American papers. With the aid of the London Times and the Manchester Guardian, we become pretty fully posted as to the doings of the world's "great powers," as they complacently style themselves, and are able to interpret issues and events—guided by the sure word of prophecy—with far more precision and certainty than they can; not by any superior powers that we possess but because "every scribe instructed in the kingdom of God," knowing what is written, and with God's Word in his hands can read the future more clearly than these Gentile scribes and statesmen who sedulously and presumptuously ignore God's will or Word in respect to what is about to happen.

From these papers we learn some interesting and significant facts, affecting the future of the land and people of promise—the inheritance of Abraham and David and their Greater Son and his saints.

The cession to England of the island of Cyprus, near the eastern shores of the Mediterranean, and on the sea-way to Palestine, is a great stride onward in encouraging and facilitating emigration from all parts of Europe to the Holy Land, and with it we have now the important news of the establishment by treaty between Britain and Turkey of an English protectorate over Asia Minor and all the Turkish possessions in Asia. This, of course, embraces the land and people of Israel. And yet further, we have news of the express release and removal of all civil and political and personal disabilities of the Jews, throughout the Turkish dominions! This at once opens the way and guarantees to the scattered tribes the right to return to the land of their fathers, there to enjoy perfect freedom of religion, occupancy, residence and pursuit of business, just as any other subjects are allowed to exercise, and to be secured and guaranteed in them by the strong arm and powerful protection of the English government! Is not this a marvelous development of one of the present phases of the Eastern Question?

That it should be surprising—even unaccountable—to the public mind of Britain, is not wonderful, yet it is manifested by the extraordinary terms of astonishment in which this protectorate is announced in an editorial of the Manchester Times, which I clip from that paper and enclose, for the information of our expectant brethren, and for which I hope room may be found in THE RESTITUTION. I have underscored with the pen the parts of the paper which show how completely surprised the people of England are at this momentous movement. Their surprise is natural. They do not know and do not enquire as to God's hand in the transaction; but we have learned both the object and the end of so strange a proceeding. Happily being forewarned, let us be forearmed for results, and heed the exhortation, "be ye always ready."

These events all tend to fasten the conviction on the mind of the intelligent student of prophecy, that the repeopling and restoration of the land of Israel by the descendants of Abraham is the only true key to unlock the mysteries of the Eastern Question—that complex problem which the wise of this world can never solve, because they know not the Scriptures or the power of God.

I subjoin the slip referred to above.

ALLAN B. MACRUDER.

[From the London Times, Tuesday, July 30, 1878.]

The announcement which was made by Mr. Cross in the House of Commons last night is of such great and far-reaching importance that we cannot but regret that it should have been made with such exceeding brevity. Mr. Cross's statement did no more than summarize the terms of the treaty, which was soon after laid on the table of the house; and we are thus called upon to judge, with but imperfect information, of what would seem to be one of the most momentous transactions in which this country has ever engaged. For sometime past there have been rumors current that England was about to undertake some sort of protectorate of the Turkish Empire in Asia. The rumors prove to be correct. It has also been currently reported, though less credit was attached to what appeared to be on its face little more than an exercise of the imagination, that, for some purpose unexplained, this country was to become the happy possessor of the island of Cyprus. This rumor also, if not literally exact, at least comes so near to hitting the mark that it scarcely needs correction. The island of Cyprus, with all its olive groves and all its boundless resources for growing the most superfine tobacco, is at this moment, if not part and parcel of the British dominions, at least as much, or rather more, English as Russia is Austrian. We are not aware whether Austria has yet altogether come to terms with the Sublime Porte, but our affair was provisionally settled as far back as the 4th of June, Austria has certainly not yet gone so far as to appoint, or at least to announce the appointment of, a future governor of Bosnia. In this matter we have the advantage, for Sir Garnet Wolseley has already been appointed administrator of Cyprus.

The first question which naturally suggests itself is, what in the world have we got to do in Cyprus? It is a fine country no doubt, though neglected, and though we believe as the result of several hundred years of Turkish rule its population is reduced to about 120,000 persons, i is capable of supporting at least ten times that number. It has one of the most fertile soils in the world, and one of the most perfect climates, and under British rule it may probably become a sanatorium for half the invalids of Europe. In spite, however, of these recommendations we have not hitherto coveted its possession. We can grow as much tobacco as we want in India, and we have no particular liking for the Government of mixed and outlandish populations. Cyprus is a perfect sentina gentium—unless there is some very strong reason to compel us. Therefore, are we again obliged to ask, what have we to do in Cyprus? Mr. Cross does not leave us altogether without an answer, but his answer certainly lacks that fulness which is to be dealt in so important a matter. We have acquired Cyprus, it seems, under the terms of a compact entered into between Her Majesty's Government and the Porte by which we bound ourselves in certain contingencies and on certain conditions to undertake the defence of the Turkish Empire in Asia against the encroachments, possible or probable, of Russia. It was, it seems, "in order to enable Her Majesty to make the necessary arrangements for the execution of her agreement" that the island of Cyprus was to be handed over to our occupation, and one of the contingencies contemplated having since actually arisen, handed over it has been accordingly. The agreement in question was to the effect that if Russia should, under the terms of the definitive treaty of peace, obtain Batoum, Kars, and Ardahan, or any one of them; if she should "at any future time take possession of any further portion of the Asiatic territories of the Sultan" as fixed by that treaty, then this country "engages to join the Sultan in defending them, to return for the introduction of such necessary reforms as shall be agreed upon between the two Powers for the government of the Christian and other subjects of the Sultan in those territories." What is the precise nature of the reforms which are considered to be "necessary" we have yet to learn, and this is a point upon which we must confess to feeling considerable curiosity. This part of the Sultan's engagement is in the nature of things not capable of instant execution, and it is conceivable that some little difficulty may arise when his obligations under this head come to be explained to him. But the cession of Cyprus is a much simpler matter, and that has already been accomplished by a stroke of the imperial pen. It now remains for us to perform our part of the bargain, and the first step, it appears to be understood which we are to take in this direction is to convert Cyprus into a basis for future military operations in Asia Minor or elsewhere. The Indian troops are quite handy, and for aught we know, are by this time on their way. Why Cyprus was chosen for this purpose rather than some place a little nearer to the scene of any possible invasion Mr. Cross did not explain. It would seem to be more serviceable for the defence of Syrian than of the Armenian frontier, and Syria is perhaps the point really aimed at.

The impression produced by these announcements is not exactly one of astonishment. There is something fantastic about the whole affair, and it has too much the air of an adventure to be altogether congenial to the tastes of a people who are accustomed to count somewhat carefully the probable consequences of their actions, and to think twice before they enter into engagements involving incalculable liabilities. For what is it that we have done or are undertaking to do? [illegible] Cyprus, it is nothing. Our laying hands on it may have an ugly look, and our foreign friends will no doubt demur when they find the immaculate statesmen of a country which has forsworn conquest pocketing so comfortable a prize. We in England, however, know tolerably well by this time what is the value of this kind of possession. For its own sake we should not have it as a gift. If we take it, it is as means to a much larger end. This end is not only large, it is portentous. On the obvious interpretation of the treaty into which we have entered, it would appear that we have made ourselves responsible for nothing less than the future good government of the Turkish Empire in Asia. The regeneration of Asiatic Turkey is no doubt a glorious, but it is a gigantic, task, and it is one which could not be undertaken without powers commensurate to its magnitude. Probably we may be told that we have undertaken nothing of the kind; but in that case we should desire to know what it is we have undertaken. "Necessary reforms" is no doubt a loose expression, and if it remained for the Porte to interpret it we should know very well what to expect. But "necessary reforms" as interpreted by Turkish and by British administrators are very different; and, so far as we can see, we shall under the terms of this new treaty be bound in honor to one and all of the Asiatic subjects of Turkey to see to it that they are not in any way glaringly misgoverned. Considering what the government of Turkey actually is and what under the pressure of financial exhaustion and political decrepitude it is likely to become, it seems to us very difficult to escape the conclusion that, while nominally only taking Cyprus in pawn, we are really establishing ourselves as the responsible guardians of the Turkish Empire. We do not say that this is a responsibility which we ought under no circumstances to undertake. It may be that it is one which it is very difficult for us under the circumstances which now exist to avoid. But we do say that nothing short of a clear and urgent necessity could justify us in undertaking it, and for proof of the existence of such a necessity the country will undoubtedly call upon those to show who are responsible for adding so huge a weight to the burden of its Empire.

Our Duty No. 2.

"For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake." Phil. i. 29.

I have selected this text as closely allied to the one I presented to you first, because what I wish to say is closely connected with that which I have previously said.

Many of those with whom we have to deal in this world, and whom we would not call enemies, do many things that are even contrary to the "golden rule," "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise," yet, for all these, we must render good for evil. "Recompense to no man evil for evil." Rom. xii. 17 "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." verse 21.

I know we are liable to say, because much of it comes not on account of our righteousness, for they would do the same by others, it is not for Jesus, or righteousness, sake; but this is not true; for doing His commandments is for these objects.

Doing good for evil holds good in any case. There are no exceptions made. "Ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men;" and, "abstain from all appearance of evil." 1 Thess. v. 15, 22. "And who is he that will harm you if you be followers of that which is good?" "But," as if seeing that such would be the case, "and if ye suffer for righteousness, sake, happy are ye." 1 Pet. iii. 13, 14. "Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the Lord and He will save thee." Prov. xx. 22, "Say not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me." Prov. xxiv. 29," "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully." 1 Pet. ii. 19.

The enemies of Christ who may not be our personal enemies will do and say many things which it will be our duty to suffer without seeming to notice. "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you; on their part He is evil spoken of, but on your part He is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf." 1 Pet. iv. 14-16. "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Matt. v. 11.

"But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." Matt. v. 39-41. Much that I have already said applies also to this; yet I know it will be urged, and applied in individual cases, that the Savior did not intend the literal application of His words. But if such is the case we have no certain foundation. I believe the Lord meant that we should not resist people who inflict evil upon us or do us an injury; but in every case, do good for evil. He has said this, and the only thing we need to do is to settle in our own minds whether He meant it or not. There is a law in the land to protect those who would do good, and what that will not do we must suffer to be so.

There are objections raised to so literal an interpretation of the Savior's commandments. First, we will be cited to this passage: "And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." Matt. v. 29. But if there is a figure used here, the literal import of the command is to be carried out. The plucking out or cutting off retain their literal meaning—a separation is to literally take place. The figure is only used in regard to the thing to be plucked out. In the other passages I have before quoted a figure cannot be used with any fairness at all. And it cannot be carried further than I have stated in the text above.

As not alluding directly to my subject, but as explanatory of the text, I would quote the following: Upon this passage Roberts remarks: This metaphor is in common use to this day; hence people say of anything that is valuable, 'It is his right eye! Yes, yes, that child is the right eye of his father! That fellow forsake his side? never! they are his right eye!"

The kingdom of God and his righteousness should be our right eye; and if anything else is, it should be plucked out—severed so effectually that it will not cause us to offend.

As another objection it will be urged that God does not intend that we shall sit, as it were, and see our property taken; but if he does not, what does he mean by language such as we have already quoted? "But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil," etc. And Luke says: "Give to every man that asketh of thee, and of him that taketh away thy goods, ask them not again." Luke vi. 30. We are to use all necessary precaution to avoid their being taken, but we are not to use physical force to the injury of any, but to do good instead.

It is useless to multiply texts; for those who would justify any other course will do so, but it will be by man's reasoning of what is right or wrong. There is no justification in the Bible for any other course.

It may seem hard, but it is nevertheless true. You certainly do not think he would justify you in case it should come on account of your belief. Does he make an exception because it is not on account of anything you may have said or done? He does not say so. Would he have been likely to have left anything of so much importance to a mere conjecture? Further, does not the object to be obtained remain the same in either case? and is not suffering a means of our perfection? Christ was made perfect through suffering; and will we be without it? Would it make any difference what brought it about, if it came by obeying God?

It is a very easy matter to ask questions, but far more difficult to answer; but all we need to do is to answer them candidly in our hearts with the Scriptures as our guide. God will hold us responsible for the right interpretation of his word. "Take heed how ye hear."

We will give a few texts relating to the promises to those who follow this course of life:

If we suffer we also shall reign with him. 2 Tim. ii. 12.

But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. 1 Peter iv. 13.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. Rom. viii. 16, 17.

And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations. Rev. ii. 26.

These mean a great deal. They mean exaltation and glory to those who patiently and faithfully keep our Savior's commands.

God is preparing a select company to share with his Son in the government of this world, and aid in the redemptive scheme of bringing the world back to its Edenic purity. Acts iii. 21; Gal. iii 16, 29. And we will share with this exalted and redeemed company only by suffering, which is the plan God has adopted for the perfection of his saints. "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. iii. 12. Shall we be among the number?

A Letter for Those to Whom a Letter is Welcome.

A hearty greeting to THE RESTITUTION and kind good will to its self-sacrificing editor. How appropriate and right are genial sympathies, and a spirit of mutual-burden bearing! Many a tired man is lifted up out of discouragement by a few words of confidence and appreciation. Many an overworked and anxious man is aching and suffering for the lack of needed and generous sympathy. The best basis for friendship, is not only natural congeniality, but the special congeniality of kindred faith, a like recognition of the great truths uttered by Christ.

And this leads me to speak of what may be called the faculty of seeing truth. I may not describe clearly the source or nature of this faculty. It must absolutely require honesty in the beginning. It applies habitual teachableness, like the perpetually open mouth of a cistern to receive water. An occasionally candid and receptive state is not enough. It is far enough from the willingness to receive what is merely agreeable to natural feelings, or in harmony with old opinions. It is something altogether more and better. And then there is the power of discrimination between truth and error. This may be, and is indeed a gift, but its development is wonderfully helped by a habit of mental honesty, and a strict and faithful choice of right and rejection of wrong, so far as the mind can decide. In other words, by choosing the good we see, we are better able to see.

This is a world of trial and trouble, and fixed friendships in such a world are blessed, fixed, though they may be few. What an element of permanence, in like recognitions of truth, as I said at first! How often we feel perplexed, —sometimes from social isolation, and that on account of the truth,—how often we are tempted to feel that our friends are few and far, that we live truly as strangers and foreigners! And not the less so, when professed Christians are so almost infinitesimally divided in doctrine and opinion. How often we are tired with work that seems uncongenial, or beyond our reasonable ability, or both! How often we are left without knowledge of whence our empty purse will be supplied, though we know that God knows all.

Now I say that with knowledge, properly goes love. Knowledge without love is inefficient and insufficient. A man may have intellectual acuteness, and a fund of information on sacred subjects, but without love, there is yet a vital lack. Love is greater than knowledge. God grant us all good gifts and graces, and that true sympathy whose nourishment is the rightly interpreted and heartily received word of the living God. A kind word, a truly gentle and sensible appreciation and approbation, is often a powerful quickener.

What an unfriendly world we live in! What utter disbelief of great truths, and distaste for them! The world is selfish, and carnal, seeking present glory and possessions, as if there were no God and no accountability. It is one scene of practical atheism, which however disguised, or silent, is nevertheless proved, by its refusal of truth. Take the doctrine of the second coming of Messiah. How truly it serves as a test of the quality of professed religion! What aversion it brings to the view of the spiritually discerning, among even nominally religious people! The truth may be allowed in theory, but let it be applied as a fact of present application, to be honestly looked for in our very life time, and, oh, what a total want of interest in it! What a choice of something else which is a practical refusal of this! Look at the interest men feel in new phases of politics, in new schemes for improving the present and earthly life, as if it were to be Methuselah-like in length, or of indefinite and great duration. At this very moment there are millions in our own country agitating political theories, and agitated by them! But what wasted breath and useless bother! The great relief, the grand renovation, the perfect and enduring political system, is inseparable from the second coming of the Chosen of the Father. The excitement and revolutionary restlessness of many thousands of people, their clamor for a change, their demand for laws and institutions that shall multiply their comforts and abolish their troubles, only show what a great crisis we have reached, which is the prophetic herald of coming trouble on the one hand, and Divine deliverance on the other. How living earthly is under a shadow, the shade of the Great Pyramid's impending wall. May we be peaceable, and pure, guarded by the all watching One, and lacking no good thing.

Woe to the world, on account of this so much lauded idol of universal suffrage! Alas, it is but the world's engine of mischief. By it, revolution and wrong will be so legalized, that man worship will be the very condition of citizenship, if citizenship it can be called. By universal suffrage a restless sea of human life will evoke from itself, or give up from its abyss, establish in authority, and crown with its idolatrous honor, an enemy of God. So we teach and so we believe.

Brethren and sisters, are we under the Father's wing? Are we seeking a celestial city, and loving truth more than gold? What a joy to be heart-rectified, and resting in God! To be honest, and pure, and true, to have a character proved and established in truth and righteousness! We have been in the fire, we have been lashed and afflicted, we have suffered sorely, much, it may be from infirmity or short-coming, or personal fault and blame; or because love divine is great, for in choosing us something better. But let us have hope in God. Hope is holy as well as sweet, and much and altogether more pleasing to the eye and mind eternal, than all roads leading toward the town and country of no hope. May the sun shine on us—the better sun, better than the solar world that makes our day and year. Let us be ever saying in heart, or let our heart be ever silently speaking, "welcome, good from God!" Heaven is reserved for faith and the children of faith, that is, as faith's reward. Not believing, we are not looking. Not believing, we are not hoping. Not hoping, we are not ready. We have trials to bear. If we can and do bear them, then and thus, we can bear blessings. How could we bear blessings well, if we could not bear trials? Our trials are expressly to enable us to bear blessings, to bear the glory. Unbelief is unfit for heaven; unfit for for royal state, and pleasure, and administration. Unbelief is an enemy. A skeptic is a fool. Let us have courage and let us have peace.

Let us have union in the truth and in love—the love of truth and the love of that which loves truth. The love of truth is something solid, something that we can and do love, not only the truth, but the love of truth. God is truth, and the love of truth is the love of God.

There are many weak and sorrowful ones, who need refreshment and rest. They are tired with toils that never end, and responsibilities and solicitudes that wear them down and wear them out. They need human sympathy. They need good words and kind words, and kind words are good words. They need a little sunshine to come into their lives. They need a shutter thrown back to let in light, and a door open to let in air and life. They have troubles to bear, and troubles that they wonder at and do not understand. They have the help of God, but they feel that help come genial and soul-reviving through a brother's love, for God's love has a happy road through brotherly love; and poor bent feathers, and tied tired wings, suddenly flush and freshen out in the goodness and kindness of human heart affinities, in the life and power of confidence. Confidence in you, how much it helps you! Confidence in you electrifies you, lifts you up out of darkness and weakness. It cures paralysis. It makes your heart happy and brave, and your hands strong. It doeth good like a medicine.

I know that poor health is a great weariness. Disease is a jailor that plies little, and keeps a close prison-door. Many a pain and grief of mind is wholly born of a disordered body. Some corporal disorders can be remedied by a wise care for the health. Such as are not reasonably or humanely curable, may be borne with the faculty of endurance which has its root and seat in faith. Those were good words, and that is a high and great command, health-giving when obeyed,—"have faith in God." It is most excellent that this is put in the form of a duty and a command, lest in weakness the creature should imagine it was wrong to believe, or that faith was presumption. But faith is not unlawful, it is every way the opposite, and has the high sanction of the Great Teacher. It is always a duty, a delightful and healthful duty and possibility. Who is weak and sore, sad and sick, blind and worn, discouraged and heavy laden? Hear the Savior's great command,—"Have faith in God." Do it and be blessed. Faith in God will do you a world of good.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restoration of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King at Khan, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, an Unconditional preparation in the baptismal rite, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

QUESTIONS OF REVIEW.

My Dear Friends:—As in science, so in our religious investigations, it is well often to review the ground we have gone over. I will, therefore, devote this lesson to that object.

Are you satisfied, that God only hath immortality in his own nature, that, therefore, all created beings must be mortal in their nature and subject to death? Did Christ bring life and immortality to light by his own resurrection from the dead? Was this not immortality presented as an object to be sought for, by a patient continuance in well doing? Was it not to be given to such at the resurrection of the dead, when this mortal shall put on immortality? Is it not the body that is to become immortal? Are the words immortal, and immortality, and their equivalents ever applied to men in this life? Are they applied to any but the righteous in the world to come? Then is it not true that man must be wholly mortal till the resurrection of the dead?

Are you satisfied, that the history of the creation of man as given in the Bible is true? that he was formed of the dust of the ground as were the beasts? that he like them was to live by breathing the breath of life, and by eating the fruits of the earth? and that he like them was called a living soul, and was to multiply and replenish the earth, and be subject to death? Do you not think he was made in the image of God to fit him for the position he was to occupy, and the work he was to do, to have dominion over the animals, and over all the earth, and to subdue it? Was he not to live forever, by being obedient, and eating freely of the tree of life? And for transgression was he not to be excluded from the tree of life, and die so as not to live? Then, is it not true, that man was not created in any sense immortal?

Are you satisfied, that the dead know not anything? that in the day their breath goeth forth, their thoughts perish, and they return to dust? that in death there is no remembrance of God? that their love, and their hatred, and their envy are perished? and that in the grave where men go when they die, there is no device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, nor understanding, nor purpose? Then, it is not true, that men continue to live after they have died and returned to dust.

Are you satisfied, that if the dead rise not, then the dead are perished forever? that the hope of the gospel depends entirely on the resurrection of the dead? Is it true that Christ is the first fruits of them that sleep? Is he the first sheaf of the harvest of the dead? the first born from the dead? the first born among many brethren? the first that should rise from the dead? Is he the way, the resurrection, and the life? Then, is it not true, that in order to be saved, we must be raised from the dead as he was? our mortal body must be quickened by the spirit as his was? our earthy body must be made the heavenly as his was? our natural body must be made a spiritual body as his was? our vile body must be fashioned like unto his glorious body? and this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality, so that we can die no more, as Christ can die no more? If these things are so, can there be any recompense before the resurrection of the dead?

Are you satisfied, that the narrative concerning the rich man and Lazarus, is a parable? Do you think they died as other men die, so as not to live? Were they treated after their death as other men are treated after they die? Can their death and what followed it, represent the death of other men, and their condition after death, when the two deaths are not alike? The rich man and Lazarus died so as to continue to live; other men die so as not to live. After Lazarus died he was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom. Is this true of other beggars? The rich man died and was buried in a flame of fire. Is this true of other rich men? Then can this parable be used to represent the condition of those who have died so as not to live?

Are you satisfied, that Paul did not expect to be with Christ when he died? that he was not in a strait between living in the flesh, and dying so as to be with Christ without the flesh? but that it was a strait simply between life and death, that his desire was for something far better than life in the flesh or death? That he hoped for the returning and being with Christ? that this was far better than life or death? that he believed in the coming of the Lord, the resurrection of the dead to reward every man according to his works, that, when Christ, who was his life, should appear, then he should appear with him in glory? If Paul hoped "to be made alive at his coming," "to receive his crown of righteousness at his appearing and kingdom," "to be raised from the dead and caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air when he comes," and if he believed "that if the dead rise not, then those who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Could he have desired or hoped for any reward before the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead? Instead of dying to be with Christ, did he not expect to be made alive at his coming to be with him?

Are you satisfied, that the thief was not with Christ in Paradise on the day of his crucifixion? that the grave in which he was buried was not Paradise? that the thief was not with him in the grave? that there was no Paradise in existence at that time? that Christ was crucified, that Joseph buried him in his own sepulchre? that he remained there three days and three nights? that he was raised from the dead on the third day? that he remained with the Apostles forty days? that he ascended up to heaven and is now sitting down at the right hand of the throne of God? Then, is not the sense of the promise made to the thief this: "Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in Paradise when I come in my kingdom?"

Are you satisfied, that the saints will never go to heaven to be with Christ, or to receive their reward? that there are no promises in the Bible that the saints will go to heaven? that their treasure which is laid up in heaven will be brought to them at the revelation of Jesus Christ? that when he comes he will bring his reward with him to give to every man as his works shall be? that instead of going to heaven, they will inherit the earth and dwell therein forever? that the kingdom under the whole heaven will be given to them, and they will reign with Christ on the earth over all nations forever and ever? Then the saints will not go to heaven at death, or at any other time.

I have introduced the above topics as a preliminary to an explanation of the glorious purpose of God as revealed in the Bible concerning the world in which we live. Now, if you have been instructed by what I have said, and are beginning to understand that much of what we have learned in early life must be unlearned before we can comprehend the gospel of the kingdom of God, one important point has been gained, and I shall proceed with renewed courage and hope to speak of things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.

Hoping that I have succeeded in removing some of the obstacles in the way of a clear understanding of the gospel, I remain your friend and well wisher, JOEL A. SIMONS.

Our Duty No. 3.

And I say unto you, make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. Luke xvi. 9.

This text stands in connection with the parable of the unjust steward. Upon it might seem to a casual reader as though our Savior commanded the course to be pursued; but I think upon a careful perusal of the text, we will come to far different conclusions; and it is certain we will, with a proper understanding of the other Scriptures.

The Diaglott translation affords us some light, and gives us a clue to what our Savior really did mean. It is as follows: "And I say to you, make for yourselves friends with the deceitful wealth." This leads us to the following thought: the mammon of unrighteousness is not the friend we are to make, but is the means to be used with which to procure that friend. So it was with the steward in the parable. He used the unrighteous mammon to procure friends for himself, but it was not the friends. He was commended by his old master for so worldly-wise an act, and all who use it spiritually-wise will be commended by the Great Master of the ages to come.

But He says, "the sons of this age are more prudent as to that generation which is their own, than the children of light." ver. 8, Diaglott. Of course their generation, or people, is the worldly people; ours the heavenly—Jesus. Now they take more pains to make friends of their own people than we do; they will use the deceitful wealth upon them while we are loth to use it except for our own worldliness, and seem unwilling to spend but little, if any, upon Jesus—for His cause—in order to make for ourselves a lasting friend.

There are two general ways in which we can spend the deceitful wealth in order to make Jesus our friend. One of them is in assisting the poor. "If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? James ii. 15, 16. "He answered and saith unto them, he that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." Luke iii. 10, 11. "And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thanks have ye? for sinners also do even the same. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thanks have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners to receive as much again," Luke vi. 33, 34. Many other passages might be quoted, but we are all sufficiently acquainted with our duty on this point and only need to take heed. "For whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. As we have, therefore, opportunity let us do good to all men, especially unto them of the household of faith." Gal. vi. 7-10.

The word, or gospel, is to be preached. Jesus says to his disciples where he sent them forth: "And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give you; for the laborer is worthy of his hire." Luke x. 7. Paul says: "And the laborer is worthy of his reward." 1 Tim. v. 8. To the Corinthian brethren he says, "Have we (Barnabas and I) not power to eat and drink? Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, have we not power to forbear working?" 1 Cor. ix. 4-6. "For it is written in the law of Moses, thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." Doth God take care of oxen, or saith He it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written; "because (Diag.) he that ploweth should plow in hope, and he that threasheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. If we have sown to you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." ver. 9-11, 14. "Let the person being taught the word communicate to the instructor in all good things." Gal. vi. 6, Diag. "It hath pleased them verily, and their debtors they are; for if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things." Rom. xv. 27.

This duty is applicable to any form of publishing the Gospel, or "rightly dividing the word of truth." It includes the scattering of these little, silent messengers—tracts; and the support of our paper. This work must be done—the Gospel preached—and there is no way that so many can be reached as through these mediums; and none with so little expense.

Are we all faithful in this matter? We will want a friend that is lasting "when it (Diag.) fails" us; and if we but use it (the unrighteous mammon) for Jesus, we will have just the friend we will want in the hour of greatest need.

"Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." Some will try to evade doing good, for they will say this was a test to the young man who had great possessions. This is, no doubt, true to a great extent; but unless our hearts are as Jesus required this young man to have his, we shall not have treasures in heaven. We are to be willing to part with all we have for the honest-hearted, suffering poor; and certainly we would not in any case see anyone in a destitute, or real suffering state, and not relieve them if it lay in our power. The young man went away sorrowful. I think some of us go away from a passage like this, sorrowful. I fear we are unwilling to part with all we have; if, however, we are, we need not expect to have the true wealth imparted to us. "How hardly shall a rich man enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Here is another passage of like import. "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all he hath cannot be my disciple." Luke xii. 33. We are to forsake all in our hearts—be ready and willing to leave everything. Abram as effectually offered up Isaac in his heart, as though he had actually slain him; and, too, it was so effectual that he received him from the dead in figure. In like manner we must forsake all; yet He may allow us to part with it in fact to test us if we are faithful.

If we want an everlasting friend, we must be faithful in that which is another's; for we will be held responsible; for He has left instructions how to use it. S. H. REEVE.

Faith.

Without Faith it is impossible to please God.

Though a man possess all the virtues of morality; though he possess the mightiest intellect, and is considered by the world, great, and noble, and good, yet if he lack faith, we have the authority of the Bible, he cannot please God. As the word of God declares faith to be of such paramount importance, how essential that man should understand it. Come then and let us search the Scriptures for in them ye have eternal life. Paul defines faith as "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things unseen." The most natural question the inquirer after truth would make is: what are the things hoped for of which faith is the substance? Paul answers in Acts xxvi.

"For the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers"—for which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews. Again comes the inquiry; what was the promise made of God unto the fathers? Turn to Genesis and read first the promise: "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Observe the promise to Abraham, that God would make of him a great nation and in him and his seed (singular) all the nations of the earth should be blest. That God would give to him and to his seed all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and that his seed (plural) should become as the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea shore for multitude. Read the promises made to Isaac and Jacob in Gen. xxvi. 3, xxviii. 14-15, xxxv. 12. From the teaching in these chapters we learn that the promises made of God unto the fathers, are:

1st. That Abraham's seed (plural) in the line of descent from Isaac, Jacob and his twelve sons, will become a strong and mighty nation.

2nd. That the land of Canaan was given to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob for an everlasting inheritance, therefore the Adamic curse of death must be removed and they raised from the dead and given life eternal before they can realize the promise.

3d. That when they are raised they will be put in the actual possession of the land between the river Euphrates and the Nile.

4th. That Abraham's seed in whom all the nations of the earth are to be blest is Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ of God. Gal. iii. That he will be a great and powerful King, the ruler over the nations, the Heir of all things, and the Prince of Peace.

5th. That he would come of the line of Judah. In these things consisted the faith of Abraham. This is the substance of things hoped for; the promise of God unto the fathers.

Now Paul teaches in Gal. iii. that this faith or full persuasion that what God has thus promised He will perform, is accounted for righteousness to all those who become the children of Abraham by immersion into Jesus the Anointed. Then if ye be Christ's ye are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise.

Again the Scriptures teach that Christ the seed of Abraham became the conqueror of death and the "first fruits of them that slept," and that he brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel (glad tidings) to all believers in the promises whose faith was counted for righteousness. From the Bible teaching then it is plain that faith is definite, and because it is specified the definite article the, should be used in connection with it. This would contradict the teaching that faith is simply belief on Jesus, and all that is required for salvation is to acknowledge him as the Son of God. A man may believe in Jesus with all his strength and yet be entirely ignorant of faith, and therefore in an unjustified condition. A man must not only believe in Jesus the Son of God, but he must believe on him also as the Christ of God, the seed of the woman, the fulfiller of the promises to the fathers, the seed of Abraham and the giver of peace to the nations; the Heir to David's throne; the King of Israel, and the author of eternal life to all those who by faith in the promises put him on. All these things are embraced in the comprehensive title, Jesus of Nazareth the Christ of God.

The saving faith defined by Paul condemns the dogma of kingdoms beyond the skies. God did not promise Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, an inheritance in that celestial region; but He swore with an oath to give them the land of Canaan on which they stood for an everlasting possession. God desired Abraham to look on the length and breadth of the land, for it was so be his forever. When these fathers are raised from the dead they will not ascend into heaven, but they will dwell on the land promised and covenanted to them by God.

Faith contradicts emphatically inherent immortality. For he who believes not the promises can not put on Christ who is the author of life, nor can he become the seed of Abraham and heir to the glories of the promised inheritance. Therefore, by unbelief in what God has promised, man is alienated from Christ and falls under the dominion of sin. Now "the wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Thus immortality is a gift, and only promised of God to those who by faith and "continuance in well doing seek for it." Inherent immortality is no part of the Scriptural faith; for faith teaches that "God has reserved some better thing for us that they (the fathers) without us should not be made perfect."

The faith exalts the Bible in our estimation. When we comprehend its teachings, the mists of the Apostasy vanish and the clear sunlight of the truth as it is in Jesus reveals the glorious path that leads unto immortality. We are no more confounded with the world, no more bewildered in the maze of Theology; but being persuaded of the promises, and having embraced them, we can confess with the fathers that we are strangers and pilgrims in the earth and that we seek a country. Faith, as the evidence of things unseen, enables us to look forward to the time when they will be revealed. Thus the faith is the telescope through which we scan the heavens for the promised revelation of the glory of God. Clouds and darkness may interpose, but its mighty magnifying power penetrates their gloom and reveals the eternal sunshine of immortality. W. I. CROCKETT.

And grief may bide an evening guest,
But joy shall come with early light.

Those days are lost in which we do no good; those worse than lost in which we do evil.

The wealth of a man is the number of things which he loves and blesses, which he is loved and blessed by.

Time's sun is fast setting,
Its twilight is waning;
Its evening is falling
In cloud o'er the sky.
Its shadows are stretching
In ominous gloom;
Its midnight approaches—
The midnight of doom.

Cunning is only the minute of discretion, and may pass upon weak men, just as pertness is often mistaken for wit and gravity for wisdom.

It is true in matter of estate, as of our garments, not that which is largest, but that which fits us best, is best for us. "Be content with such things as ye have."—Archbishop Leighton.

"Awaken, O, chosen and faithful,
And see that your lamps burn bright;
For thick fall the evening shadows,
Then follows the deep, dark night!
The train hath set forth to the marriage,
The Bridegroom is on his way,
And silently cometh the midnight,—
"Awaken, and watch and pray!"

He that pursues honor, applause, or worldly reputation, is like the foolish schoolboy running after the butterfly, and neglecting his book; both meet with disappointment, dissatisfaction, and reproof.

Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart.
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold;
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet with sandals loosed may rest,
Where we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say, God knew the best."

Polished steel will not shine in the dark; no more can human reason, however refined and cultivated, shine efficaciously but as it reflects the light of divine truth from heaven.—John Foster.

The life is in the tree, when winter
Has thrown a robe of snow
Over the branches, and suspended
Their life-blood's ebb and flow;
The hurtful germ has not been stifled,
Though covered by the cloud,—
It shall grow, and in the harvest
Confirm the pledge of God.

They have long preserved with religious care in Germany a fragment of the rock to which John Huss was chained just prior to his death at the stake. This precious relic has now been conveyed to Prague, and is to be deposited in the National Museum of Bohemia.

From the selfish world apart,
He Belief sounds behind,
He who takes a faithful heart
A faithful God will find,

And a mis-trely shall fall
Upon his ravished ears
The worldling cannot hear at all—
"The music of the spheres!"

Learn this lesson: Christ has been with his church from the beginning of the world. The bush may blaze, but God is in the bush, and it cannot be consumed. His saints may suffer; but their sufferings shall only spread their faith, and glorify their Lord. And all things, the blunders of its friends, the bitterness of its enemies, the silence of its advocates, the opposition of its foes, all things in height and depth, shall aid the cause of Christ, and prosper that church of which he is the foundation and blessed hope.—Cummings.

Our field is the world; let us forth to the reaping,
The long day is waning, the eve draweth nigh,
Now omens of storm up the heavens are creeping,
The sigh of the tempest is heard in the sky;
The work-hour is brief, but the rest is forever;
Then stay not for weariness, languor, or pain,
But forth to the reaping, with earnest endeavor,
And gather with gladness the sheaves that remain.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. J. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG 21, 1878.

REPORTS of meetings in Virginia and North Carolina are laid over to appear next week.

BROTHER CHAPLIN is down sick. He is hardly able to sit up. But his trust is in the All-Father whose ear is ever open to the pure in heart.

BRO. JOHN S. ARNOLD, of Illinois, writes us to the effect that he will be unable to attend the Iowa conference, as advertised in brother Myers's announcement.

THE news from all parts of the world portends great and important changes in the kingdoms of men. The way is rapidly preparing for the last grand drama in the affairs of the Roman earth previous to the judgment or the seventh vial. "Blessed is he that watcheth."

THE plates of that truly valuable little book, "Earnest Words for Honest Skeptics," have been purchased by the Chicago publishing house of F. H. Revell, who expects to have an edition completed in October. We shall be glad to receive orders, which will be filled as soon as the edition is out.

BROTHER RICHARD CORBALEY writes to his son residing here that the brethren in California have a tent, and that they are intending to do considerable missionary work in that golden state. Success to the effort. Brother Corbaley baptized his son Platt a short time since. May his way grow brighter unto the perfect day.

Anglo-Israel.

Notwithstanding the Editor of the Rainbow has afforded space in his columns for a communication entitled—"Anglo-Saxons not Israelites," his own belief in the identity of the two seems very firm from the following which we copy from the Rainbow for August 1878. He says:

"Anglo-Israel.—Prophecy is fulfilling rapidly before our eyes, and the fact is not observed. We hold that the Anglo-Saxons are Israelites, and that they specially represent the tribe of Ephraim, to whom the birthright was given. Israel was promised an inheritance of vast extent. The promise was fulfilled the other day, as one of the first fruits of the momentous eastern question. England is the heir, and England is now the ruling power in Asia. The inheritance promised to Abraham has come to us. Egypt with the Suez canal and maritime route to India, Asia Minor with Arabia, as also Syria and the rich Euphrates districts, Turkey on both sides of the Bosphorus, together with the road over Persia to the vassal states of central Asia, are now all under the powerful dominion of Great Britain. This enormous sovereignty over India, Asia, Syria and the Holy Land could come to no other people on earth but one. There is no longer any obscurity. The time of the end has come. We are Israel, and we possess the land of promise! Let us watch the sequel with profound and prayerful attention. Events will be speedily developed now. Our faith has not been disappointed. Our hope will be splendidly realized. Thanks to the God of Israel! And the coming of the king of Israel is not far distant now. On all this we must speak more freely hereafter. This is simply a note to call attention to a great theme."

Though we have never expressly indorsed the theory that the descendants of Ephraim are the Anglo-Saxons, yet we feel quite an interest in the question which has to us thus far remained an open one. Some very able writers have committed themselves to the reception of the theory with almost unwavering confidence. Says a writer in reference to the wasting away of the Moslem dominion under the figure of the evaporation of the Great River in connection with Israelitish and Jewish restoration:

"It is striking, that the drying up of the river Euphrates by Cyrus, was the great step, preparatory to the restoration of the Jews from Babylon. And the drying up of the same river, in the sixth vial, is mystically the preparatory step for the final restoration of the Jews and Israel. Perhaps we need look no further to find the allusion of the sixth vial. And as the drying up by Cyrus destroyed the power that had prevented the restoration of the Jews; so the drying up by the sixth vial, will subvert the power now in the way of the restoration of the Jews—the Turks."

This was written sixty-eight years ago. Now the drying up of the mystical power has become an accomplished fact and Great Britain has, almost miraculously, become the predominating power in Asia. Already an English navigation company occupies the Euphrates and thus monopolizes the commerce of this great oriental highway. An English railway from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean is contemplated, and another, leading from some point on the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean to the Black sea, is said to be virtually assured. In the words of a daily journal, "The process of Anglicizing Asia Minor, politically as well as commercially, is begun." The Mediterranean has become, in effect, a great English lake. The impregnable Gibralter commands the entrance to the Mediterranean; Malta, one of the best fortified places in the world, is in the narrow part of the sea between Sicily and Africa, commanding the middle, and now England has possession of Cyprus, hardly less important than Gibralter itself, being but a few hours' sail from Port Said at the entrance of the Suez canal. In this canal England has a controlling influence, and then she has possession of the island Perim in the strait of Bab-el-Man-deb, at the entrance to the Red Sea, thereby as effectually commanding the ingress to this sea as to the Mediterranean, and recently they have taken possession of Socotra, a very considerable and important island in the Arabian sea, just out of the Gulf of Aden. In addition Britain has another strong place at the southwest extremity of the great Arabian Peninsula which is one of the principal coaling stations of the Anglo-Indian mail steamers, and is thus a place of the greatest importance. The control of England over the Mediterranean in its whole length and breadth is complete and absolute, and Britain now commands all the routes, both by land and water, to India. The promise to Abraham was that his seed should "possess the gates of his enemies." Britian has now the gates. But we must close. We feel quite an interest in the subject, and shall watch the passing and coming events with interest.

Our Earthly Tabernacle.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. 2 Cor. v. 1-4.

The above language from the Apostle has been looked upon by many expositors as affording strong proof for the continued conscious existence of the soul after the body dies. After much reflection upon the different expressions occurring in this remarkable quotation, we feel confident that the Apostle does not refer to the act of dying or to the soul of man as something living in the body. In this article we shall notice the points which have led us to opposite conclusions from those generally received.

There are a number of expressions in the language which we desire to notice:

1. The tabernacle.
2. Dissolved.
3. The clothed upon state.
4. Mortality swallowed up of life.

In noticing the use of the word tabernacle as used in the Bible, we would state that out of the many occurrences of this word, it never means the human body. This is in the first assumption, and has misled many from understanding the text. Throughout the Mosaic dispensation the word tabernacle referred to the place of worship, or to some residence, but never to the human body. When Paul, therefore, wrote he used a term perfectly familiar to his readers.

The reader will observe that there are two tabernacles set forth in the language. The first refers to the present order of things under the ministry of the Jewish ritual, all of which is grouped under the idea of the "earthly house of this tabernacle." It includes the suffering condition of the present life. The whole church at Corinth was in that state of groaning with the groaning creation, waiting for the adoption, to-wit: The redemption of the body.

The word tabernacle as used in the New Testament never refers to the human body as the place where the soul resides, and the language as here used has no reference to that idea. The Apostle is referring to that great change which will take place when the earthly life is succeeded by the new and eternal state under that age when the tabernacle of God shall be with men. See Rev. xxi. 1-4. That tabernacle is eternal, and is now in heaven, and is the place where Jesus is minister, but no one can enter it during its abode in heaven. Neither can any man enter it until after the seven last plagues are poured out. In proof of these points please read Heb. viii. 1-3; x.; Rev. xv.

Peter states that he will put off his tabernacle as the Lord showed at the Mount of Transfiguration. It was on that sublime occasion that he cried out: "Lord let us make here three tabernacles." Christ showed him by the great change from the mortal state to the kingly position how he was to become an inheritor under the sunshining glory of the kingdom of God—at which time the tabernacle of God, immortality and honor should become his in full possession. So much, then, for the word tabernacle.

2. Dissolved. This expression is generally supposed to refer to death, or what is termed "the dissolution of soul and body." This however, is unfounded. The word dissolved occurs ten times in the Bible, and never refers to death! In the New Testament it refers to that grand change which shall take place when the old heavens and the old earth give way to the new. Peter says, "Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be," etc., then refers directly to the Apostle Paul as having referred to the same dissolution. It is remarkable that this leads right to the text under consideration. When the present order of things is dissolved, the new world will come and then the tabernacle of God will be with men.

3. The clothed upon state. This is most beautifully illustrated by the white raiment, the marriage scene and the glory of the new world when the redeemed shall be clothed in white and be with the Lord in his glorious kingdom. The disciple is admonished by our Lord to keep his garments lest he walk naked and they see his shame. Paul says of the dear saints, we shall not be naked. Compare 2 Cor. v. 1-4 with Rev. iii. 5; chapter xvi. 15; xix. 7, 8; chapter vii. 13, 14.

The saints will have the investiture of the heavenly tabernacle and shall be clothed upon with the heavenly ornaments of the Bride when she comes forth as queen of the millennial day.

4. Swallowed up of life. Our life is now hid with Christ in God, and when he who is our life shall come from the invisible, we shall behold the full meaning of that sublime utterance in Isaiah, "I will swallow death in victory." To swallows up mortality. This will not take place until this mortal puts on (is clothed with) immortality, and corruption puts on incorruption. Then, says Paul, "Death is swallowed up in victory." This is the time to which he refers in the texts under consideration. Mortality is swallowed up of life in the kingdom of God. See 1 Cor. xv. 52-56.

In view of what has been said, we can but see that the Apostle is referring to the great epoch when the earthly state of abode, with its pains, groans, tears and sorrow shall give way, and the endless life, the eternal home and immortality shall be the final state of the redeemed. How dwarfish, therefore, that view appears to be, which refers this whole text to the passage of the soul from the body. Not a word about the soul or spirit. Even the word death does not occur. The terms used all refer to that sublime age of events when the church of God shall be translated from the cross to the crown, from her weeping to her exaltation, and the glory of God. For, says Paul: "We walk by faith and not by sight." May our faith rest on these heavenly promises and we gain that rest which is now so near, is our earnest prayer. H. V. REED.

A Discourse Delivered at Holly Springs, N. C., the Fourth Sunday in July, 1878.

Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him. Lev. xix. 17.

Enter ye in at the straight gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in there at; because straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Matt. vii 13, 14.

Strive to enter in at the straight gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able. Luke xiii. 24.

The first passage is from the law, and is in strict accord or harmony with the teaching of Christ, strictly enjoining upon the servants of God plain, faithful dealing with their brethren and their neighbors; it enjoins a duty very difficult to discharge, without giving offence, for there is nothing so apt to give offence as to be told of our faults. Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me—Christ. The way to eternal life is illustrated by many forcible figures of speech, but none more so than the ones we have chosen as a heading for a few practical remarks; it was the manner of the great teacher to use some metaphor, circumstance, symbol or parable, that would the most forcibly impress the truth upon the minds of his hearers, illustrating and embellishing with bold figures of speech, have always had much to do with public teaching and giving instruction. The two gates, the broad and the narrow; the one leading to eternal life, the other to eternal death or destruction, are very impressive, and are of very frequent use in the Scriptures. They are the two great opposite truths or principles underlying the sum total of Divine revelation, often referring to the happy condition of the righteous gathered into eternal life through the blood of Christ, but never refer to eternal misery or endless torment. The strait gate and narrow way are illustrative of the Christian's course in his present state and condition; he must discipline himself by the word of God and form a character in harmony with the Divine being. To such eternal life is promised, and will surely be given, vice versa; and so of the doom of those who throng the broad way; who enter in at the wide gate; whose end is destruction, death eternal! from which there is no resurrection; they suffer the penalty of the law, go back to dust, the element from which they were made. This is the fiat of the great Jehovah, and all orthodox theology cannot make one hair black or white.

We wish to be practical in our remarks and apply the Scripture rule to our everyday life and business transactions; not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of God, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven! Faith is essential, and without it, it is impossible to please God, and yet is of no avail without corresponding works; it is comparatively an easy matter to believe the gospel, the good news of the kingdom of God, but to obey and practically live it out in every day life is a very hard and difficult matter. Sell all that thou hast; take up thy cross and follow me; when the gospel is preached, and the seed falls into good ground, takes root, springs up, it brings forth good fruit. By their fruits ye shall know them; every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. When one hears the word of the kingdom, if he believes, he repents. There is a power of meaning in the word repentance.

1. It is deep heartfelt sorrow for having sinned against a holy, loving Father.

2. It is a change of mind and a purpose to reform our life, habits and character; it is to turn square about; it is to forsake the service of sin and Satan, and to engage in God's service.

If we judge men by their fruits we don't find many out and out Bible Christians, but we hope to find a few. We now come to ask a few plain questions, and hope that no offence will be given if they are Bible questions, and if the garment should suit any of our brethren that they will not be so very charitable as to give it all to their neighbors, but put it on and wear it till it works a reformation in life and habits. Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil, etc.

First, upon what principle, or by what rule is the church of God or Bible Christians to transact business by or upon? This is a deeply important question and requires a candid answer. If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die! What is it to live after the flesh but to do as they do, live as they live, buy and sell, and get gain as the Gentile world does; follow sharp practice, make a good bargain, get all you can and keep all you get? Oh, is it wrong to lay up for a rainy day? The man who does it, is not apt to have very much faith in God; nor is he very much given to pray from a loving, trusting heart, Lord, give us this day our daily bread. We affirm that the principles upon, or the rule by, which the Gentiles or men of this world do business, is at variance with the word of God, is wrong, and should be abandoned. Are we under the law or under grace? When our Savior, Redeemer and Law-giver was qualified for the work the eternal Father had assigned him to do, and being qualified by a baptism in water, and anointed with holy spirit, his first public teaching was to give a code of laws by which the church of God should be governed during the times of the Gentiles or the gospel age. When we give up our Gentile name and take the name of Christian by being baptized into Christ by an immersion in water for the remission of our sins, we are cut off or debarred from all Gentile practices that conflict with Christ's plainly written law which he enforced both by precept and example. It is very derogatory to the Christian name to know the way and manner in which some of the professed followers of Christ adopt to get money. If I were to talk it out just as I know it to be, you would cry out, uncharitable, censorious, an accuser of the brethren; but facts are stubborn things. We do know that some think it no harm to violate both the law of God and men, and take unlawful interest or usury and justify themselves because it is the theory and practice of the men of the world. We do know of some who borrow of their brethren and make no effort to pay what they know a poor brother very much needs. We do know that there are those who have believed and obeyed the gospel who are following their old sinful habits and practices; we do know of many who have heard and believed the gospel, but refuse to render that obedience the word of God requires. Let all such know that God is no respecter of persons. Be not deceived, God is not mocked; what a man sows, that shall he also reap. A few inferences drawn from the foregoing and we will close.

Who can estimate or calculate the results of Christianity and the benefits accruing? If there were no false professors or hypocritical pretenders, infidelity would hide its deformed head, a perishing world would stand aghast, devils would fear and tremble; the mild and peaceable reign of the Lord Jesus Christ would be inaugurated; his kingdom be under the whole heavens, and his glory fill the world. An honest man is a jewel, is above price, cannot be estimated or a price set upon him; his value is above rubies.

What a beautiful world ours would be if all were honest, pure, holy and Christ-like. Such is to be the planet earth, when the curse is removed and redemption's glorious scheme accomplished, and all things restored, spoken of by the mouth of all God's holy prophets since the world began. As there are some to be baptized, we will not pursue this subject further at this time, but will give you a short gospel sermon on the obedience of faith. What is the gospel? It is God's message or good news of the kingdom of God, so expounded by the Savior, for he went throughout the cities and villages of Judea preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.

1. What constitutes God's kingdom? where located? and when set up?

2. The connection of Jesus Christ with that kingdom; for when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

3. The obedience of the gospel and its requirements.

4. The additions, embracing all the Christian duties enjoined in the word of God.

5. The reward, an inheritance in the kingdom, which will be under the whole heavens. Dan. ii. and vii.

NEWELL BOND.

West Bank, N. C.

Our Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting for the state of Indiana convened at Argos, per appointment. The attendance was large. There were brethren from Michigan, Ohio and Illinois present, besides a liberal attendance from various parts of Indiana. All seemed to be highly pleased with the meeting and with the congregation at Argos. The preaching was expository and practical, and was listened to by large audiences. Ten different proclaimers of the gospel of the grace of God were present and spoke of "the things most surely believed among us." Exhortations, giving of thanks and prayers for the going forth of the truth were made. The hearts of many were made glad over the proofs afforded the students of prophecy by the wonderful things now moving the old world toward its great crisis. It is pleasant, indeed, to attend such gatherings and mingle our voices in praise to the Giver of all things. The lights along the way are shining brighter as the world grows darker. Let us struggle for the crown that we may enter the golden city and reign with the King. H. V. REED.

SELECTIONS.

[Bible Banner.]

Who go up From Year to Year to Worship the King?

Please give an explanation of Zech. xiv. 16-18. What is this "Feast of Tabernacles," if it is in the new earth? Will people be forced to worship the Lord? Will they not worship of a willing mind? C. D. R.

REPLY BY GEO. R. KRAMER.

If we accept the Scriptural doctrine of the Millennium we think it can be understood. If, immediately upon the advent of Christ, the judgment of the "great white throne" occurs and the new earth is created, we know of no way to explain it. In Zech. xiv. 16-18 and Rev. 19, is given a view of Christ's coming in person from heaven with his saints whom he has previously resurrected and translated. Zech. xiv. 1-5 gives us the same scene. In both we have Christ coming with his saints to destroy the armies of Antichrist. In Rev. 19, armies follow Christ from the marriage supper as he comes, as the Sun of Righteousness, like the bridegroom rejoicing from his chamber; and in Zech. xiv. 5, we read, "The Lord my God will come and all the saints with thee."

The result of this advent will be as in Zech. xiv. 9: "And the Lord will be King over all the earth." Not the new earth, but the millennial earth. In the new earth we read of no more sea, but in the Millennium, Jesus Christ "shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust." "All nations (we see there will be nations) shall serve him." They will be compelled to accept his sovereignty. Read Zech. 14 and Rev. 19 together. See the same result as in Zech. xiv. 9, brought to view in Rev. xx. 4. Those who reign with Christ, reign during the Millennium. But how can they reign without subjects? "To him that overcometh will I give power over the nations." These nations, and not the resurrected saints, are the subjects, and they will be compelled to go up to Jerusalem, (not the New Jerusalem, which is the metropolis of the new earth; but earth's Jerusalem rebuilt,) which is the metropolis of the millenial earth. Read Isaiah ii. 1-4 and Micah iv. 1-4, and see that there will be nations to be ruled or judged in righteousness during a thousand years.

In Isaiah xxxii. 1, we read: "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness and princes shall rule in judgment." Some persons must be subjects; they are not the saints, for they "reign with Christ." In 1 Cor. vi. 2, we read: "The saints (these princes of Isa. xxxii. 1,) shall judge the world." Admit the Bible doctrine of a Millennium, and a real literal kingdom of Christ over the nations of the earth when he comes the second time, and Zech. xiv. 16-18, can be explained. "He shall have the heathen for his inheritance," and they must "serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling." The resurrected saints will be joyful in glory, (Psalm cxlix.) and they will reign with Christ. (Col. iii. 4.)

Among the ancient literature regarding Cyprus which the English have raked out of comparative obscurity is the Cosmographie of Peter Heylyn, published in 1652, in which the island is called "hot and swelthry, the soyle moystened with some few brooks," yet so often dried up that "in the reign of Constantinople the Great this island was for thirty-six years together utterly forsaken, no rain falling all that time." Yet it is stored with "plenty of all things—wine, oil, corn, sugar, cotton, honey, wool, turpentine, alum, verdigris, all sorts of metals, store of salt, grograms, and other commodities, whereupon this island was called Macaria, i. e., happy." The following is one of the most noteworthy passages of the old chronicle: "The people hereof are warlike, strong, and nimble; of great civility, hospitality to their neighbors, and love to strangers of all nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan the Jews inhabiting Egypt and the adjoining countreys drew themselves together, and chose one Alexander for their Captain, under whose conduct they entered into this island, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240,000 persons of all sexes and ages; not without much bloodshed vanquished and slain by Lucius, the Emperor's Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the island but come he hither voluntarily, or by force of tempest, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to execution. A hated nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity reprieve from that cruel customs."

Now behold the son of a Jew as the instrument for bringing Cyprus into a new civilization. "Jews only excepted" will not henceforth be the record.

When, in 1870, Benjamin Disraeli was advocating the passage of the bill making Queen Victoria Empress of India, he spoke of the day when "a chain of fortresses would bind the Ganges to the Thames." A little while ago Cyprus was added to that chain, and now the cable brings the news that the island of Socotra in the Indian ocean has become an integral portion of the empire upon which the sun never sets. Socotra is a bold, picturesque island, equal in area to the State of Rhode Island, and containing mountains which tower to the height of 5,000 feet above the tropical seas which surround it. It lies 100 miles to the eastward of Aden, another British station, at the mouth of the Red sea, and, like the latter, occupies a commanding position in the track of the vessels going from Bombay to Suez. It contains but a few thousand inhabitants, and is chiefly celebrated for its aloes and the gum of the dragon's blood tree mentioned by Sinbad the Sailor. The English Government contemplated its occupation as early as 1834, and even went so far as to land troops there, but subsequently abandoned it for Aden. Now, however, they have taken possession in earnest. Socotra was originally colonized by the soldiers of Alexander the Great, and is famed as having been the scene of Francis Xavier's missionary labors in 1525.

Considerable excitement has been caused in the district of Tekuch, Roumania, by the sudden appearance of a species of mole, yellowish in color, of a snake-like appearance, which has already destroyed 120 acres of wheat, part of the ground being cleared so effectually that it is impossible to tell what species of grain had been sown thereon. These animals disappear during the daytime in holes dug in the earth, and come out at night to commence their depredations. The oldest inhabitant has never seen anything of the kind before.

POETRY.

An Advent Rhyme.

See, my friends, the light is fading—
Light of a beclouded day;
Night of doubt our faith is shading,
Error leads the world away.
With the twilight
Comes the dawn of brighter day.

Watch! and ye shall see the morning,
With its purple and its gold,
Watch, in spite of cold and scorning;
See the gates of day unfold.
Earth's deliverance
From the long-borne curse behold!

Wait! your watchful eye upturning,
For the promised Advent sign.
While your lamps are brightly burning,
In your hearts its light shall shine,
And your being
Take a glorious form divine.

Softly, like a whisper falling
Only on attentive ear,
Comes a message, each one calling
In his presence to appear,
"Lo! the Bridegroom
Does not tarry; he is near."

Open stand the palace portals,
Out the blinding splendors leap;
Enter glorified immortals,
Ye your virgin bottle who keep.
Heirs of all things,
Time's ripe harvest now ye reap.

Man's Nature and Destiny.

Editor Restitution:—The following is a correspondence I have had with a congregation in Kentucky. I will begin with my letter to the church at Republican meeting house:

Dear Brethren:—More than forty years ago I united with your church, and was appointed clerk. A reorganization was proposed, and I was instructed to prepare an article of agreement. At the next church meeting I presented one with the Bible for our only rule of faith and practice, and every member present signed it. Afterward I became an elder, but moved out of the neighborhood, and another took the eldership; but I have never been a member in any other church.

We were called Reformers, Campbellites, etc. I did not then, nor do I now, object to the names, for I thought a reformation was necessary, and it was Alexander Campbell who called our attention to the millentium or thousand years' reign of Christ upon the earth, after the resurrection; and this I found by examination to be Bible teaching which should not be objected to; for as we have taken the Bible for our rule of faith and practice, we should try everything by that rule.

There are some who believe in the immortality of the soul; but by a careful examination they will find "immortal soul" to be an unscriptural term, and nowhere to be found in the Bible. And if the soul of man is immortal, then Paul was mistaken when he said, "God only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." 1 Tim. vi. 16.

But taking Paul's statement to be correct, it not only proves that the soul of man is not immortal, but it also proves that no man can approach unto the light—God's dwelling. This is confusion to immortal souls going to heaven beyond the skies.

The soul that sinneth, it shall die. No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. John iii. Now if no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him, it is evident that no murderer can suffer eternal punishment, for where there is no eternal life there can be no eternal punishment.

This is positive proof to my mind that the soul of man is not immortal, and the Scriptures abound with collateral proof to that effect:

Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me. John v. 39.

My brethren let us read and seek after the truth, for to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, God will render eternal life.

The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

If ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live.... Shall not perish but have eternal life. ....Hath eternal life, and I will raise raise him up at the last day.

And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish.

But the wages of sin is death. If ye live after the flesh ye shall die. Sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death. The end of those things is death.

We here have life and death set before us in Bible terms. Jesus Christ has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. Were it not for that light where would be our hopes to-day? Not a gleam of light or hope beyond the grave; but by the light of the gospel we can see the resurrection of the body to life and immortality, and to an inheritance in the earth.

If the dead rise not, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

The Scriptures plainly teach that Christ's reign will be personal, upon the earth, and the dead in Christ will be raised to life and reign with him:

I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven. Dan. vii. 13. (And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven. Matt. xxiv. 24, 30.) And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever. And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under root above the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Dan. vii. 14, 18, 27. This is under the heavens; therefore it is on the earth.

Again: The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever. Luke i. 32, 33. David's throne was Mount Zion, in Jerusalem; the house of Jacob is the Jews restored to Palestine.

Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him. He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. He will make us unto our God kings and we shall reign on the earth. Rev. v. 10.

They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

The second death and destruction of the wicked is shown in Rev. xx. and xxi.; Mal. iv.; Oba. 15, 16, 17.

The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything. Eccl. ix. 5.

His breath g eth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish, Psa. cxlvi. 4.

Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust. Psa. civ. 29. So there is no conscious existence between death and the resurrection.

Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created, and thou renewest the face of the earth.

So ends my letter to the church at Republican meeting house.

In answer to this I have received two letters. One of them is dated at Madisonville, March 4, 1874, and is addressed to Peyton Cox, Taylorville, Ill., and reads thus:

Dear Brother:—Your kind letter to us was read before the congregation by Brother Davis. While we do not agree with you in all you say we are ready and willing to treat your communication with due respect. You say the church at Republican meeting house in its reorganization "agreed to take as its only rule of faith and practice, the Bible. We say amen to that, believing it to be the only safe rule of action in this life.

You say we were called at that time Reformers, Campbellites, etc., and that you did not then nor do you now object to it. Now, Brother Cox, according to the rule adopted on that occasion, you are compelled to object or prove unfaithful to the rule, for you do not find either name in the Bible, but to the contrary human names are forbidden by your own rule. 1 Cor. i. 10-15; iii. 1-5. Now if Campbell was crucified for us, we should call ourselves after him; if not it is carnal to do so.

You refer to 1 Tim. vi. 16, as proving that God only hath immortality. But it refers to Christ as you may learn by reading the fifteenth verse. Christ only has immortality, dwelling in the city of God above. Paul says it behove him to be made like unto his brethren in all things. Now if Christ is like unto his brethren in all things, he is certainly like them in their state beyond the grave.

You refer to the prophet's statement, The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Here the prophet uses the word death in the sense of separation and not in the sense that shall cease to be. But what will become of the soul that does not sin? The little innocent babe dying in its infancy does not sin. But this same prophet says if a man will turn away from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right he shall save his soul alive; (he shall not die a second death). Then according to the prophet all souls will not die or cease to be. No murderer has eternal life abiding in him, because Christ does not dwell in the murderer, and Christ is our eternal life. Well, my brother, we are satisfied to dwell with Christ on earth or in heaven. But Christ will come and take us to himself, so the Bible says, and Paul says (1 Thess. v. 17,) that when he comes we shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with him. If this is the way we are to be with him, it will not be on this earth literally. But what of all this, my brother? Is it not more important to prepare to dwell with him and leave the dying of the place to him?

You quote from Eccl. ix. 6. Please read the sixth verse, and you will find that the writer is speaking of things done under the sun on this earth, and not beyond the grave: Their love and hatred have all perished on this earth. Matter only can perish; man is not all matter; hence man will not all decay. Let us labor to enter into that rest.

Yours truly, etc.

There was no name signed, but it written by Brother Davis, the preacher that read my letter before the congregation.

After some compliments in which he says anon. he goes on to give me a severe rebuke for the crime of not objecting to being called Reformers or Campbellites. He charges me with being carnal and unfaithful for not objecting. He says: "You do not find either name in the Bible." True, these are not Bible names, and might very well have been let alone.

But hark! Brother Davis objects to Bible terms, and adopts a language of his own which appears to suit him better. He says: "You refer to 1 Tim. vi. 16, as proving that God only hath immortality; but it refers to Christ, as you may learn by reading the fifteenth verse: Christ only has immortality, dwelling in the city of God above."

Well, I have read the fifteenth verse, and I find no "city of God above" there, but it is a perversion of the Scriptures. But let us suppose for a moment that Christ only has immortality dwelling in the city of God above, which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen nor can see. So by a new translation of 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16, Brother Davis makes it appear that no man can approach unto the city of God above, and that no man has seen Christ nor can see him. If this interpretation be correct it will debar all who expect to go to heaven above. True, according to the Scriptures no man can approach unto heaven above; but any change in the Scripture that will make it read that no man has seen Christ is simply ridiculous. The analogy of 1 Tim. i. 17 and vi. 16, is complete. It is the same Being in both cases; it is the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God 1 Tim. i. 17. Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen nor can see. 1 Tim. vi. 10. This shows that it was the only wise God that Paul referred to.

But Brother Davis now flies entirely away from the subject before us, and introduces Paul writing to his Hebrew brethren on the subject of the priesthood. See Heb. ii. 1-28. But this has nothing to do with immortality. His inference on that Scripture is absolutely weak.

He then says: "You refer to the prophet's statement, The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Here the prophet uses the word death in the sense of separation, and not in the sense that shall cease to be (surely die)."

Well here is another specimen of Davis's translation: "The soul that sinneth shall be separated but not surely die." This is the doctrine the serpent taught Eve six thousand years ago, thou shalt not surely die, and it is no truer now than then.

I fail to see the point concerning the soul that does not sin.

If the wicked will turn and do that which is right, he shall save his soul alive (from the second death).

Davis says: "No murderer has eternal life abiding in him because Christ does not dwell in the murderer, and Christ is our eternal life." He is right for once, for there is no inherent immortality or eternal life out of Christ.

He then says he is "satisfied to dwell with Christ on earth or in heaven. But Christ will come and take us to himself, says the Bible; and Paul says (1 Thess. v. 17,) that when he comes we shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with him. If this is the way we are to be with him, it will not be on this earth literally." Well, if it will not be on this earth, where will it be? For Davis has shown that it will not be in heaven; or, to use his own interpretation, it will not be in the city of God above. Although he is satisfied to dwell with Christ on earth, we find him catching at straws to get away from it. But he has only got to the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and this offers no evidence that Christ will not dwell upon the earth, for the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives. Zech. xiv. 4.

We shall reign on the earth. Rev. v. 10.

Shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him. Rev. xx. 6. So Christ will dwell on the earth (literally). Read Dan. vii. 13, 14, 18, 27. In fact our minds are continually directed to the coming of Christ and his kingdom. Take that away, and there is nothing left but speculations of sky heavens and immortal ghosts of the dead, and such like unscriptural things.

The living know that they shall die but the dead know not anything. Eccl ix. 5.

Davis says: "Please read the sixth verse, and you will find that the writer is speaking of things done under the sun, on this earth, and not beyond the grave. Their love and hatred have all perished on this earth."

This is a very loose quotation of the sixth verse. It reads: "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished."

Again, we read: "In that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4.

Here we see that when men die, their love, and their hatred, and their envy, and their very thoughts perish. Yet Davis says, "Matter only can perish, and man is not all matter; hence men will not all decay." If matter only can perish, he has proven too much, for it is proven that love, hatred, envy and thoughts are perished, and they are not matter or material substance.

He says: "But what of all this, my brother," and makes some wandering remarks about the soul that does not sin, but I fail to get his meaning.

If a man will do that which is lawful and right he shall save his soul alive from the second death.

As all this means nothing with him we will drop the subject.

The other letter that I received is signed by three elders, and reads thus:

We send you this for your reflection and perusal at your leisure. And now, Uncle Peyton, while we as individuals will be glad to hear from you at any and all times, yet we do not think it would be beneficial to enter into a discussion of these metaphysical, abstruse propositions, as it might lead to debate and overthrow the faith of some.

With all due respect for your age do you not think it would be better to live up to your duty by attaching yourself to some congregation convenient to you, and pay more attention to the duties of life and preparation for death, than to unraveling the mysteries of prophecy and revelation?

Upon this we invite discussion and will gladly communicate with you, and if you can give us any valid reason for not uniting with some congregation, we will entertain it.

S. MORROW,
JNO. LANGLEY,
H. LAUGHLIN,
Elders.

I am very thankful to the elders for their kind suggestions, and in turn I invite them to join with me in searching the Scriptures and preparing ourselves for the duties of life, and preparation for death by reading (unraveling) the mysteries of prophecy and revelation, for they appear to care but little about the Scriptures, so I attach myself to some congregation convenient to me.

But to what congregation shall I attach myself? Shall I unite with a people that do not believe that Christ will ever stand upon the earth again? (See Job. xix. 25; Zech. xiv. 4.) Who do not believe the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever? Who do not believe the saints shall possess the land and dwell therein forever? Who do not believe the "Lord hath sworn in truth, Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne"? Psa. cxxxii. 11.

These are some of the reasons why I do not unite with some convenient congregation; and I hope the elders may entertain them.

Your aged uncle, in hope of the soon coming of the kingdom of God, that his will may be done in earth as in heaven.

Bible Facts.

The learned Prince of Granada, heir to the Spanish throne, imprisoned by order of the crown for fear he should aspire to the throne, was kept in solitary confinement in the old prison at the Place of Skulls, Madrid. After thirty-three years of this living tomb death came to his release, and the following remarkable researches taken from the Bible, and marked with an old nail on the rough walls of his cell, told how the brain sought employment through the weary years:

In the Bible the word Lord is found 1,853 times; the word Jehovah 6,855 times, and the word Reverend but once, and that in the 9th verse of the 111th Psalm. The 8th verse of the 117th Psalm is the middle verse of the Bible. The 8th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther is the longest verse; 35th verse, 7th chapter of St. John, is the shortest. In the 107th Psalm four verses are alike—the 8th, 15th, 21st, and 31st. Each verse of the 136th Psalm ends alike. No names or words with more than six syllables are found in the Bible. The 37th chapter of Isaiah and 19th chapter of 2d Kings are alike. The word girl occurs but once in the Bible, and that in the 3d verse and 2d chapter of Joel. There are found in both books of the Bible 3,566,480 letters, 773,693 words, 31,373 verses, 1,179 chapters, and 66 books.

POETRY.

Behold! He Cometh.

"Awake, thou that sleepest."—Eph. v. 14.

O Church of God! O, Bride of Christ,
Arise, and watch and pray!
For signs on earth and signs in heaven
Proclaim his triumph day!
If thou will listen, thou may'st hear
His chariot wheels e'en now,—
Hath slumber dulled thy ready ear?
Awake! "why sleepest thou?"

Why sit thee down in gilded ease
Amid earth's tinseled toys?
A scoffing world thy weakness sees,
Thou bride of heavenly joys!
Thy deadly foes about thee press,
And ere thy Lord appear
Dark days of anguish and distress
Shall prove his presence near.

Church of his choice! dost thou not know
What holy men have told
Shall come to pass when earth shall grow
With sins and sorrows old?
When ages their full course have run,—
One sharp, short conflict more,
And then the Lamb's last victory won,
And time for aye be o'er!

But grievous tidings thou must bear
Before the Bridegroom's voice
Shall break upon thy woe and fear,—
And e'er thou shalt rejoice
Thou first must weep,—perchance with blood
Thy bridal robes be wet;
Think now of old 'midst flames ye stood,—
That soul lives in ye yet.

Awake! arise! to watch and pray,
And gird thine armor on;
Set watchmen on thy King's highway,
The battle is begun!
Thy bitterest foes in rudeness lie—
They hate thy Lord and thee;
And only He who reigns on high,
The coming strife can see.

Fling off thy wreath of earthly flowers—
Not such thy bridal crown!
Too long in fair and sunny bowers
Thou hast sat idly down.
Take up the Spirit's two-edged sword,
And faith's eternal shield,
For thou must fight by deed and word,
And sooner die than yield.

And when the conflict rages hot,
And thou art sore beset,
Remember, He will leave thee not—
His angel guards are set;
Amid the wildest of the fray
His trumpet blast may ring,
To sweep his foes to doom away,
And thee to glory bring.

Will the Definite time of Christ's Coming be Known?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

"Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour the Lord doth come; but know this, that if the good man of the house had known what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But, and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servant, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour when he knoweth not for him." Matt. xxiv. 43-50.

1. Definite time excludes the possibility of watching antecedently to the time set—that is, if they believe, without a doubt, they have the right time.

No one expects the cars until the stated time arrives. To do so would demonstrate lack of confidence in the schedule of time. Just so in reference to the coming of Christ, no sincere Unist can look for or expect Christ before the definite time they have set for his coming. Thus, definite time excludes the idea of indefinite periods of watching, as clearly illustrated in the foregoing simile. If a householder should not expect a thief until the fourth watch of the night he would prepare the alarm or wakeful servant to wake him just in time to prepare to meet and repel the invader of his rights or property.

The most discreet seldom prepare for anticipated troubles or calamities sooner than is absolutely necessary to meet and avert them. Thus, though all men expect the vicissitudes, the cares, and responsibilities of this fleeting life, and the many startling events in this grand and sublime era will find time to prepare for the coming of the Son of Man, whose angelic messengers will pass through the quivering air so stealthily and unheeded by the world that the only evidence of their having visited our sin-cursed planet will be that the saints will be missing. Side by side the wise and foolish virgins will be quietly sleeping, and, perchance, dreaming of the soon coming of the long expected One, when sudden as the spark from the smitten steel, one will wake to sleep no more, and, having been changed to immortality, shall ascend to meet his descending Lord, and the other will sleep on till the day shall dawn, revealing the sad fact that he had put off that preparation which he intended to make just a little too long; and though he may find oil to purchase, it will not be the kind of oil with which none but those who shall be the kings and priests of earth, shall be anointed. These will wake to joy and gladness, while those shall wake to sorrow and sadness.

The difference between these two classes of servants will not be in their faith or expectations, but in their consistency. One class will have faith without corresponding good works, or the theory without the practice, while the other will have that "faith which works by love and purifies the heart." In one word, one will be prepared and the other will not be prepared. One will rely upon definite time, the other upon the grand and important events, which, though indefinite in reference to time, will be definite in character and in their ordinal relation to each other and to the coming of Christ. Neither the chronology of the Bible nor the events foretold by the prophets fix the definite time of Christ's second advent. Their mission is not to fix the data of his coming, but the grand and thrillingly important and interesting events marking with unerring precision "the times and seasons" in which that generation should live for whose benefit and instruction the last links of all those great chronological chains were flung within that mystic circle called by the prophets—"the latter days"—within which should concentrate all the rays of prophetic light, in which the students of prophecy may read, with a great degree of certainty, their latitude and longitude upon the boisterous ocean of time, and thus be prepared to answer the question welling up from the throats of millions of thrillingly interested spectators who have been raised to tip-toe of expectation by the grand and stirring events of the times in which they live,—to cry in the very language of the prophet, "Watchman, what of the night?" And as expectation rises with the swelling tide of excitement, caused by the momentous events transpiring around them, they will repeat the question with more tremendous emphasis, "Watchman, what of the night?" Please note,—

1. None of all the watchmen upon the walls of their Zions will be able to answer this question, which will thrill the great heart and intellect of the world, except those who look through the telescope of prophecy, by which alone they shall be able to read the figures which reveal the grand epoch in which we live.

2. The answer of the prophet is indefinite as far as definite time is concerned. He does not respond the night will come in 1844, and the day will dawn in 1881, or any other stated time. But, referring to the indefinite periods of the night through which the church should pass before the realization of her hope, he says: "The night cometh and also the day." The night came unforeseen and unheralded by angels or men, but proclaimed by world-wide events as demonstrative as though the sun should be blotted from the heavens. "The day also cometh," said the holy prophet, but just when, none, says Christ, but the Father knoweth.

The canon of inspiration closed without a key to unlock the arcanum of the all-wise Father, who, for reasons known only to himself, withheld the time of the advent of his Son from all in heaven and upon earth. Secret things, says the prophet, belong to God, but what he has revealed belongs to us and to our children. He may have wisely concealed the time (not "times") from his faithful and wise servants who shall be waiting, watching and praying, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly," that they may "walk by faith and not by sight;" that during the indefinite periods represented by the four watches of the night, or at least as much of the night as their heavenly Father shall consider necessary to qualify them for the glorious privilege to which but two of all the race have been accounted worthy, and which none but the tried, the pure and the holy will ever reach, to-wit:

1. To be delivered from the great temptation which will ensnare the world and make their salvation as sure as the promise of God.

Christ's language, as recorded by Luke, was not designed for his Apostles or that generation, but for the generation that would be living when he should return. So, also, was the declaration that none but the Father knoweth the day or time when the Son of Man should come. His faithful servants who shall be living during the indefinite periods represented by the watches of the night, are commanded to watch because they shall not know the time of his advent. If a householder should apprehend the coming of a thief to destroy or steal during the night, and should not know the hour of the night in which he was coming, it would be wisdom to commence watching as soon as the shadows of night should approach. If he should set a definite time for the coming of the thief, and he should come in advance or subsequently to the time he had set, he would be found asleep and unprepared to defend his property—that is, unless the failure of the thief to come at the time he was expected should make the householder abandon the idea of definite time and decide that a wiser plan would be to keep awake and watch until the thief should come. Thus, he would be found awake and at his post at whatever hour the thief should come. The application of this illustration must be plain to the most casual thinker. Two things are necessary to delay, to-wit:

1. Time must be set.

2. Stated time must pass.

3. The event expected must be long delayed before these disappointed Unists will become so desperate and go into such wild excess of vice and dissipation as those foolish virgins are represented as doing in the foregoing Scripture.

Such, to a great extent have been the disastrous results of time-setting. Not only so, but it has brought an unnecessary reproach upon the glorious hope of the soon-coming of our blessed Savior. This is not being persecuted for Christ's or the truth's sake, but for the errors, mistakes and fanaticism of Unists. Some of these Unists have gone into the wildest extremes of fanaticism. They are, by far, more visionary than advocates of the Utopian theory of the immortality of the soul. Some, to give prestige to their time movements, have professed to be inspired by the holy spirit, thus making this infallible teacher, who was to guide those to whom he was promised into all truth, responsible for their visionary theories and foolish speculations. I read in a magazine a short time ago an expression amounting to a fixed belief that the time of Christ's coming will be revealed to his Bride antecedently to his coming. This is an acknowledgment that the time is not revealed, either in the Bible or the great Pyramid. It also throws wide open the door for dreams, visions and new revelations. If spirits come professing to reveal the time of Christ's coming, by what standard can we try them if the living oracles are silent in reference to the time of his coming? If the time is revealed in an intelligent manner, it must be through the medium of speech, and let it be remembered that whosoever shall add to the words of the prophecy of the book of Revelations shall have added to him all plagues written in that book. Not knowing the time of the coming of our Lord, may we all continue to watch until he shall come, whether it shall be the first, second or third watch of the night, or even at cock-crowing, that we may be found at our post with the wedding garment on, our lamps trimmed and burning, and thus be prepared to meet him.

The Berlin Conference.

This is the heading of an editorial in the World's Crisis of July 31st, giving a graphic account of the greatness of this conclave; the importance of its acts as connected with the prophetic Scriptures; especially those pertaining to the last end of the Roman kingdom. The reading of which article has suggested some additional thoughts upon other Scriptures, not referred to by the writer, which I now throw out for the prayerful consideration of the readers of this journal. I will begin by copying from it the following statements. He says "the Berlin Conference was doubtless the most august and powerful political body of men ever assembled. It was invested with greater powers of dictation and arbitration over greater empires and nations than was exercised by Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander, Augustus Cæsar, or any assembly of men since Adam ruled the world in Eden. Its powers of arbitration extended over all the great empires and kingdoms of Europe, including a part of Africa, Asia and America. If circumstances required it, it could unitedly have dictated to all the kingdoms of the world, and executed its decrees. It was backed by armies, twice as strong as any ruler or associate rulers, who ever attempted to issue edicts or decrees for the government of men, since Nimrod, except the Constantinople conference." Three quarters of the civilized world waited from day to day, during its sitting, with bated breath to learn its decisions. In its unity it could bring an army of eight millions of thoroughly armed men to execute its decisions. Of Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom it is said, "Wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." Dan. ii. 38. Power of this description was to exist in four kingdoms, the fourth to be the strongest of the class. Where has such power existed for the last fifty years, if not in the European Congress? It certainly has not been found in any one empire or kingdom, and it would be great folly to talk about its being found in any church.

Italy and Turkey, the governments occupying the two capitals (the two first of the image) are both second-class powers, and neither of them can be called "the fourth kingdom upon earth," as those two kingdoms were but parts of it. Other extracts might be given, going to show clearly that the last part of the "iron and the clay" of the great metallic image of Dan. ii. has now been fully reached; in their "partly strong and partly broken" condition, just as they are to be when smitten and ground to powder by the stone kingdom soon to be revealed. They are held together for a brief period by the segments of this power. This part of the prophetical chart is evidently filled out; but no more so than are those of the new Testament, especially the book of Revelation. The rise and acts of these associated rulers, the extent of their dominion during nearly all of the present century, most clearly indicate that they are the eighth head of the "scarlet colored beast" of Dan. xvii. Now, if they are the head of that beast, of course, those "many waters," or "multitudes, tongues and nations" of earth ruled by them, must of necessity constitute the body of that beast. This head and this body unitedly, constitute the "two horned beast" of chapter xiii. 11-18. This last conference in its leading features corresponds so perfectly with the Vienna conference of 1814-15, which originated the order of European affairs that has since prevailed, as to designate them as of the same family—twin sisters. As England and Russia were the originators of both of them, and dictated in their acts more than any others, where is the importunity of assuming that they are the two lamb like horns of this last beast?

This application is sustained from these facts: 1, That England stands the acknowledged head of the Protestant church of the world, and Russia at the head of the Greek church. 2, The late war of Russia upon Turkey, which resulted in the assemblage of this last conference, originated from her protection of Christians in that empire. 3, In the leading affairs of Europe, at and since the Vienna treaty, their will has been absolute, or despotic, much like that of Imperial Rome the dragon of chapter xii.

It does appear to me there is light here that ought to be apprehended by the brethren, as meat in due season, and hope others will interest themselves in this, and bring out the truth to the understanding of all that have eyes to see or ears to hear.

Our Salvation.

Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Rom. viii. 34.

This portion of Scripture selected for consideration brings before our minds two of the most important subjects found in God's word. The sacrifice of Christ on the cross and its precious results is one thing; the intercession of Christ in power, quite another. We will first think of Christ that died. A few years previous to the utterance of our text, Christ silenced the devil's temption of the wilderness with these words: "It is said, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Luke iv. 12. Thus victorious he returned in the power of the spirit to his village home; "and as customary, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias, and when he had opened the book he found the place where it was written, the spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and the recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down, and the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened upon him. And he began to say unto them, this day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." Luke iv. 14 on.

Adam was tried as to his will in obedience to his maker; his heart proved selfish, he wielded not the sword of the spirit against the devil's armor; he fell; in dying thou shalt die, has been the curse of all the earth, for the judgment was by one condemnation. So death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.

A second man steps upon this stage of action, enters into trial, trusts not to himself, is not selfish, uses the sword "It is written, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Yea! this Christ Jesus saith, "I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me." John v. 30. He is anointed with power to become the head of a new creation.

We trace this simple preacher through Syrian regions to that memorable mountain near the sea of Galilee. "And seeing the multitude he went up into the mountain, and he opened his mouth and taught them." Matt. v. Taught them of salvation and how it must be obtained. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." Matt. v. 17. The hearers had their interpretation of the law. Men have their theories to-day. Natural minds differ. Christ still speaking from the mount defines the atonement:—"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. vii. 12.

Christ's life showed forth the fulfilling process the Pharisees disputed. One, a lawyer, tried to tempt him, saying, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law." Christ answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and prophets." Matt. xxii. 36 on. Religion is love to God. Adam loved himself better—"And the commandment which was ordained to life, we find to be unto death." Rom. vii. 11. Christ loved God with all his heart, with all his soul, with his mind, and his neighbor as himself. Tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. Thus love is the fulfilling of the law. As to ourselves, "A greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." John xv. 13. Of think of that exceeding great love of God and his son Jesus, "Who commended his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "The law is holy, and the commandment holy, just and good." Rom. vii. 12. It found in Christ what it demanded. Christ was holy, Christ was just, Christ was good, "Jesus knowing that all things were accomplished . . . . said it is finished, and he bowed his head and gave up the ghost." John xix. 28 on. Christ having redeemed us, ("the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth from all sin.") God sees the blood, passes over us unto Christ, and we live and receive our instruction by following as near as possible his commands. "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love." John xv. 10. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." John xiii. 34, 35.

Our duty is plain. Charity never faileth. And I exhort you, dearly beloved to trust without wavering in Christ, the one offering once offered for sin, which places a believer in a relation to God that nothing can change. By it he becomes a son of God: "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Heb. x. 14. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ died.

Let us rest here—a safe shelter, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." John xiii. 10. Grace be with you all. Amen.

E. N. HARDING.

Great prominence is given in the French papers to a story related by the Deutsche Zeitung of an event which is said to have occurred in a monastery of the Russian church at Kieff. Some students were walking out with their professor, when they discovered the body of a girl of thirteen hanging to a tree. They succeeded in cutting the rope and applying restoratives before life was extinct, but they were interrupted in their humane work by the monks of the institution, who declared that the girl had been put to death because she was possessed of a demon. An investigation has proved that the child belonged to an honorable family, and that the monks had attempted to murder her after one of their number had subjected her to a horrible outrage.

The last of the Lusignans, descendants of the mediæval Kings of Cyprus and Armenia, is living in St. Petersburg. He promenades the streets in a fantastical military costume somewhat resembling that of the Hungarian army. He is old. He lost his fortune in 1867, and lives on small gratuities from the Russian Imperial family. He has proposed to England to give it a quittance of his rights to Cyprus for a small sum. Whether England will accord it is not decided.

BREVITIES.

The Porte is about to grant an English company a concession for a railway company from Mersina through Diarbekir to Erzeroum. The line would be built both for strategical and commercial purposes.

It is interesting to note in connection with the occupation of Cyprus that the Indian Government has reoccupied the island of Socotra, off the entrance of the Gulf of Aden. The British flag was rehoisted on the island about two months ago.

The Russians, in the race with England for the trade of Northern India, are first at Cabul, the capital of Afghanistan. The caravans between Persia and India pass through Cabul, and the city is the center of a trade which the Russians desire to control.

Cyprus was the first country in the world that had a Christian ruler. It was the place where the name of Saul was changed to Paul. It was the country of Barnabas, "the son of consolation," and the estates which he sold to assist in the propagation of Christianity were in Cyprus.

According to a telegram addressed to a Paris paper from Vienna, landed property in Cyprus increased in value tenfold on the mere news of the occupation of the island, where in Bulgaria the finest properties do not find a purchaser at the twentieth part of the price they would have fetched before the war.

When the latest mails left India, Mandalay, the King of Burmah's capital, was on fire. On June 3, two thousand houses had been destroyed. The city is walled in, the streets are narrow, and the houses crowded together. It is quite probable, as his golden-footed Majesty is unprovided with fire engines and brigades, that the greater portion of the city has been destroyed.

The most important geological discovery of the year has been made by Prof. Snow of the Kansas University expedition about three hundred miles east of Denver. It consisted of a giant reptile or Saurian, so perfectly preserved as to exhibit a portion of the hide. Previously geologists had found hundreds of specimens of these Saurians with the bones alone remaining, so that this discovery of the outer skin is new to science.

The Pungolo of Milan, July 12, reports that at the town of Monzambano a detachment of carbineers entered a house owned by wealthy people and ordered a certain door to be opened. A horrible spectacle presented itself. In a room with windows secured by iron bars they beheld, amid uncleanness of every sort, a living woman deprived of speech and bearing hardly any semblance of a human being. This unfortunate woman had been imprisoned in that room for forty-two years. This monstrous cruelty was inflicted in order to prevent a marriage which would have taken from the family a large share of its patrimony.

In Spain the great extent to which the circulation of the Protestant Bible has succeeded, especially among the poorer classes, has caused the Pope to issue a prosecuting decree in which, under pain of excommunication, he prohibits any person from affording food or shelter to any Protestant missionary in Spain, and furthermore decrees the greater excommunication against any person who shall have in his possession any Protestant religious publication, whether for sale or otherwise. The Pope has accompanied these decrees, which are to be read from every parish church in Spain, with an autograph letter to King Alfonso, urging him, in the name of the great Catholic country of which he is the ruler, to use all his efforts to bring the civil power to bear against the missionaries for their expulsion, and the confiscation of their establishments throughout the country.

President Washburn of Robert College, Constantinople, writes to the Independent that thus far the result of the fall of Turkey has been chaos. "Many parts of the country," he says, "are ruins—the towns burned, the inhabitants massacred or scattered. Everywhere the population has been reduced to poverty, and all business has long been at a standstill. In many provinces civil war is still raging between the different nationalities, and all civil government has long since disappeared. The Central Government at Constantinople is in much the same condition. The Sultan trembles for his life, the treasury is empty and bankrupt, the old system of government has come to an end, and those in power do not see what is to take its place." Dr. Washburn thinks that the territory annexed to other countries will rapidly improve under good government; but Asiatic Turkey will only slowly rise in civil zation, even should England exert herself to influence reforms.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him to the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Our Duty No. 4.

For the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared (margin), teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. Titus ii. 11, 12.

The thought I would call attention to by the text is, Live soberly. Where are we to live soberly? In this present world.

The contrast I wish particularly to draw is between amusements and a life free from useless pastimes. I allude to domino, checker, chess, croquet, all sorts of card playing and the like things, together with theatre going and the like. I consider all of these seemingly harmless amusements as entirely unworthy and sinful for a child of God—an expectant joint-king of the coming ages—as far beneath a candidate to those exalted royal honors. A contestant for only some worldly prize leaves nothing undone that will be of advantage to him in obtaining that for which he is striving. Of course, as striving for something pre-eminently better, we should exhibit that carefulness, at least, that is manifested by this man of the world. The question then remains, Are these things detrimental to a successful contest for "the prize of the high calling of God, in Christ Jesus?" Of course, nothing but Bible evidence will be admissible, and we will proceed to present that authority that will alone be admissible before "the Judge of quick and dead at His appearance and kingdom," and testimony, too, that I think the honest-hearted will concur in.

I will first call our attention to Eph. v. 17. "Wherefore be ye not unwise but understanding what the will of the Lord is." But what testimony does this bear to the subject? It is this: We can not know His will without study, and time spent in such useless ways is taking time that should be used to make sure the prize. Do you want wisdom? or are you sufficiently wise? God says ask Him for it. Do you expect to obtain it without any further endeavor on your part? or do you expect to do your part? Then spend your time in that way rather than so unprofitably. But, says one, I have been studying and my brain is too much taxed already. Then turn your attention to something else and that will rest you. There is always something to do which will be of benefit. A short walk with your thoughts turned in another direction, yet on nothing light or trifling, will rest you. A chat with some one about useful things, or some of the glorious themes of the Bible will relieve those tired organs of the brain. We can always find something useful to do or talk about, something that will be of benefit to us or others. God has given us instruction to keep us usefully employed at all times. Think right, speak right, and do right, and we shall not have to resort to worldly amusements to occupy our time. Then we shall "do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. x. 31.

Paul says to Timothy that in the last days men shall be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, 2 Tim. iii. 4. This is certainly true of professed Christians. They are becoming more and more so in vain amusements. "For we ourselves also were some times foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures." Titus iii. 3. In this letter he repeatedly exhorts all to be sober. In his letter to the Hebrews, as an example for us, he says: "Moses chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." Heb. xi. 25. He exhorts us to think soberly. Rom. xii. 3. Peter says: "Be sober, be vigilant." 1 Pet. v. 8. Now, to be vigilant is to be watchful and be on our guard against danger. We are to constantly study ourselves by the Bible. This we do not do when we give ourselves, even for a short time, to worldly pleasures. He says: "But the end of all things is at hand; be ye, therefore, sober and watch unto prayer." Ch. iv. 7. John says: "Love not the world, neither the things of the world. If a man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him; for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye, and the pride of life is not of the Father, but is of the world." 1 John ii. 15, 16. Can we say that these useful things are of God? Then can we take part in them and yet not love them? Many will argue that this does not refer to those things; but the great day will disclose the fact that but few have found that straight and narrow path. There is a promise in the next verse to those who are faithful. "And the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." To abide through the age to come we must "lay aside every weight." Do you say there are not weights to one who is to give an account of every idle word, and is to bring every thought into subjection to Christ? Most certainly we will have enough to do without these vain amusements. "The light of the body is the eye; if, therefore, thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness?" Matt. vi. 22, 23. If we seem to have light and do not, oh, how intensely dark it will appear to have been when the great day of God makes it manifest to thee. And that which fell among thorns are they, who, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with the cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection; but that on good ground are they, which, in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." Luke viii. 14, 15. Paul tells Timothy how to keep it: "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all." 1 Tim. iv. 15. The Psalmist says: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful; but his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in His law doth he meditate day and night." He shows the necessity of all our time being occupied for the Lord—occupied in constant watchfulness. He says: "O how I love Thy law, it is my meditation all the day." Psa. cxix. 97. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise Thee with joyfulness; when I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate on Thee in the night watches." Psa. lxiii. 5. Why did David do this? Because he prayed for understanding. "The righteousness of Thy testimonies is everlasting; give me understanding and I shall live." Ps. cxix. 144. "Thou through Thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies; for they are ever with me. Through Thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way." Ver. 98, 104.

"We cannot serve two masters." If we undertake to serve the world a part of the time, we will come short of the glory of God. All we do is to be done as being for some one else and must be done for His interest. The Lord will hold us accountable. Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching. Verily I say unto you that He shall gird Himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them. And if He shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch and find them so, blessed are those servants. And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched and not have suffered his house to be broken through. Be ye, therefore, ready also; for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not." Luke xii. 37–40. Suppose we were playing a game of croquet when the Lord comes; think you He would count us as watching? Nay, verily.

The necessity of spending our whole time for the Lord will appear more necessary as we proceed in our investigation; and especially so in articles treating on thoughts and sacrifices.

Instead of seeking to kill time with worldly pleasures, let us be faithful stewards of His word, and when the Master appears, we shall be found watching. S. H. REEVE.

Is it Faith or Fatalism?

A belief in the supernatural has prevailed in all ages. It is not confined to any particular sect, but has its advocates in every religious body. That direct interpositions of God have been witnessed, the Bible certainly teaches, but that they were to accompany the teaching of the Word during the present dispensation, is not taught in the Scriptures. The divine authenticity of the Word having been established by supernatural acts, no more needs repeating than does any act or covenant that has been ratified or confirmed needs a repetition. In no department does this belief prevail to a greater extent than among those whose province it is to teach the way of life and salvation. The pernicious effects of believing that God will, in some remarkable manner, provide for the temporal wants of those who go forth and labor in the gospel, may be seen in the stinted contributions that are made for those who devote their time and means to the cause of truth. Once let the belief prevail that the teacher must look for his support from unknown and mysterious source, and the natural tendency will be to rel x effort on their part; for, if God will provide for the temporal wants of that class, we certainly are excused from doing anything. The writer well remembers such injunctions as: "Put your trust in the Lord;" "Why, Brother, the Lord will provide;" but while both injunctions are true in their place, they never paid railroad fare, or bought food or clothing for the family. I would here remark that I have never yet wavered in the belief that the Lord will do all that he has promised, but to provide food and raiment for even his faithful servants, except through the legitimate channels, is not His duty. When Jesus called into his service a few faithful laborers, and sent them forth, he provided for their wants. This is a correct principle, it is fair, it is honest. And whether God, Jesus, angels or men demand our services, whoever demands the service should pay the laborer. This is in harmony with the entire teaching of the Bible, relative to those who labor in Word and doctrine.

Here is a question that ought to be candidly considered and fairly answered: Does the fact that a person possesses talent as a teacher render it necessary that he should use that talent, regardless of circumstances? Does it compel him to sacrifice property, health, and his duties as a provider for the wants of a family? It is well known that those who have given their services to the cause of truth, have not accumulated property by so doing. Success in any business depends upon the personal attention given to it, hence, a successful teacher must devote time to the work, and if that time is taken from any ordinary business, there must be a corresponding loss to the business. The indifference on the part of those whose duty it is to sustain those who proclaim the truth, has driven some out of the field into some secular business, and a few are yet struggling along, accepting now and then a limited allowance, that will barely suffice to keep them from actual want.

Let this God-ordained plan be adopted, viz.: That each believer is individually called upon to assist in the work of teaching; that from the believers must the assistance come that will sound out the word of life to dying men; that the church is the pillar and ground of the truth; that we are to bear one another's burdens; that they that preach the gospel, should live of the gospel: that the laborer is worthy of his meat; that the ox that treads the corn should not be muzzled. The rule is plain enough, it only needs enforcing. Then if you would have earnest laborers in the field, and you feel disposed to call them, remember that duty to them demands that you furnish the means that their labor otherwise would bring; this makes the labor mutual; all can thus make a sacrifice, and such have a blessed promise. Let us all strive to do our duty, that the Master may recognize us as the faithful in a few things. Yours, in hope, Generation.

For over thirty years I have been listening to what many of the fraternity have written and said on the signification of the above word. All the while I have been fully convinced of their error, and of late am somewhat surprised to find the editor of The Crisis presenting the same old threadbare theory, after the passing by of more years than any at first would have admitted it possible to extend them; and still, perhaps, I might continue my reticence, but for the mishap that might come to them should they be compelled to tarry beyond what could possibly be so construed, which I rather expect will be the case. I am inclined to think that England's premier, who is a Christian Jew, and (perhaps Millinarian), sees prophecies to be fulfilled before the King of the Jews can come, and hear them say, "blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." And his diplomacy looks to me more like filling up the mould of prophecy than did the battles of Russia and Turkey look like the battle of the great day. I am not looking for that battle until there is something there to fight for; and there can be nothing until the Gentile foot is removed from treading down the sanctuary. How providential it appears to these watching the unfolding of events! In 1848 the foot was removed from treading down the host in the Roman kingdom, so that now the Jews are eligible to office, and are now elevated and actually able to wield a controlling influence. I see nothing in the phrase, this generation shall not pass away, that aims at fixing any data for the end. In fact, the Savior tells them that was not in his power; but I see a consoling promise similar to the one that the gates of the grave shall not prevail against the church. I do not understand that the Bible usage of the term will permit of its application to a space of time or to a man's lifetime, but in every case it denotes the progeny of the man. The name of the first book in the Bible is from the same root and indicates the Mosaic account of how all things commenced to be. The book of the generations of Jesus Christ is simply a record of the many begottens down to Christ, God's only begotten. David says, Psa. xxii. 30, "A seed shall serve him, and it shall be accounted unto the Lord for a generation." Isaiah liii. 8, asks, "Who shall declare his generation?" 1 Pet. ii. 5, "Ye are a chosen generation." Isaiah lx. 6, calls the child the "Father of the age." Christ himself says, Rev. xxii. 16, "I am the root and the offspring of David." All this clearly shows that, according to the Bible usage of the term, Christ must have a generation. I need not trouble you here with the Scriptural begetting and birth of his children. Undoubtedly they were his children to whom he was talking. How natural, then, that he should say to them, this generation, including all that should afterward be begotten by the same word of truth.

The "One Hope." No. 1.

It is very natural to indulge hope. There is scarcely any enterprise engaged in without it has a central object, and hope looks to that thing as the object to be obtained in order to the happiness anticipated. As, for instance, enterprising and business men desire to be rich. Money is the thing to be possessed in order to be rich. Hence the central object of hope in all business enterprises is money, as that must be possessed in order to be rich. It is the case in matrimonial affairs. The young man aspires after happiness. But he says in his heart, I shall be happy all my future mortal days if I succeed in winning the affections and gaining the hand of the one I love for my partner in weal or woe. All can see that the central object of hope is the girl of whom he wishes to make a wife, and, on the accomplishment of this, he thinks, depend all his hopes for future happiness in life. But, while it is natural to hope for future good, it is not among the possibles to hope for any evil to come on us at any time, present or future; for hope is made of two ingredients, viz.: "Desire and expectation." While a man may expect to die, all things being equal, no man desires it. A man involuntarily desires life, yet he, in his senses, does not expect mortal life forever, for he sees that great men die as well as the small of the earth, the nobleman as well as the peasant; the high in honor as well as the plebeian. Yes, he expects to die at some future time, although his desire would be that that day would never come. It would be the height of presumption to say that, because a thing is desirable, therefore I shall possess it. I might desire to be in heaven, because the associations in heaven are all good, and the influence would, we will presume, be very glorious upon me. But to say that I ever hope to go there, as good and desirable as it might be for my benefit, yet, without a promise of God, with conditions, and those conditions complied with on my part, would only be a plain presumption, instead of expectation, as an ingredient of my hope. We all possess, as Christians, a religious hope. But perhaps they are very different in their nature and character. But in order not to fatally deceive us, our hope must contain the two elements of desire and expectation, and not desire and presumption. But where is the promise of God that any one will ever go to heaven to spend an endless life in the glorious realities of that precious place? I have not yet, in all my searching the Scriptures, ever found it. But I have found a promise of eternal life, predicated upon the eternal possession of land, viz.: The land promised to Abraham and his seed, the Christ, &c. Then, if God has promised eternal life and conditions, and those conditions are complied with by any one, then may that one expect to live forever, and he, or she, does desire it already as a good to be in the future possessed. Some tell us that the coming of Christ is the hope, but that is only the time when the Christian is to be put into possession of the life that he now hopes for. Others say the resurrection is the hope: whereas, the resurrection is only the means of putting the dead saints into possession of the promised life that is now held out as a reward of well doing. Well, to me it is quite astonishing that any come-out-er should not see and contend for the same. More anon.

C. F. SWEET.

The territorial changes effected by the Treaty of Berlin are of a most comprehensive nature. By the Treaty of San Stefano Turkey was called upon to surrender 78,550 square miles, with a 4,530,000 inhabitants, The Treaty of Berlin deals with 83,200 square miles and 4,882,000 inhabitants, as follows:

	Square Miles.	Inhabitants.	Mohammedans.
Ceded to Roumelia	5,933	215,000	114,000
Ceded to Servia	4,378	241,000	23,000
Ceded to Montenegro	1,542	40,000	2,000
Ceded to Austria	15	2,000	.....
Ceded to Greece (?)	8,220	792,000	40,000
To be occupied and administered by Austria	21,122	1,061,000	517,000
Formed into the Principality of Bulgaria	24,491	1,378,000	681,000
Included in Eastern Roumelia	13,046	710,000	265,000

The island fortress of Ada Kaleh, recently occupied by Austria, is not referred to in the treaty at all, and will probably remain in the hands of the Power which now holds it. Roumelia, in exchange for the territory ceded, is called upon to surrender 3,270 square miles, with 140,000 inhabitants, to Russia. The political divisions of the Balkan peninsula will henceforth be as follows:

	Square Miles.	Inhabitants.	Mohammedans.
Roumelia	42,663	2,142,000	742,700
Servia	13,216	1,242,000	7,500
Montenegro	2,254	210,000	1,000
Turkey	14,963	3,250,000	3,821,000

But if we exclude the provinces "indefinitely" to be occupied by Austria, Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, there remain to Turkey only 74,700 square miles, with 4,770,000 inhabitants, of whom 2,521,500 are Mohammedans. In Armenia, Russia takes 10,000 square miles, with about 330,000 inhabitants. Cyprus, intrusted to the keeping of England, has an area of 2,288 square miles and about 160,000 inhabitants.

Prince Bismarck signed the treaty of Berlin with an eagle's quill, ornamented with a silver figure of an Angel of Peace, which was presented to him for the purpose.

BREVITIES.

The line for a railroad between Leucosia and Famagosta, Cyprus, is being surveyed.

About 10,000 Indian troops, with three battalions of British, will form the garrison of Cyprus.

An influx of Mennonites is anticipated between this and 1880, in which year their exemption from military service will end in Russia, where they number 200,000.

The eclipse of the sun terrified the negroes in the region where it was total. At Waco, Texas, they believed that the day of judgment had come, and were panic stricken.

The first section of a railroad between Algiers and Tunis was recently completed, and on June 28 the event was celebrated by French and Tunisian officials. A section is to be finished in November.

Chin Lan Pin, the Chinese Ambassador to the United States, traces his ancestry back to a remote age, and belongs to the second rank in the empire, the next in order to the imperial family.

The island of Cyprus at one time contained nine different kingdoms, and more than a million inhabitants. Owing to the alleged peculiar temperament of its people, it was called "the home of love and beauty."

There are at this moment the unprecedented number of thirty-three ironclads in commission in the British navy, besides many unarmored frigates and corvettes of recent construction. Of the ironclads in commission, fourteen are in the Mediterranean with Admiral Hornby and Lord John Hay.

The number of native Christians in India is given in the new "Missionary Directory" as 200,331, an increase of 42,153 in four years and of native communicants 78,679, an increase of 15,854. The directory gives the names and addresses of 320 missionaries in native pastorate in India proper, not including Burmah and Ceylon.

Before the departure of Lord Beaconsfield for Berlin he received a letter from Lionel de Rothschild asking him to use his efforts "in favor of placing every religious denomination on the same footing of equality in the countries represented in the Congress, and especially to endeavor to secure the removal of the disabilities under which the Jews suffer in Roumania and Servia." Lord Beaconsfield answered that the matter would receive due consideration.

It is estimated that in the famine stricken districts of China the population has been reduced over 5,000,000 by actual starvation, and the prospect continues as gloomy as at the beginning. An idea of the isolation and suffering may be gathered from the official report of Gov. Homan to the Pekin Gazette, in which he says: "In the earlier period of distress the living fed upon the bodies of the dead; next the strong devoured the weak, and now the general destitution has arrived at such a climax that men devour those of their own flesh and blood. History contains no record of so terrible and distressing a state of things, and if prompt measures of relief be not instituted the whole region must become depopulated. Local sources of supply are entirely exhausted; the granaries are empty and the treasury drained dry, while the few wealthy people in the provinces have helped with contributions and loans till they themselves are impoverished."

An old lady now living on the Little Colorado, who has attained to the comfortable old age of 128 years, was 30 years of age at the time of the dark day, of which she has a vivid recollection, and recalls many interesting incidents that took place with her people, the Spanish, and also the Indians, who were more superstitious. The Spaniards buried all their saints, of which they had a goodly number, while the Indians took to feasting upon dogs and other animals. The "dark day" was so called on account of the remarkable darkness that extended throughout America. The obscuration commenced about 10 o'clock in the morning of May 19, 1780, and continued until the middle of the next night. Birds sang their evening song, disappeared, and remained silent; fowls went to roost, cattle sought the barnyard, and candles were lighted in the houses. The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not, and will probably never be known.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 28, 1878.

OWING to our own poor health we have had to make up the present number as best we could. Some communications that require copying and correcting are delayed.

THE war in Bosnia between the Austrians and Provincials has not been brough to a close. The Austrian army of occupation has been victorious in the recent conflicts.

AT the time of finishing up our last issue for the press we were completely prostrated by a sudden attack of disease, and Brother H. V. Reed kindly assisted us in giving necessary business notices and other original matter.

THE yellow fever is still raging at the Southwest with all the frightful virulence of an epidemic. New cases swell the sick list, and the death rate is on the increase. The scourge will probably know no abatement till colder weather. Relief is needed from the benevolent everywhere.

THE report of the Indiana conference appears in this number. We hope all our friends will respond to its urgent requests to substantially assist THE RESTITUTION. We thank our kind friends for all they have done in the past, and thank our Heavenly Father of whom we can say with one of old, "Hitherto God hath helped us."

Trine Immersion.

I would like to ask you a question or two on the subject of baptism. There are some here who claim that trine immersion is the Apostolic mode of baptism, and that single immersion was invented in the fourth century. Now, as I have no history bearing upon this point, I would like if you would tell us how far back you can trace trine immersion by history, and who first practiced it? How far back can you trace single immersion, and who first practiced it?

Please give us the law and the evidence in the case.

S. MCGLOTHLAN.

The first one by whom a threefold immersion is mentioned is Tertullian, one of the early church fathers, who was born in Carthage, and flourished about A. D. 190–214. He obtained the office of Presbyter soon after embracing Christianity, and afterward embraced the doctrines of Montanus, having been determined to this course, it is said, by the ill treatment he received from the Roman clergy. He became the champion of the Montanist sect, with which he remained till his death.

From Gleasler's Church History, vol. I., p. 164, we give Tertullian's description of the ceremony of baptism in his own words:

"Aquam adituri, ibidem, sed et aliquanto prius in ecclesia, sub antistitis manu contestamur, nos renunciare diabolo (αντικειται δια τουτο) et pompæ et angelis ejus. Deinhinter mergitamur, amplius aliquid respondentes quam Dominus in Evangelio determinavit. Inde suscepit lactis et mellis concordiam prægustamus (qua infantamur, adv. Marc. I. c. 14): Exque ea die lavacro quotidiano per totam hebdomadam abstinemus."

This Anglicized is: "When we are about to go to the water, and but a little while previous, in the church, and under the bishop's hand, we make protestation that we renounce the devil (Gr. reject the devil), his pomps and his angels. Then we are three times immersed, answering somewhat more than the Lord prescribed in his gospel. Then he presents us a mixture of milk and honey which we taste, (and thus enact the infant); and from that day of ablution we are very abstentious for an entire week."

Another quotation reads:

"Exinde egressi de lavacro perungimur benedicta unctione (χρισματι) de pristina disciplina, qua ungi oleo de cornu in sacerdotium solebant."

This in English is: "When we have come out of the baptismal washing we are anointed with a holy anointing (chrism) according to the pristine manner of inducting into the priesthood by anointing with oil from a horn."

Once more he says:

"Dehinc manus imponitur, per benedictionem, advocans et invitans spiritum sanctum (επιφοιτικα)."

Which we render: "Then follows an imposition of hands with a benediction inviting and imploring the Holy Spirit (by this laying on of hands)."

We will now give some further extracts from history, for which we are indebted to Dr. Conant's work appended to his translation of Matthew on the meaning and use of the word baptizein, in which he gives a multitude of examples from classical, sacred and ecclesiastical writers. He gives the original and a translation in each instance, and we shall give his translation, confining ourself, for the present, to writers who speak of trine immersion. The first is from Cyrill, bishop of Jerusalem, who was born A. D. 315 and died 386:

"After these things ye were led by the hand to the sacred font of the divine immersion, as Christ from the cross to the prepared tomb. And each was asked if he believed in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. And ye professed the saving profession, and sunk down (katadusete) thrice into the water, and again came up. And there, by a symbol, enigmatically represented the three-day burial of Christ."

The second allusion to three dips is in the words of Athanasius, patriarch of Alexandria, who was born about A. D. 296 and died 373.

"For that the child sinks down (katadusai) thrice in the font, and comes up, this shows the death and the resurrection, on the third day, of Christ."

The third quotation is from Theophylact, a Greek theologian, born in Constantinople about the middle of the eleventh century, and died after 1112.

"For one immersion is spoken of, as also one faith, because of the doctrine respecting the initiation, being one in all the church, which has been taught to immerse (baptizein) with invocation of the trinity (trisdos), and to symbolize the Lord's death and resurrection by the three-fold sinking down (katadusai) and coming up."

Coming to the Latin writers he quotes Tertullian, to whom we have already alluded, and then gives an expression of Jerome's, who was born A. D. 331, and died 420. The church owes to him the Latin translation of the Bible, known as the Vulgate. He says: "And thrice we are immersed (ter mergimur), that there may appear one sacrament of the trinity."

The next example we give as taken from Alcuin, who was born at York A. D. 732, and died 804. His words are: "To us it seems implied, according to our feeble judgement, that as the inner man is formed anew after the image of his Maker, in the faith of the holy trinity, so the outer man should be washed with a trine immersion (trina mersione); that what the spirit invisibly works in the soul, that the priest may visibly imitate in water."

In a second place Alcuin says, after describing preliminary ceremonies, "And so in the name of the holy Trinity, he is baptized with a trine immersion, (trina submersione baptizatur)."

From the so-called Apostolic Canons, dating as early, perhaps, as the fifth century, the two following examples are adduced:

"If any bishop, or presbyter, shall not perform three immersions (tria baptismata) for one initiation, but one immersion (en baptisma), that given into the death of our Lord, let him be deposed."

From Zonaras, a Byzantine historian of the twelfth century, and who finally became a monk, and among other books wrote "An Exposition of the Sacred Canons," etc., we have this annotation:

"Three immersions (tria baptismata) the Canon calls the thrice sinking down in one initiation, that is, in one immersion." We note that a literal translation would give three down-sinkings in place of thrice-sinking down. We now come to the practice of National Churches, and still quote from Conant's work. From the Ritual of the Greek, or Eastern Church, we have the following from the "Office of the Holy Immersion:"

"And when the whole body is anointed, the priest immerses (baptizei) him (the child) holding him erect, and looking toward the east, saying: The servant of God (name) is immersed (baptizetai) in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; now and ever, and to ages of ages. Amen. At each invocation, bringing him down, and bringing him up." Dean Stanley, in his History of the Eastern Church, speaking of the difference between the modern Greek and Latin communions, says: "The Latin Church has wholly altered the mode; and a few drops of water are now the western substitute for the three-fold plunge into the rushing rivers, or the wide baptisteries of the East."

This was not the more ancient practice of the western church, as Dr. Conant shows from an extract from the "Order of the Sacraments" composed by Pope Gregory I, who became Pope A. D. 590, and which follows.

"The font being blest, and he holding the infant by whom it is to be taken up, let the priest inquire thus:

What is thy name? Answer. Dost thou believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth?

Answer.—I believe.

And in Jesus Christ, his only Son our Lord, who was born and suffered?

Answer.—I believe.

Dost thou believe in the Holy Spirit, the Holy Catholic Church, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body?

Answer.—I believe.

Then let the priest baptize with a trine immersion (trina mersione) once only invoking the holy Trinity, saying:

And I baptize thee, in the name of the Father; (and let him immerse once) and of the Son; (and let him immerse a second time) and of the Holy Spirit; (and let him immerse a third time)."

The ancient practice of the Anglican Church may be seen from the following: "Then the priest shall take the child in his hands, and shall ask his name. And naming the child, shall dip it in the water thrice. First dipping the right side; second, the left side; the third time dipping the face toward the font; so it be discreetly and warily done, saying: N. I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. And if the child be weak, it shall suffice to pour water upon it, saying the aforesaid words." This is from the order of practice A. D. 1549.

The practice before the Reformation in England may be learned from the following Canon of the Council of Calcuth, A. D. 816: "Let the presbyters also know, when they administer holy baptism, that they may not pour the holy water over the infants' heads, but let them always be immersed in a font; as the Son of God furnished by himself an example to every believer, when he was thrice immersed in the waves of the Jordan."

From Lingard's History and Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church, Dr. Conant gives the following:

"The regular manner of administering it was by immersion, the time the two eves of Easter and Pentecost, the place a baptistery, a small building contiguous to the church, in which had been constructed a convenent bath called a font. When an adult solicited baptism, he was called upon to profess his belief in the true God, by the repetition of the Lord's prayer, and the Apostle's Creed; and to declare his intention of leading a life of piety by making a three-fold renunciation of the devil, his works and his pomps. He then descended into the font; the priest depressed his head three times below the surface, saying, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

"In the baptism of children the same rites were observed, with a few necessary variations. The priest himself descended into the water, which reached to his knees. Each child was successfully delivered undressed into his hands, and he plunged it thrice into the water, pronounced the mysterious words, and then restored it to its sponsors. Such were the Canonical regulations with respect to the administration of baptism."

The Greek church continues the practice of thrice immersing down to the present time, and immerses infants, while the German Baptists, or Brethren, a religious denomination founded in 1708, and who also practice the three dips, confine the ordinance to adults. If history proves the mode, it as decisively proves that infants are legitimate subjects as they are mentioned in connection with the trine mode of administration from the very earliest account of baptism, in this form, as our quotations show.

Conference Report.

Pursuant to notice the Conference of the state of Indiana, or Annual Meeting, convened at Argos, Marshall county, Aug. 15 1878. Preaching in the forenoon by brother Barnhill, in the evening by brother Stephenson, who also spoke Friday 10 o'clock. At three p. m. we assembled again. After singing and prayer Bro. R. S. Dyciggins was chosen president, and the writer secretary. Reports of the state of our cause in different localities, were called for. An hour and a half was profitably and pleasantly spent in hearing from many of the scattered brotherhood how the battle was going in different parts. In the main we have reason to rejoice. The truth is gaining ground in many places: there is an increasing desire to hear, on the part of many who once treated with contempt, or opposed bitterly, the great truths of our glorious faith. The persistent labors of the faithful workers for more than a quarter of a century begin to tell on the popular creeds of the churches. An occasional report would cause a feeling of sadness when a brother would tell of a once prosperous congregation torn asunder and ruined by the introduction of some ism or untaught question; or, when another would tell of a church which had suffered the cares of life, and the love of the world, to put out the light of Christian example and godly conversation. The preaching was as usual at our conferences divided between practical and prophetical subjects; and, an effort was also made to give to the latter a practical application and bearing. The RESTITUTION was not forgotten. A part of Saturday afternoon was spent in presenting and urging its claims to a more liberal support from the lovers of truth. Many in the faith are not taking it. These were exhorted, as they love the truth, and regard their eternal welfare, to subscribe for the paper; and every subscriber in Indiana, throughout the United States, and the British Provinces, is earnestly solicited to make an effort to extend the circulation of this valuable medium of truth. Arouse you, who profess the Lord's coming near!

It was voted that public proclaimers, in the bounds of this conference who have not been previously furnished with a written license, or recommendation shall be granted such on application to the secretary: provided, each person so applying presents evidence of good moral character and ability to preach. The attendance at the conference, though perhaps not so large as at some previous ones, was respectable. Brethern Barnes and Lehman of Ohio; brother and sister Andrews, brethren Erwin and Watkins of Michigan, and brethren Reed and Stephenson of Chicago, shared with us the labor, pleasure and profit of the meeting. Sunday morning was very unpropitious. The rain which began to fall sometime during the night continued up to beyond the hour appointed for social meeting. But the bad state of the weather did not prevent us from coming together early enough to have a good time in exhorting one another in view of redemption so near at hand. Those who spoke expressed their determination to win the prize at the end of the race. This meeting was conducted by brother Fennimore, whom the writer met, for the first time, on Thursday before.

Good results must necessarily flow from these Christian interviews, and they ought to be, oftener, engaged in by our congregations everywhere. Brother Reed's discourse on the 2,300 days of Dan. viii. 14, immediately after this morning service, was well calculated to kindle into a brighter flame the hope which had been inspired by the previous exhortations. So near the end of this dispensation! How solemn the thought!

It was voted that we co-operate with the brethren of Ohio in a conference which they design to hold sometime during the autum, of the present year at Cleveland, or, such point as they may designate. This is brotherly and suitable to our common faith. By all means, brethern of Ohio, have a conference.

The meeting closed Sunday night; the good results of which will be reported and known when the Conference of all ages and climes shall convene at the Lord's coming.

J. L. WINCE, Sec'y.

SELECTIONS.

Duration of Life.

The average length of human life in all countries, at this age of the world, is about twenty-eight years. One-quarter of all who die do not reach the age of seven; one-half die before they reach seventeen; and yet the average life of "Friends" in Great Britain and Ireland in 1860 was fifty years. Surely this is a strong inducement for all to practice for themselves, and to inculcate upon their children day by day, that simplicity of habit, that quietness of demeanor, that restraint from temper, that control of appetites and propensities, and that orderly, systematic mode of life which "Friends'" discipline inculcates.

Reasoning from the analogy of animal creation, mankind should live nearly one hundred years; that law seeming to be that life should be five times the length of the period of growth; at least the general observation is that the longer persons are growing the longer they live, other things being equal. Naturalists say a dog grows for two years, and lives eight; an ox grows for four years, and lives sixteen; a horse grows for five years, and lives for twenty-five; a camel grows for eight years, and lives forty; man grows for twenty years, and should live one hundred.

But the sad fact is that only one man for every thousand reaches one hundred years. Still it is encouraging to know that the science of life, as revealed by the investigations of the physiologists and the teachings of educated medical men, is steadily extending the period of human existence.

The distinguished historian, Macaulay, states that in 1685 one person in twenty died each year; in 1850, out of forty only one died. Duplin says from 1778 to 1843 the duration of life in France increased fifty-two days annually, for in 1731 the mortality was one in twenty-nine; in 1843 one in forty. The rich men in France live forty-two years on an average; the poor only thirty. Those who are "well-to-do" in the world live about eleven years longer than those who have to work from day to day for a living. Remunerative labor and the diffusion of the knowledge of the laws of life among the masses, with temperance and thrift, are the great means of adding to human health and life.

Changes in Language.

The slow degrees by which the language of Shakspeare has progressed from the rude strength of the days of Harold to that of Chaucer, can only be properly appreciated by taking some well known composition and tracing its changes age by age. As an instance of this, the alterations made in the Lord's Prayer are interesting as well as a real literary curiosity, an appropriate prelix to which is the Gothic translation of A. D. 360:

Atta unsar, tu in himinam;
Weihnai namo theins;
Qimai thiudinassus theins;
Wairthai wilja theins swe in himina, jah ana airthai.
Hlaif unsarana thana sinteinan gif uns himmadagis
Jah aflet uns thatei skulans sijaima swaswa
jah weis afletam thaim skulam unsaraim
Jah ni briggais uns in fraistubnjai,
Ak lausei uns af thamma ubilin.
Unte theina ist thiudangardi jah mahts jah
wulthus; in aiwins. Amen.

The next given is the Early Classic (Anglo-Saxon):

Fader ure, thu the eart on Heofenum;
Si thin nama gehalgod;
To-becume thin Rice;
Gewurde thin wille on eorthen swa swa
Heofenum.
Urne ge dæghwamlicne Hlaf syle us to-dæg;
And forgyf us ure Gyltas swa, swa we forgifath urum Gyltendum;
And ne gelæde thu us on Costnunge;
Ac alys us of yfle. Sothlice.

An Anglo-Saxon version of A. D. 875 is very similar, but few variations being noticeable:

Fader ure, thu the eort on Heofenum
Si thin nama gehalgod;
To-becume thin Rice;
Gewurthe thin wille on eorthen swa, swa on Heofenum;
Urne ge dæghwamlicat Hlaf syle us to-dæg;
And forgyf us ure gyltas swa, swa we forgifath urum Gyltendum
And ne gelæde thu us Costnenge
Ac alyse us af yfle.

A lapse of but five years seems to have wrought some change, as an Anglo-Saxon of A. D. 880 is as follows:

Fader urun, thu arth in Heofnum
Si gehalgud Noma thin;
Tu cymeth Rio thin;
Sie willa thin swa on Heofne and in Eorthe;
Hlaf uncrne, dægwamlice sel us to-dæge,
And forgyf us synne ure swa last lice and se we forgeotas eghwelce scylde user.
And ne usih on fad thu in Costeunge;
Ac alral usih from yfle.

In the Anglo-Saxon of about A. D. 900 we find this:

Thu ure Fader, the eart on Heofenum,
Si thin Nama gehalgod;
Come thin Rice;
Si thin wille on Eorthe swa swa on Heofenum
Syle us to dag urne to dægwamlican Hlaf;
And forgyf us ure Gyltas swa swa we forgyfath them the with us a gyltath;
And ne lad thu us on Costnunge;
Ac alys from yfle. Sth it swa.

Another version of Anglo-Saxon of the same period:

Fader unser se the is in Roefnum
Gehalsed be thi Noma thin;
To cymeth Rice thin;
Sie wolla thin swa on Heofenaandon Heorthe;
Hlaf userne, dægwamlice sel us to-dæge,
And forgyf us synne ure swa last lice and se we forgeotas eghwelce scylde user.
And ne usih on fad thu in Costeunge;
An alral usih from yfle.

The next step is to the English, or Semi-Saxon, about A. D. 1160:

Ure Fader, thu the on Heofene eart,
Sye thin Name gehaleged;
To come thin Rice,
Gewurde thin wille on Heofnae and on Eorthe;
Syfe us to Daig urne daighwamliche Hlaf;
And forgyf us ure geltes, swa we forgyfath aniem them the with us agyltelh,
And ne lad thu on Costnonge
Ac alys from yfle.

The following is an English version of A. D. 1200 or 1300:

Oure Fader that art in Hevenes
Walewid be thin Name;
Thy kingdom come;
To be thi wille do as in Hevene and in Erth.
Gyf to us this day our Brede over other substance;
And forgyf to us our Dettis, as forgyuen to our Dettours;
And lede us not into Temptation;
Ac delyne us fro yvel.
Amen, that is, so be it.

Next we have Wiclif's version printed in 1370, resembling the last above:

Our Fader, that art in Heavenes,
Hollowed be thy Name;
Thy kingdom come to;
Be thy will done in Eorthe as in Hevene;
Giue to us this day our Bread, over other substans;
And forgif to us our Dettis, as we forgeuen to our Detters.
And lede us not into Temptation;
But deliver us from evyl. Amen.

A. D. 1430, or five hundred and fifty years after the first Anglo-Saxon version of the Lord's Prayer given, we find comparatively slow progress made, as the following will show:

Our Fadir, that art in Heavenis
Hallewid be thi name;
Thi kingdom come to thee;
Be thi Will done in Oerthe as in Hevene.
Give us this day ours Bread over other substance,
And forgive to us our Dettes, as we forgiven our Detteurs,
And lede us not into Temptation;
But deliver us from Ivel. Amen.

We close the record with Tindal's version of 1526:

Our Father which art in Haven
[Halowed be thy name]
Let thy kingdom come;
Thy will be fulfilled as well in earth as in heven;
Give us this days our dayly bred;
And forgave us our Dettis as we forgiven our Detters;
And lede us not into temptation;
But deliver us from evill,
For thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glorys for ever.

This approaches the nearest to the present version and is essentially the same.

[Advocate and Guardian.]

"What Are We Coming To?"

"It would almost appear to the careful observer as he sends his thought abroad over our own county, and the nations of Europe and the world, that the times of tribulation spoken of in Scripture as announciatory of the latter days, had already come. The foundations of industry, order and prosperity seem to be tottering. Governments are corrupted, people rebellious, enterprise paralyzed, trade and commerce languishing, and individuals bankrupt. Suffering and distress prevail everywhere to a most unusual degree. Wars and rumors of wars, famines, pestilence and earthquakes in divers places, increasing wickedness, and heart-sickening casualities and crimes startle the community, and large multitudes exclaim, What are we coming to? The answer seems plain.

"The world is hastening to its destiny. Prophecy is fulfilling, history completing. The kingdoms of this world are being disorganized that they may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. The nations are filling up the cup of their iniquities, which shall turn in their hands into the cup of the Lord's fury. Leaders of false religions are binding upon their followers heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, which are destined to be thrown back with crushing weight upon their own heads. Communities are laying up for themselves 'wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God,' and individuals, sinning with a high hand against knowledge and love, are provoking the Almighty to a just retribution. Let the Lord's people be awake, zealous and active for the Master, vigilant and uncompromising against evil, waiting for his appearing, by the brightness of whose coming the man of sin is to be finally destroyed."—

[Earnest Christian.]

Voltaire's Sneer at Sir Isaac Newton.

Sir Isaac Newton wrote a work upon the Prophet Daniel, and another upon the book of Revelation, in one of which he said that in order to fulfill certain prophecies before a certain date was terminated, namely, 1260 years, there would be a mode of traveling, of which the men of his time had no conception; nay that the knowledge of mankind would be so increased that they would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour. Voltaire, who did not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, got hold of this and said: "Now look at that mighty mind of Newton, who discovered gravity, and told us such marvels for us all to admire. When he became an old man, and got into his dotage, he began to study the book called the Bible; and it seems that in order to credit its fabulous nonsense, we must believe that the knowledge of mankind will be so increased that we shall be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The poor dotard!" exclaimed the philosophic infidel, Voltaire, in the self-complacency of his philosophy. But who is the dotard now?

Character is so much more than wealth or knowledge, fame or power, that it is the measure of the man. When placed in a prominent position of any sort whatever, we say at once: Not "What does he know?" but "What sort of a man is he?" That is the momentous question that involves all. All others are secondary—wealth, knowledge, fame and power, most desirable accessions for a good man; but otherwise they add strength in another direction. We wonder if the young men and boys in our land would realize that character is the most important capital. If one is looking for a partner or employe, what does he require first and most of all? An honest man or boy. Wealth and position, with the first requisite, will be no detraction, but nothing without it. What pillars are to a building, what the foundation is, and the corner-stones thereof, so is a good character to a man or woman, boy or girl. The wise man said, "A good name is rather to be chosen than riches," and he had no lack of wealth. Remember boys—and it will harm none to remember—that what you are is of infinite importance; while what you have is finite in its value; its end is the grave, while the former will grow and enrich its possessor through all the ages of immortality. Strive for it as for your life, for life is naught without it; if a man die for his honor he is an everlasting hero; while if he die for his wealth, he is a sordid fool. We honor it in death if not in life. "So teach us to number our days, as to apply our hearts unto wisdom."

It is announced that Mr. Russam has found at Nineveh, imbedded in a wall of the palace of Assur-Bani-Palo, a round clay cylinder divided into ten compartments, and containing nearly 1,300 lines of fine inscription. What this inscription means, has yet to be determined.

POETRY.

Shall We Know Each Other?

When we hear the music ringing
In the bright, celestial dome—
When sweet angel voices singing
Gladly bid us welcome home,
To the land of ancient story,
Where the dwellers know no care—
In that land of light and glory,
Shall we know each other there?

Shall we know each other—
Shall we know each other—
Shall we know each other—
Shall we know each other there?

When the holy angels meet us,
As we go to join their band,
Shall w- know the friends that greet us,
In the glorious happy land?
Shall we see the same eyes shining
On us, as in days of yore?
Shall we feel the same arms twining
Fondly 'round us as before?

Yes! my earth-worn soul rejoices,
And my weary heart grows light,
Nor the thrilling angel voices,
And the angel faces bright,
That shall welcome us in glory
Are the loved of long ago;
And to them 't is kindly given
Thus their mortal friends to know!

O ye weary, sad, and tossed ones,
Droop not, faint not by the way;
Ye shall join the loved and just ones
In the land of perfect day
Harp-strings touched by angel fingers
Murmured in by raptured ear—
Evermore their sweet song lingers—
We shall know each other there.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I am at home again. Found all well. Was gone to Ill. for some time. Had some good meetings. I find the people quite anxious to hear the word. I first visited the brethren in Champaign county near Pesotum; found them still contending for the truth. From there to Ivesdale, and spent some six days; and immersed two into the Christ. To God be all the praise. From there I visited brother Graham's neighborhood and stayed over three Sundays. They organized a little body of believers of seven. They have a hard time with the sects, but I think they will stand firm. I go again this week to Edgar county, Ill., to hold meeting over two Sundays. Yours in the love of the truth. J. S. HATCH.

Editor Restitution:—I have been encouraged to much perseverance in letting the light of truth shine here by the obedience of two persons, who were inducted into the sin covering name, on Sunday, July 21, at 7 p. m. Merril C. Crandall and Louisa J. Crandall, his wife, formerly Methodist. They are well instructed in the first principles of the Gospel of the kingdom of God. For the past six years my house has been open for the reception of those who might pass this way, belonging to the family of Christ. Meetings have been held from time, to time, as opportunity afforded, by such visitors and a few friends were called together who had heard of the mysterious doctrine. About nine months since I opened a room at 720 Main St. for the investigation of the Scriptures. Meetings have been held nearly every Sunday at 10 a. m. Such persons attended as I could interest by conversation and circulation of books and tracts. Mr. J. G. Haupt, whose immersion was reported in a late RESTITUTION, has met with us quite regularly, others are interested who I expect soon to become obedient to the faith. Yours in the blessed hope.

M. G. LEE.

Davenport, Iowa.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed I send you one dollar for the paper. I prize the truths it advocates too highly to do without it. Ought to have sent you the money sooner, but times are hard, and could not. May God bless you in proclaiming the "glad tidings" and enable you to discharge the duties devolving upon you with that ability and satisfaction to your many brethren and subscribers that has hitherto characterized THE RESTITUTION as one of the best, and to my mind as the only paper that "declares the whole counsel of God." Your brother in Christ.

THOMAS MALONE.

Council Grove, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—I am still at work in the cause and hope sincerely that my labor will not be in vain. On Sunday next I will assist one more truth-seeker to put on Christ, that he may obtain the blessing of the promised inheritance in the kingdom of God. Let us work while yet it is day, for the night soon cometh when no man can work. Hoping that we may all be gathered into the garner, and be accepted of our Lord as the seed that fell on good ground,

I remain your brother in hope.

W. I. CROCKETT.

Wytheville, Va.

Editor Restitution:—Having just joined the army of the Lord, and being a young soldier, I am ready to help edify the brethren in Christ to the extent of my ability, for which purpose I hope these few lines may be available. I would have you to know, brethren, that there is but one to whom we may look for guidance and instruction, and that is the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He is able and willing to uphold all who in humble contrition will come to him, and we should not forget to call upon his name daily, and thank him for his wonderful kindness toward the children of men. If any lack understanding, let us pray to God who giveth liberally, that we may be able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Let us be sober-minded, and thus show ourselves patterns of good works, in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity and sincerity. Thus God will be honored, and his Word received. Christ has left us an example that we should follow in his steps.

Brethren, let us be faithful to him who hath called us by his Gospel, and who has said: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon the whole world to try them that dwell upon the earth."

From your brother in Christ.

ELIJAH WOOD.

Hubbard, Ky.

Editor Restitution:—We, a little band of believers on the south of the Meherrin, have erected the hull of a meeting house. The brethren are weak and in common circumstances. Though we are as strangers according to the flesh, yet through the like precious faith which binds us together as one family, into which we hope ere long to be gathered by the return of the Master, where we shall then see each other face to face, we are encouraged to say that any contribution from brother or sister will be most thankfully received by your brother in Christ. COMMUNICATIONS.

Report of the North Carolina Campmeeting of the Believers of the Abrahamic Faith.

We met according to notice given in THE RESTITUTION, commencing Saturday, August 30th, continuing till Tuesday (four days). The attendance was good, both as to numbers and respectability. Order, harmony, good feeling and the best attention prevailed throughout the entire meeting. Seven or eight discourses were delivered by Brethren Anderson, Lyder, George, and the writer. Brethren A. and L. are workmen that need not be ashamed. Brother George is a new beginner. He and his wife came sixteen miles on foot to be baptized and attend the meeting. Seven were baptized; many more will follow. Among those baptized is a young, licensed Baptist preacher, but had only spoken a few times, modest and retiring, will put on the harness and do battle for the truth as soon as he gets a little better posted. The discourses preached by Brethren Anderson and Lyder will vie with our best speakers in the connection. There was a deep feeling of approval manifest toward the truths spoken, by the entire audiences. The truth has taken a firm hold of this people. The effect is very manifest. The people in the vicinity of the meeting were very kind and friendly, entertaining all that came. They have our hearty thanks and our humble prayers that they may believe and obey the gospel, and be gathered with the righteous unto life eternal.

This campmeeting or conference is the first held in the state. I do not know the number of baptized believers there are, but they have all, or nearly all, been gathered since we began our feeble labors among this people. Brother Anderson has labored very efficiently since he embraced the truth. He is deserving of much credit, and a little better support than he gets. I tremble for those who have abundance of this world's goods, living at their ease and see God's servants in want, traveling on foot from town to town, and from county to county, poorly clothed, and have to pick their scanty meal; but we never hear them complain. No, they are like their Master, have not where to lay their head; if they have, it is on a pallet of straw; but a better day is close at hand. We are quite sure that the people at the meeting realized this most deeply after reading Brother Reed's article on the Sixth Vial, and the remarks made. I think many from that moment resolved to become the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and I shall be greatly disappointed if a goodly number do not in the immediate future come forward and witness a good confession before men. These things greatly encourage us to labor among this people, and we say again, God bless this dear people, and may a large number be gathered whose names shall be found written in the Lamb's book of life. Thus the good work goes on; no undue excitement, but men's better judgment and good sense is appealed to, backed and enforced by the word of God. More anon,

Report of Annual Assembly.

The annual assembly of the Church of God, met, according to announcement, and my heart glows with gratitude to God, that I can say the meeting was a success. Although the writer was the only speaker in attendance, and notwithstanding, we can truly say with the Apostle Paul, that we have been in perils on land and on sea, and in perils among false brethren; that we again, as in times past can sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, that "Thy right hand, O Lord, has become glorious in power, and in the greatness of Thine Excellency, Thou hast overthrown them that rose up against Thee." We opened the meeting on Friday night by referring to the announcement and stated that several little bodies of believers had responded to the invitation, and were present on the occasion, as a little band of strangers, saying by their actions that they have here no abiding city, but were seeking a country, a city, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, and were ready and willing to bear testimony to the whole truth, and to let their light so shine before men, as to constrain others to glorify our Father which is in Heaven; and being assembled, the time would be spent in reasoning out of the Holy Scriptures, both for the mutual edification of the Church of God, and that the eyes of the understanding of all might be enlightened, to know what is the hope of the calling, and what is the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints. The congregation increased from the good old quiet town of Winchester, until, on Sunday night, the beautiful, green Fall Mall street, was lined from Braddock street to Washington street, and to my regret, not much more than half of the good people in attendance could be seated in the house of the brethren. It is given up to be the best demonstration for the truth that we ever had in this place. After a plain scriptural description of a Christian, was given out, all who could answer to it in faith and practice, were invited to be seated together, and by so doing distinguished themselves from the world, according to the God-given plan, so that we may truly be called the Church of God, the foundation of God standing sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are His. The assembly being confident that they were established upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ the chief corner stone, participated together in the rich memorials of a Savior's love, and by so doing, showed forth the death of Him that was dead, but is alive for ever more, amen; and has the keys of hell or the grave, and of death. The assembly thus seeing each other in the faith, gave each other in order while singing one of the sweet songs of Zion, the right hand of fellowship.

The demonstration being patiently and respectfully witnessed by the multitude, I was made to exclaim that my prayers were being answered, that I had long desired to have the opportunity of presenting to my neighbors and their children, in full, the principles that we, as a people, cherish. On Monday the assembly repaired to the water where two precious souls proved their fidelity to the whole truth, by the confession of their faith in the things of the Kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, and by having that all-saving name named on them in baptism, for the remission of sins. On coming up out of the water, the evidence given by the two faithful witnesses, brother and sister Pryor, of their sincerity and honest convictions of the truth, was such, that I was made to exclaim, that Heaven was rejoicing at the transaction; that there was more joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety-and-nine just persons, that need no repentance. May they be bright ornaments in the Church, and in the sight of all men, and so form a character approved of God, and now, having been planted together in the likeness of the death of His Son, and arisen in the likeness of his resurrection, may they, with all the blood washed, when he comes to make up his jewels, be crowned with glory, honor, immortality, eternal life. On Monday night, assembled at the house of the brethren, we read the letters from the brethren, who were hindered from meeting with us. In connection with which the farewell discourse was delivered, in which the brethren were exhorted to so let their light shine as to constrain some one of their race to become an heir to the Kingdom of God, for each one to bring one more to the next assembly, and not to care for a little money, or something to eat, or clothing, but be willing to make any sacrifice in the bounds of reason, to influence some son or daughter of Adam to become a recipient of the eternal inheritance, that they be in that great assembly of which the present had reminded us that is referred to by the psalmist, where the Most High says, "gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice," that since the last assembly I had gone out and influenced several to put on the whole armor of God, and that I was satisfied that the cause in which we are engaged is of God. On the authority of he that hath a dream let him tell it, I told a dream that sister Pryor had before she came from Maryland, which was that she saw an angel, who said to her to follow him, and she did so, and after that she was surrounded by quite a number of angels. I told her that her dream was now interpreted, when we come to understand the meaning of the word angel, in the sense of a messenger, that the Prophets and the Apostles were angels, or ministering spirits sent forth from God to minister to them that shall be heirs to salvation, and that the Elders of the true Church of God, are the Angels of this dispensation, or ministers bearing the good message to the people, and when they believe or obey the Gospel, they too become angels, not only to individuals of their day, but (to show their [illegible]) were destined to be God's ministers in the age to come, which ministration will result in the blessing of all nations. I stated that some months past I was in Maryland. Bro. Pryor and wife who had been baptized, on hearing the Gospel of the Kingdom and import of the name of Jesus Christ fully explained, became very much interested. They soon became satisfied they were ignorant of the Gospel when they were first baptized, but were getting ready to go west. I laid right hold of Brother Pryor and got him to promise at once to bring his little family, and cast in their lots with us, which they did some time past, and now that they were seated in the midst of an assembly of believers of the Gospel, whose right it is to bear the glad tidings to all around, if it is only to influence but one individual to be saved, when the Lord comes. I was perfectly satisfied it was a fulfillment of the sister's dream. I, in conclusion, told the brethren, that as soon as the meeting was over, I was going out again, to see how many more I could gather in by the next assembly, and repeated the exhortation for all to go forth to their respective places of abode, and serve as Angels of Light to the world, and return to our next assembly bearing their sheaves with them, if it is the Master's will that we meet again before He comes, to be admired in all them that believe; and if not, let us be found faithful over a few things, that we may be made ruler over many. And while singing

We speak of the realms of the blest;
Of that country so bright and so fair,
And oft are it glories confessed,
But what must it be to be there?

The farewell greeting was given, with the understanding to hold quarterly as well as annual assemblies at the house of the brethren, the first quarterly meeting to commence on Saturday night, before the first day in October; the next annual assembly to be on the second first day in August, 1879.

N. J. MORGAN.

Another year has rolled around,
Our meeting now is o'er;
Some of us sleep beneath the ground,
And some still on the shore.

The faithful souls who met us here
Have to their homes returned,
To serve the Lord another year;
Oh, may their lamps all burn.

Yes, may they let their light so shine,
While marching on the way,
And prove their calling all divine
In that eternal day.

We surely spent some happy days
In heavenly places sweet,
Worshiping in the good old way
At our Redeemer's feet.

Some of our brethren could not come;
Their seats were vacant still;
This surely left an aching void
That none of us could fill.

Yet we can consolation take
In viewing the promises o'er;
All things together work for good,
While waiting on the shore.

Our meeting has not been in vain;
We showed the gospel plan;
Two precious souls in Jesus's name
Were added to our band.

Now, while we all are scattered wide,
Let us keep our armor bright,
That we be of his chosen bride,
In whom Christ will delight.

The Plan of the Ages.

According to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. Ephesians iii. 11.

This is a most unfortunate translation of the original text. The word rendered eternal, means "of the ages," and the word "purpose" denotes a "plan" or "arrangement." Instead of "eternal purpose" it should read "plan of the ages," or "arrangement of the ages," The whole sentence should read, According to the arrangement of the ages which He made for Christ Jesus, our Lord. A parallel text is Hebrews, i. 2. "By whom also He made the worlds," which should read, "For whom He made the ages."

The above is copied from a lengthy article in the Prophetic Times, of January 1861, signed, D. C. M.

Lord Macaulay's Mother.

Children, look in those eyes, listen to that dear voice, notice the feelings of even a single touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand! Make much of it while you have that most precious of all good gifts, a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love of those eyes; the deep anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after-life you may have friends—fond, dear, kind friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you which none but a mother can bestow. Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard, uncaring world, for the sweet, deep security I felt when of an evening, nestling in her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale, suitable to my age, read in her tender and untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared asleep; never her kiss of peace at night. Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the old churchyard; yet still her voice whispers from the grave, and her eyes watch over me, as I visit spots long since hallowed to the memory of my mother.

The Word Heaven.

Says Richard Chevenix French, professor of Divinity in King's College, London, Eng.:

With how lively an interest shall we discover words to be of closest kin which we had never considered till now but as entire strangers to one another! What a real increase will it be in our acquaintance with and mastery of English to become aware of such a relationship! Thus "heaven" is only the perfect of "to heave;" and is so called because it is "heaved" or "heaven" up, being properly the sky as it is raised aloft.

The London Times' Constantinople correspondent says: "'The immediate effect of the Anglo-Turkish Convention,' writes an intelligent Arab to me, 'will be to make Cyprus the most prosperous island in the world.' Many Turks, he adds, in explanation, have made up their minds, and are making preparations to leave Constantinople and to settle in the new English island, 'under that Government which alone, as they think, understands justice.' There is already a scheme for setting up a newspaper in the Turkish language in Cyprus. Shoals of people will go over from the coasts of Syria, flying from the rapacity and tyranny of Ottoman Governors, for no one doubts that England will vouchsafe to the island that same freedom of the press which is established in the British Colonies, unless, indeed, England were, out of complaisance to the Porte, to alter her system and abjure her principles."

POETRY.

Restored Paradise.

There is a home of peaceful rest,
Where pleasure never dies:
There beauty smiles and all are blest,
With restored Paradise.
Our Father's house prepared for those
Who seek to do his will;
They shall see Sharon's blooming Rose
On Zion's Holy Hill.

Here tossed upon the waves of life,
Where foams the angry tide;
Beholding man's unceasing strife,
We in our Refuge hide;
Beyond the storm, beyond the gloom,
Breaks forth the light of morn;
Arising from the cold, dark tomb,
A nation shall be born.

In that sweet home of tearless joy,
We shall each other greet;
With smiles of love that never cloy,
In perfect union sweet.
There sadness is a thing unknown,
Death frowns not on the scene;
Celestial beauties 'round the throne,
Immortal and serene.

We now can read our titles clear,
To restored Paradise;
Our King in beauty will appear,
And wipe our weeping eyes.
There we shall sing our sufferings o'er,
And shout the victory,
On Eden's blest, immortal shore,
We'll hail Earth's Jubilee.

The Last Words of David.

TITLE.

"Now these are the last words of David."

PROEM.

The oracle of David the son of Jesse;
Even the oracle of man raised up on high:
The anointed of the God of Jacob,
And the composer of the psalms of Israel.
The Spirit of Jehovah speaketh by me;
And his word is upon my tongue.
Jehovah, the God of Israel sayeth;
To me speaketh the Rock of Israel.

SONG.

The Just One ruleth among men?
He ruleth by the fear of God?
As the light of the morning ariseth, Jehovah;
A sun, without clouds, for brightness;
And as the grass from earth after rain.
Verily thus is my house with God;
For an everlasting covenant hath he made with me,
Ordered in all things and safely secured:
For lo! all my salvation and all my desire,
But the sons of Belial shall not flourish;
As a thorn rooted up shall be all of them;
For they will not be taken kindly by the hand.
And the man who shall reprove them
Shall be filled with iron and a wooden spear;
But in the fire shall they be utterly burnt with ignominy.

SELECTIONS.

The Church and the World, and Coming Events.

By the Rev. A. Faussett, the Commentator and Rector of St. Cuthbert's, York—Passages from his New Prophetic Work, "The Church and the World," 180 Pages. Hatchards, Piccadilly, London.

In 2. Tim. iii. 1, we have a portrait drawn of the last days, to which our own times have a striking resemblance: "In the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof, ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth."

Spiritualism and necromancy, too, are mentioned. "As Jannes and Jambres (the magicians) withstood Moses, so these resist the truth." Compare Mal. iii. 5; Rev. xxi. 8: "Sorcerers." Much the same sins are attributed in Rom. i. 29, etc., to the heathen. So that it is a relapse to heathenism, with its beast-like propensities. Thus the hotbed is being prepared for the manifestation of the beast—the reintroduction of these infidel elements under the coming last open antichrist—the worst form of the beast.

The instrument of the Church's sin becomes the instrument of the Church's punishment. The beast will turn upon the harlot who sat upon it, "hates her, and with its ten horns makes her desolate and naked, eats her flesh and burns her with fire." This is just what the Romish church has suffered within these last few years throughout the European continent. The world-powers, France, Italy, Austria, Spain, and Germany, upon which she spiritually ruled, have one and all turned against her, and stripped her of her temporal possessions. This answers to the Greek of Rev. xvii. 16: "They shall eat her masses of flesh" [i. e., her carnalities.

How striking a retribution it is, that having obtained her first temporal dominions* by recognizing the usurper Pepin as lawful king of France, Popery should be lately stripped of those her first dominions by another usurper of France, the Napoleonic dynasty! Under another figure St. John describes this process of draining off the apostate church's resources, as "the drying up of the waters of the Euphrates" on which Babylon was situated (xvi. 12).

Compare Rev. xvii. 1, 15: "The great harlot sitteth upon many waters. The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot sitteth, are peoples and multitudes, and nations and tongues." The drying up of the Euphrates, on which Babylon was situated, has a double and synchronous fulfillment.

Mohammed was in his cave, A. D. 606-610. His Hegira flight from Mecca to Medina was 622; 1260 years added will bring us to 1882 as the fall of the Turks, the successors of the Saracens, the scourge of the idols of gold, silver, and brass, etc., sent on apostate Christendom from the region of the Euphrates (Rev. ix. 13-20).

Thereby the way is being made, before our eyes, for the return of the Jews, "the kings of (Greek from) the East," to their own land, as God hath promised; just as originally Cyrus's drying up of the Euphrates's channel opened the way into Babylon, and so, opened to the Jews (Jehovah's kings-priests, Ex. xix. 6) the return from Babylon. Isa. x. 20; xi. 11-15. See Zech. x. 9-11.

At the same time, A. D. 606, the Emperor, Phocas, confirmed Justinian's grant of headship to the Pope, and gave Boniface the new title of Universal Bishop; 1260 added to this brings us to our times, when the waters of mystical Euphrates, the world resources of the beast power, are being withdrawn from the mystical Babylon, the harlot or apostate church, that the way may be prepared for Christ's transfigured saints returning from the East, to reign as kings-priests with him. Isa. xl. 3; Ez. xliii. 2; Zech. xiv. 4, 5; Rev. i. 6; xix. 8, 13, 14. Babylon must fall, that Jerusalem, literal and spiritual, may rise. The kings of the earth (Rev. 14,) shall be superseded by the Lord from heaven, and "the kings of (from) the East with him. Ex. xxi. 27.

So far the prophecy is fulfilled to the letter. It only remains that the world-power should burn the apostate church with fire. What this exactly shall be remains to be seen. Even the professing evangelical churches, so far as they contain Babylonian elements, shall share in Babylon's doom. The church going after the world, as if it were the reality, instead of witnessing against its godlessness, is false to her profession. So the world, which for a time used her to further its ends, and to sanction its carnality, whilst all the while hating Christ's unworldly religion, at last will execute God's wrath upon her, as an unreality whose sanction it can dispense with, and whose aid it no longer cares for.

Already symptoms appear of the crisis, when the world will rid itself of the nominal profession of Christianity, which it never really relished. So entirely void of reality was the world-powers's profession of Christianity that in Dan. vii. 7, 8, no notice is taken of that profession; but from the blasphemous little horn, the haughty opponent of God, and persecutor of the saints. The men of worldly science are more and more casting doubts on the revelation of God, and denying the exclusive claims of Christianity to rule the conscience and the life.

Socialism, (another form of worldliness), infidelity, and false spiritualism, are the "three unclean spirits" from the mouth of the beast, the dragon, and the false prophet, respectively, preparing the way for the suppression of the apostate church, and the development of the beast. Rev. xvi. 13, 14. Our Lord asks, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke xviii. 8.

The second beast or false prophet (Rev. xvi. 13,) out of the earth (society consolidated and civilized), as opposed to "the sea," yet still of earth, earthy, and the bottomless pit (xi. 7; xiii. 11; xvi. 13; xvii. 8; xix. 20; xx. 10,) is the coming Individual antichrist with "horns like a lamb," feigning the Lamb of God, and doing great wonders, as Paul's adversary (2 Thess. ii. 9,) does. As champion of the apostasy, or first beast, he will breathe life into its decrepitude, and combine in himself forces heretofore mercifully kept distinct—infidelity and superstition against religion, liberty and law.

Our times seem ripening for this unholy alliance. Rationalism, Romanism, or its successor, Spiritualism, and lawless liberalism, are the three evil spirits which "gather the kings of the whole world together to the battle (Greek, war,) of that great day of God Almighty." The battle field is named Armageddon, i. e., the hill of Megiddo, the scene of Josiah's defeat and death, because he came down from his spiritual elevation to join in the world's quarrels as ally of Babylon! a warning to the church. As the world has seen a pagan and a papal persecution, so it shall witness an infidel persecution under the little horn of the fourth kingdom, along with the little horn of the third. Dan. vii. 25; xi. 33; xii. 1; Rev. xii. 15-17.

The papacy has probably a last phase, in which, having lost its temporal possessions, it will not scruple to go forth as a spiritual power, leagueing itself with Democratic anarchy (the last development of the beast) to subvert society; for the false prophet succeeds the harlot. Then, after rocking the social fabric to its basis, its kingdom and that of the beast, shall perish in the one last downfall. Rev. xvi. 13-15; xix. 2, 19, 20.

The fourth kingdom's little horn, as a polity (Dan. vii.), will probably culminate in the little horn representing the beast, as an individual with the eyes of a man (unsanctified intellect) and a mouth speaking great things.

Brethren, these are solemn realities. The part of the prophecy, so far fulfilled is a pledge that the rest shall follow. Blessed be God, the darkest night shall be short, and shall usher in the brightest day, and that, the everlasting day. The rage of Satan is great, but his time is short. The kingdom of the beast continues but a short space. From the moment of his full manifestation, after the judgment on the apostate church, he is doomed to perish, and is therefore called the "son of perdition."

The saints shall escape the full violence of the last fiery trial, and of the judgment to be inflicted, first on the papacy, then, after the beast's brief reign, on antichrist; for it is just after the seduction of "the kings of the earth to the war of that great day of the Lord God Almighty" by three unclean spirits, and directly before their being gathered into Armageddon, that the Lord marks the time of his translating his elect by saying, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." Rev. xvi. 14-16.

When the hearts of worldlings are failing for fear, in looking after those things which are coming on the earth, believers can look up and lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh. Luke xxi. 26, 28. Meanwhile let us, by the cross of Christ, be crucified unto the world, and have the world crucified unto us, so that we "may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Luke xxi. 36.

The dead in Christ shall rise first. Their resurrection is the first resurrection. "The rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished." The language is unmistakably clear. None but the saints share in the resurrection which precedes the thousand years. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." It is the appointed reward of suffering with Christ on earth that we should reign with Christ over the earth. "It is the appointed reward of suffering with Christ on earth that we should reign with Christ over the earth. "If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Reigning with Christ will be the peculiar privilege of those now suffering with Christ.

*The exarchate of Ravenna, the kingdom of Lombardy, and the State of Rome. The first Napoleon in 1860 confiscated the Papal dominions. His nephew, Louis Napoleon, restored large parts of the Pope's territory, and attached them to the kingdom of Italy.

Paul's Care for the Weak.

"To the weak I became as weak, that I might gain the weak."—1 Cor. ix. 22.

Of all the characters which appear in the Bible, excepting that of the Christ himself, the apostle Paul is to me the grandest and most attractive. Blended with a massive intellect, there is the keenest sensibility and intensest emotion, controlled by the most elevated piety, strict conscientiousness, and unselfish benevolence. There is nothing which gives us a better idea of a man's character—of his inner life—than his letters; and, doubtless, it is because we have so many of the letters of Paul, occasioned by a variety of circumstances, and in which he is necessitated to speak much of himself, that we know him better, and feel more attracted to him, than to other faithful and holy men spoken of in the Scriptures.

My present purpose, however, is not to portray the character of the apostle of the Gentiles—such an august subject would require an abler pen, but simply to call attention to one of the manifestations of his generous and noble mind, for the purpose of calling forth the same action in ourselves, who have "like precious faith."

The declaration, that to the "weak he became as weak, that he might gain the weak," shows that he who was not "a whit behind the very chief of the apostles," did not think the weak beneath his care. Most assuredly he cared for the weak. It was because of this that he, an ambassador of the Lord, having a right to demand the submission and support of the churches, and possessing the power to enforce these, sustained himself by the labor of his hands; yea, labored not for himself alone, but also for others, who were unable to do so themselves, so that he was able to say to the elders of the church at Ephesus, "Ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the word of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." It was this benevolent regard for the weak, I say, which led him to work for his own bread, though he had a right to demand it from the churches, in virtue of his apostleship. Hence, in vindicating his conduct, he says: "What is my reward then? Verily, that when I preach the gospel I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel. For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more." "To the weak I became as weak, that I might gain the weak."

It was the same regard for the weak that led him to forego the use of what was lawful in another matter. Regarding the eating of meats that had been offered to idols, he says: "All things are lawful for me to eat, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not. Let no man seek his own, but every man another's welfare." "We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one....Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge, for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour, eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled....Take heed, lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak." "But when ye sin against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat makes my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend," 1 Cor. viii. Referring to the same thing in his letter to the saints at Rome, he says: "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended, or is made weak," Rom. xiv. 21.

It should be observed that the apostle did not become "as weak, that he might gain the weak" to himself. He did not forego what was lawful, for that which was expedient, that he might please men—it was for the well-being of the weak. "This I do," says he, "for the gospel's sake, that I might be a partaker thereof with you," i. e. that we may together enjoy the everlasting inheritance made known by the gospel.

The apostle, in becoming "as weak that he might gain the weak," evinced not only strong affection, but remarkable wisdom, for what means can be better adapted to such an end? No power in the world is so fitted to reach the heart of the weak as sympathy, fellow-feeling. If a strong-minded man gain the affections and confidence of a child, he must have done so by evincing sympathy for that child—feeling as it feels—taking pleasure in that which gives it joy. The philosopher cannot find a companion in a child as a philosopher; but he may do so, with perfect success, by becoming a child. As in our physical system the hard gives place to the soft—the bones of the cranium taking their form and and volume from the development of the soft cerebral mass within, and those of the chest being expanded, according to the size of the lungs; so in the moral world—the strong must bend to the weak. Such is the manner in which our Almighty Father has drawn us to him. Contemplated in his glorious majesty, power, wisdom, justice, and purity, he is to us sinful creatures an object of awful wonder and terror. We might fear and tremble, perhaps admire, but we could not love him. Hence he has drawn us to himself by cords of love. "He speaks of himself to us in the language of human sympathy, and dwells as a Father in the homes on earth." The more effectually to show us his heart, and to gain ours, he sent his well-beloved Son, "in the likeness of sinful flesh." "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." What object can be more helpless than a corpse? So weak did the Lord Jesus become, that we guilty ones might, by faith in him, become the mighty sons of God." "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." This divine philosophy of becoming "weak to gain the weak," is further illustrated in the priesthood of the Son of God. He is "able to have compassion on the ignorant and those who are out of the way, since he himself was surrounded with weakness;" and it is because we have not a high priest who is unable to sympathize with our weaknesses, that we are able to "come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

In like manner Paul, who had drunk deeply into the spirit of his Master became "weak that he might gain the weak."

What then is the practical bearing of all this condescension on the part of Paul, and his Lord and ours? Evidently this. "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." This, beloved, is a great work. It is not after the manner of men, but after God. It is a difficult matter for us "not to please ourselves but to please our neighbor, for his good to edification, even as Christ pleased not himself." Yet it must be done, otherwise we are not "followers of God as dear children," but "walk as men." We aspire to be fellow-heirs with the Son of God in his eternal kingdom and glory! How dare we, unless we strive to walk as he walked? Let us, then, care for the little ones, and bear with their frivolities, whims and fretfulness. The most we can have to endure is little compared with that self abnegation which the Lord of all suffered for us; little even compared with what the apostle of the Gentiles had to bear in prosecuting his labors of love. Earnestly and honestly striving "to gain the more" to God, he will aid us by his strength; and should our labor be unacknowledged or unnoticed in the present age, we shall nevertheless have a good conscience toward God, and, in "the age to come, life everlasting."

The Lord's Return.

"For yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."—Heb. x. 37.

We are nearing a grand crisis, in the world's eventful history. The signs in the political and ecclesiastical world indicate the proximity of Christ's appearing. God's design is approaching a glorious consummation. "The times of refreshing" will soon be inaugurated by the "personal presence" of "the Prince of Peace." Isa. ix. 6, 7; Acts iii. 19. God will yet "send Jesus Christ . . . whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii. 20, 21. Though the nominal church and scoffing world continue to ask, "Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Pet. iii. 3, 4,) Christians who have their faith based upon the immutable testimony of God's word, look forward with joyful anticipation, for the "return" of the absent "Nobleman." Luke xix. 11-27. We have the divine assurance of Christ himself: "I will come again." "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." "I go away and come again unto you." John xiv. 3, 18, 28. Blessed assurance! Christ "will come again!" Were it not for the promise of his coming, we would indeed be left "comfortless;" for he has said, "Whither I go, ye cannot come." John viii. 21; xiii. 33. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." 1 Thess. iv. 16. The "same Jesus" that ascended "into heaven, shall descend from heaven." Acts i. 9-11.

"Haste thee along, ages of glory,
Haste the glad morn when Christ appears."

The hope of Christ's "glorious appearing" is a "blessed hope." Titus ii. 13-15. "His appearing" (2 Tim. iv. 1) has associated with it, events of thrilling interest to "them that look for him." Heb. ix. 28.

"Our vile (or corruptible) body" will then be changed, and "fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii. 20, 21. "When he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John. ii. 2, 3; Psa. xvii. 15. "We shall be like him" in incorruptibility, (Rev. i. 18; Luke xx. 34-36,) and spotless purity. 1 Pet. ii. 21, 23; Isa. lx. 21. God's "dead men," (Isa. xxvi. 19,) that now "sleep in Jesus," will then be raised to "immortality," and the living saints will "be changed" to the same deathless nature, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." 1 Cor. xv. 42-55; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18. We will then "appear" with Christ "in glory." Col. iii. 3, 4. We will then receive the fadeless "crown of glory." 1 Pet. v. 4. We will then receive our "reward." Matt. xvi. 27; Rev. xxii. 12. We will then "inherit the kingdom, under the whole heaven." Dan. vii. 13, 14, 27; Matt. xiii. 37-43; xxv. 21-34. Heirship will then give place to actual possession. Dan. vii. 18, 22; James ii. 5. We shall "reign" with Christ "on the earth," and "inherit" it "forever." Psa. xxxvii. 8, 9, 11, 18, 22, 27, 29, 34; Prov. iii. 21, 22; Rev. v. 5, 10; 2 Tim. ii. 12.

Kind reader, in view of the impending crisis and coming glories, let me entreat you to forsake the ways of sin, and serve the "living and true God," waiting for his Son from heaven, so that when he who is our life shall appear, ye may also appear with him in glory. Col. iii. 4. A. CURTIS.

Christ's strength is the strength of the Christian. If we would stand, Christ must be our foundation; if we would be safe, Christ must be our sanctuary.

It is a most important lesson, and too little thought of, that we learn how to enjoy ordinary life, and to be able to relish our being without the transport of some passion, or the gratification of some appetite.—Steele.

Men talk too much about the world. Each one of us here, let the world go as it will, and be victorious, or not victorious, has he not a life of his own to lead? One life; a little gleam of time between two eternities; no second chance to us forevermore.

"The lips may utter holy words,
And tremble with the form of prayer;
May charm the ear like singing birds,
And seem an angel's praise to share.

"And yet unless a life of love,
Which fain would bless the world, be ours,
In vain we lift our hearts above,
Though worshiping in Eden bowers!"

A worthy Quaker once wrote: "I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there can be any kindness I can do to any fellow being, let me do it now, for I will not pass this way again." Were all to act thus how many would be happy!

Every failure is a step to success, every direction of what is false directs toward what is true; every trial exhausts some tempting form of error. Not only so, but scarcely any attempt is entirely a failure; scarcely any theory, the result of steady thought, is altogether false; no tempting form is without some latent charm derived from truth.

Savior, dear Savior, we're waiting for thee,
As 'mid earthly perils we roam;
Our hearts are now sighing, while sin is so rife,
To see thee in majesty come.

Oh! long we have walked in darkness of night,
And wondered in sorrow and tears;
But then we know soon in thy glory will come
To reign through eternity's years.

EFFECTIVE HEARING.

Effective preaching is called for in all the churches. How pathetic every one grows in telling the need of it! But how little one hears of effective hearing! Yet effective hearing is half the secret of effective preaching. The hearers make half the preachers—alas! unmake them, too. Who can preach to shut eyes and yawning mouths? Who to those that care nothing for his word? Who to those that hear only a bit of his truth, and go forth to misrepresent that as the whole?

A GOOD AND TRUE EPITAPH.

On a mouldering stone, in an old graveyard near Newburyport, Mass., is found the following epitaph:

Here lies in a state
Of perfect oblivion
J——A——
Death has decomposed him,
And at the general resurrection Christ
Will recompose him.

"The true wakeful life," says the Rev. H. Bonar, of Scotland, "is a thing of intensity and depth. It carries ever about with it the air of calm and restful dignity; of inward power and greatness. It is fervent, but not feverish; energetic, but not excited; speedy in its doings, but not hasty; prudent, but not timid or selfish; resolute and fearless, but not rash; unobtrusive and sometimes, it may be, silent, yet making all around to feel its influence; full of joy and peace, yet without parade or noise; overflowing in tenderness and love, yet, at the same time, faithful and true."

Israel and the Resurrection.

"The Spirit of God leads our mind, in Scripture, to connect our resurrection with Israel's blessing. Thus, in the chapter of resurrection, we read, 'when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.' Thus, the resurrection of those who are 'Christ's at his coming,' is authoritatively declared to be at the same epoch as the fulfillment of an Old Testament promise. If we turn to Isa. xxv., the place where this 'saying' is 'written,' we find that it is in the midst of a description of the restored blessing of Israel in earthly things, that the promise is introduced which is a point of hope to us."—Tregelles.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to that end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked: eternal life only through Christ; and many other Bible truths. It also advocates hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final rewards.

COMMUNICATIONS.

One Salvation.--Rom. viii. 34.

Christ by his righteousness hath redeemed all things; "obedient unto death," hath brought life and immortality to light," (2 Tim. i. 10.) and when he whose right it is to reign appears again, he comes as a liberator of all nature as from her thraldom. The first part of our text interprets the second. His death is life, justification, by satisfying the demand is the purchase, and the pledge, and life springing forth is the power manifested as to the operation of the spirit in quickening. Thus, the first-fruits of a new creation was the conception of death He rose again a glorious body, the beginning of the redemption of the world, the birth pangs of the crucifixion ("That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die,") brought the at-one-ment, God and man. Adam lived himself, with him his dominion in dying die. "As by the offense of one judgment came upon all to condemnation. Christ died to himself with himself his dominion in living live. "By the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men with justification of life." Rom. v. 18. "He is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." 1 Tim. iv. 10. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22.

Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John v. 28, 29. "He that believeth on him ("the one sacrifice once offered for sin,") is not condemned." John iii. 18. Paul declares that such "Are not of those who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." Heb. viii. 39. "By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh." Heb. viii. 20. Therefore, evermore we lift our eyes from the sepulchre, no more to seek the living among the dead; he is risen; "Christ is at the right hand of God, also maketh intercession for us." Paul, with this knowledge said: "I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified." He emptied himself, that he might be filled, to preach Christ risen, ascended, and coming again. The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John xiv. 26. As the power sent, opened up to Paul's mind the words of Christ, he sees all things under heaven as vanity, and this vanity witnessing to hope, he saw this great universe subjected to vanity by reason of him who hath subjected the same to hope. This is a great mystery, but looking within and beneath all evil, he sees a God of love, who hath written death upon the present, and out of that death brought life, that every heart believing it might be directed upward to a living redeemer.

"Paul considered himself crucified with Christ, nevertheless living, yet not he, but Christ living in him; and the life which he then lived in the flesh he lived by the faith of the Son of God, who loved him and gave himself for him." Gal. ii. 19, 20. I put this language this way, as speaking of Paul, that we may see in him the Christian's standing. He would not look back, death had vanished as to its power, by his life being inspired with hope. He saith, "What a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for." Death is seen; to the child of God it is in the back ground. We should hope for that we see not, even Christ our life. Look up instead of down, "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but we ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the spirit; even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, namely, the redemption of the body." Rom. viii. 22. Christ hath ascended, "and he shall so come in like manner as he went into heaven."

Dear brother, this struggling season, this mortifying the world, the flesh and the devil, are but the birth pangs of glory. Paul with his eye of faith on things unseen, said: "I labor to keep my body under," and the spirit helping his infirmities, he was clothed with the best of all gifts, charity; (God is love, and the spirit of love is the comforter sent). We read of him demonstrating in this spirit and this power to the church in all his mission through life, "exhorting and admonishing" that in our great liberty, in our "going on unto perfection," in our waiting and watching for him our life to appear, that we use not this salvation for an occasion to the flesh, "but by love serve one another." Take any epistle he wrote, his presence, or the sending another to the church, everywhere it was from Christ crucified, not at the death, Christians have passed from death unto life. The blessed hope was his theme, the living hope; and his life was spent after the establishment of the church in beseeching the members to live it.

We will notice one or two paragraphs, written as he neared his end: "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. iv. 1, 2, 3.

Again, "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." 2 Tim. iv. 1, 2.

To have power in preaching, is to do all with long-suffering. Christ in saying, "Ye hypocrites, ye generation of vipers," did it with reproving love, but when reviled, he reviled not. Oh, what depth of example! He had free will, was not constrained. No man, nor angel had power to take his life; but in obedience to the will of his Father, loving an ungodly world, he laid his life down, that in taking it up he might take possession of death, that is of all things. He hath possession, yet we see not all things put under him. I look at him as still dutiful, not less on the throne than at the cross. He waits the Father's will, which is "long-suffering to usward not willing that any should perish." Oh, what love; God bears and forbears with this wicked world. In this long-suffering season the church is preparing; unto whom is sent the earnest of the inheritance, through whom the great love of God is preached to all nations, tongues and people for repentance and conversion, and into whom is revealed somewhat of his will and the riches of his glory, which, "In the regeneration when he shall sit on the throne of his glory," he may by them express his grace unto all creation, ruling and governing in righteousness his purchased possession by these his kings and priests. The Scripture declareth that not only the church, but "The creation itself also shall be emancipated from the servitude of this universal decay into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." Rom. viii. 21.

Dearly beloved, let us thank and praise God who has written hope upon the tombstone of vanity; and he having said, "Behold I come quickly," let us, in living our hope, rejoice, responding, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." A sin-cursed earth, irrational, yet with a yearning look, expressing expectation, we, with it wait, waiting still "For the adoption, to-wit: the redemption of our body." "Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit." Amen.

E. N. HARMON.

The Spirit Work.

For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The spirit itself, beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. Rom. viii. 14-17, R. V. "Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." verse 9.

What does this passage teach us? Suppose we ignore our early teaching and the teachings of the present "clergy," and learn the pure doctrine of the word. "The spirit of God," "spirit of Christ" and "spirit of adoption," seem to mean the same thing, and are put in contrast with the "spirit of bondage." The latter spirit is a disposition or feeling of fear, that would subject us, "all our life-time, to bondage." The opposite feeling is the "mind that was in Christ Jesus," the love of the Father "shed abroad in the heart." The spirit of God, in this connection, is the love of God,—the good will of Christ, the elder brother. The spirit or feeling of adoption which delivers from the tormenting fear of death. This spirit of love of adoption of Christ, is the proof that we are the children of God; without it "we are none of His." If we are led by this spirit "we are the sons of God." It is because of the same spirit dwelling in us that "He who raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies," (see Marginal reading).

But was not the Holy Spirit promised and shed upon the disciples at Pentecost and afterwards for a specific purpose? We answer, yes. The object is clearly stated, to "convince the world of sin and judgment," and greatly increase the faith, power, and comfort of the disciples. What did the Holy Spirit do on Pentecost? It produced a sound as of a "rushing mighty wind," "Cloven tongues like as of fire" were seen sitting upon each of them, they spake to the assembled thousands, as the Spirit gave them utterance in all their different languages. By means of the power of the spirit of God in producing these wonders and the explanation of Peter as he "lifted up his voice" and preached to them, they were "convinced" of their sin of unbelief—were pricked in their heart, and cried to know what they should do. They immediately obeyed the direction of Peter, to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. Is it not exceedingly clear just what all parties in this great transaction did? Amid the rushing tornado sound and spectacle of fiery tongues, the Apostles proclaimed the "wonderful works of God" to that vast multitude in all their different tongues, as the "Spirit gave them utterance." This exhibition of miraculous power produced by the Holy Spirit caused them to believe with all their heart the word preached, and their faith in the Apostolic word, produced by these means, led to "Godly sorrow," to the formation of strong purposes to obey—to immediate immersion for the remission of their sins, and the consolation of a blessed hope.

How simple is the inspired narative and how different from modern conversions! The old Calvinistic theory, preached from many pulpits and spread out in large volumes, was, that the Holy Spirit must change the nature of the sinner's immortal soul and root out by Almighty power the innate desire to sin, or he never could repent and return to God. This necessary change of nature will be effected, in God's time, for the elect only, and all the rest must be eternally damned because they were born with a wicked nature that they could no more change than they could make a world. But the Methodist and the New School Presbyterians and Baptists, be it said to their credit, have driven this God-dishonoring system of faith nearly out of existence. But while they teach that all can repent and be saved if they will, yet they have substituted an unscriptural theory in place of the old Calvinism, and teach that the sinner will never submit to God until the Holy Spirit makes the preached word supernatural effectual. Mr. Finney, the great revivalist, illustrates the "new school" idea, by supposing a man in a reverie walking over the precipice at Niagara Falls, some body sees his danger and cries "stop," with all his might. The man wakes to a sense of his danger and wheels around just in time to save himself. Overjoyed at his escape from a terrible death, he cries that word "stop," how it rings in my ears. Then he ascribes his salvation to the man who cried stop, to the providence that sent him there. Then he says, "if I had not turned at that moment I should have been lost," illustrating the sinner's agency in saving himself. Now, says Mr. F., this figure lacks just one thing. When the preacher cries "stop," the Holy Ghost acts the word home to the sinner in some mysterious manner, so as to make it effectual. Where is there a particle of proof of this theory in the Bible?

The Holy Spirit did make the gospel effectual when the Apostles preached it in only one way, and that was by performing signs and wonders as evidence to the people that the gospel was true. When, by the power of such evidence any believed and obeyed the gospel it became effectual to their conversion. Their belief was just as natural as any belief, and their right action followed as naturally as any action in this world follows strong faith. The means employed to secure faith and conversion were miraculous. I will adduce one out of many passages as proof. Mark. xvi. 15. Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned and these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues, they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them, etc. After speaking these things, the Lord was taken up into heaven, and "they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following." The word was proved true and made effectual by the Lord working with them by the miraculous signs and by them alone. He does not work by these signs now,—the word needs no further confirmation. But we have the fulfillment of the sure word of prophecy in addition to all the miracles of the past. E. HOYT.

Exposition of Matt. iv. 4.

It is written man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. This is a quotation by the Savior from the law of Moses. Deut. viii. 4. The whole verse reads as follows: "And he humbled them and suffered them to hunger, and fed them with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know that He might make thee to know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth of the mouth of the Lord doth man live. This portion of Holy Scripture affords food for deep and profound investigation and reflection. First, Man. Second, Live or Life. Third, Bread. Fourth, But by every word of God; or every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Man, what is he? What his origin, his nature and his destiny? We shall only give a succinct statement of the leading ideas relative to man; his origin, made of dust of the ground; the account given by Moses is the only sensible, intelligent and truthful one, made known to the children of men. All others lack the essential element of Divine inspiration: his nature mortal; an intellectual animal of the highest order of creation, capable of choice, had power to stand or was free to fall; his destiny is to go back to dust and remain in the congregation of the dead or accept of salvation through Christ and have a resurrection to eternal life in the kingdom of God.

Life in Christ lies at the foundation of all Bible truth. "I am the way, the truth and the life Christ; I am that bread of life; I am the living bread which came down from heaven."

It is clear and beyond all question, that there is no eternal life to any of Adam's race only through Christ, the way, the truth, and the life. and yet nine-tenths of Protestant Christians believe that the wicked have immortal souls and will live in a state of eternal sin and suffering; how absurd, how blasphemous and how God dishoring and soul destroying; it is the parent of infidelity and the bane of our most holy christianity. Christ calls himself the bread of life, and yet he says that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; simply a belief in Christ and him crucified will not insure eternal life. The young man in the gospel asks the Savior what he must do to inherit eternal life: he did not tell him to believe on me, get religion and join the church: the Savior answers his question: Tells him he must keep the commandments and names them. All these have I kept from my youth up he no doubt would have felt elated and thought to have a sure thing. The Savior could read character admirably, yet lacked then one thing; sell all thou hast, distribute it to the poor, take up thy cross, come and follow me. He went away sorrowful, for he was very rich. This is a fearful passage and upon it we make a few plain remarks. First, to be a Christian or follower of Christ we must do as he said, and done he did, follow his example, and not persuade ourselves that something else will do just as well. Did he mean just what he said? We think he did. How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God. May we not get and keep a little more than we really need; and know that the cause of Christ languisheth for the very money that you have hoarded in bank or in bonds and mortgages drawing unlawful interest (usury) and the poor of the flock are in absolute need; he that hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of comparison, how dwelleth the love of God in that man? James. "He that forsaketh not all that he hath cannot be my disciple." We know by blessed experience what this last quotation means; we were called a fool in plain words for doing just what our dear Lord has commanded us to do, but we have never repented for the act nor been sorry nor ashamed. It has given us the advantage; many will make ship-wreck of this faith on this fatal rock. The greatest facility that I have ever found in learning and understanding the Scriptures, is to believe what they say, and do just what the Scriptures teach we shall then live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. We can then say with Paul, "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are Christ's, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit; for the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death." A significant question: What are the Scriptures written for if not to be taken as a rule of our faith and practice? Why should we believe a part and ignore the balance or adopt something else in their stead? Why deny the literal personal return of Jesus the Christ, so fairly and so positively taught in the word of God; and why deny the earth made free from the curse as the home and abode of saints, and why deny the return of Israel to their own land, and the rebuilding again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down that the residue of men might seek after God, and all the Gentiles on whom my name is called who doeth all these things, saith the Lord. These, with many more important truths, are but partially believed, if at all. Who would be offended if they were told they were not Christians. Our subject magnifies as we proceed, and we can only repeat our text. It is written man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord shall man live.

NEWELL BOND.

Hot Creek, N. C.

The famine in India has been a severe blow to its material prosperity. Trade of all kinds languishes. The people have been impoverished by the high prices of food, while the great mortality among the laboring poor has resulted in enormous areas of land remaining uncultivated. One of the most remarkable effects has been a great diminution in the birth-rate. The rarity of births in the famine districts is very marked.

Idleness is the very source of sin. Standing pools gather mud, and nourish and breed venomous creatures; and so do the hearts of idle and slothful Christians.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

You can't strengthen a fence by whitewashing it, or a man's character.

"Earth's joys are but a dream; its destiny
Is but decay and death. Its tallest form
Sunshine and shadow mixed. Its brightest sky
A rainbow braided on the wreaths of storm."

Many a believer lives in the cottage of doubt when he might live in the mansion of faith.

Pining soul! some nearer Jesus;
And O come not doubting thus;
But with faith that trusts more bravely
His large tenderness for us.

If our love were but more simple,
We should take him at his word,
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

The wish falls often warm upon my heart that I may learn nothing here that I cannot continue in . . other world; that I may do nothing here but deeds that will bear fruit in heaven.—Richter.

The experience and possession of divine pity is better than bodily ease, freedom from trouble, or the greatest worldly prosperity.

I shall love this life! it will shine bright,
With its wonderful mystery;
Some day it will move no longer here,
But will vanish silently.
But I know I shall find it again once more,
In a beauty no song hath told;
It will meet me at the golden door,
And around me forever fold.

THINGS SEEN AND UNSEEN.

Earth's joys and sorrows are alike fleeting. Its beauties and blemishes will soon be among the things of the past; and, as Dr. Cumming says, "some few years hence it will matter very little what we have suffered if we find this, that we have washed our robes in the Lamb's precious blood, and that our righteousness is the righteousness of our Lord."

While dark storms of human wrath are gathering in our national skies, it is comforting to remember that high above the storm there is One enthroned who "maketh the wrath of man to praise him," and with almighty strength restrains "the remainder of wrath." In God we trust.

Worn and weary, oft the pilgrim
Hails the setting of the sun,
For his goal is one day nearer,
And his journey nearly done.
Thus we feel when o'er life's desert
Heart and sandal-sore we roam,
As the twilight gathers o'er us,
We are one day nearer home.

We know of no other way by which to keep the love of the world out of our heart, than to keep in our hearts the love of God; and no other way by which to keep our hearts in the love of God, than building ourselves upon our most holy faith. That denial of the world which is not possible to him that dissents from the gospel testimony, is possible, even as all things are possible, to him that believeth. To try this without faith, is to work without the right tool or the right instrument. But faith worketh by love; and the way of expelling from the heart the love which transgresseth the law, is to admit into its receptacles the love which fulfilleth the law.—Chalmers.

Praise as well as pray. If you would arm yourselves for trouble and duty, recount the marvelous acts of the Lord, as well as supplicate he communications of his grace. Before they departed—the Redeemer to the terrible agony, the disciples to the dreaded separation—the last thing was to sing a hymn—a chant of thankful psalms.

"When the mists have rolled in splendor
From the beauty of the hills,
And the sunshine warm and tender
Falls in kisses on the rills,
We can read love's shining letter
In the rainbow of the spray,
We shall know each other better
When the mists have rolled away."

THE JORDAN VALLEY.

The Jordan valley, in Palestine, was one blaze of beautiful flowers, growing in a profusion not often to be found, not even in more fertile lands. The ground was literally covered with blossoms, the great red anemone, like a poppy, grew in long tracts on the stony soil; on the soft marls patches of delicate lavender color were made by the wild stocks; the retem, or white broom (the juniper of Scripture), was in full blossom, and the rich purple nettles contrasted with fields of the kutufy or yellow St. John's wort. There were also quantities of orange-colored marigolds, and long fields of white and purple clover, tall spires of asphodel, and clubs of snapdragon, purple salvias and white garlic, pink geraniums and cistus, tall white umbelliferous plants, and large camomile daisies, all set in a border of deep green herbage, which reached the shoulders of the horses.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. L. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPT. 16, 1878.

THERE is a rumor afloat that a new treaty between England and the Porte has been settled giving England a protectorate over Egypt.

THE yellow fever is still raging in the Southwest, and there seems to be no abatement, as yet, in the deadly virulence of the fell disease.

WAR continues between Austria and Bosnia. The fighting, so far, is indecisive. The Austrian loss between the 4th and 9th of September was about 100 officers and 3,000 men.

THE settlement of the Eastern question, as effected by the Berlin congress, scarcely amounts to a truce. The late news is that Greece is preparing an expeditionary force of 100,000 men.

WE hope to keep right along with THE RESTITUTION. Owing to our indisposition, some things may be neglected for a time. The paper runs low for funds at the present. Dear brethren, remember THE RESTITUTION.

WE have been suffering under an attack of chills and fever for the last five days. We have managed THE RESTITUTION editorially during the remissions from fever as well as we could. Brother Harsh, the business agent, has been entirely prostrate for some days past, unable to attend to the business of the office.

Trine Immersion.

As we have traced trine immersion back to the Church Fathers, as they are termed in Ecclesiastical History, and found that the distinct idea of the innovation was to shadow forth the doctrine of the creed of creeds by the initiatory ordinance, we will crave some further indulgence on the part of our readers while we call their attention to the modern creeds of those great Ecclesiastical Hierarchies that profess to regard the teaching of these fathers as unquestionable authority in all matters, both of faith and practice, to ascertain whether the trinitarian creed and trine immersion are not still regarded as correlates of an inseparable character. We are indebted for the following extracts to the July number of the Bibliotheca Sacra, for 1874:

"The doctrine of the Russian church (which is in substantial agreement with the Greek church generally, and comprises six-sevenths of it) concerning baptism is contained in the following extracts from their Primer and Catechism: 'The Russian Primer for teaching children to read the ecclesiastical and civil characters' has the following on baptism: 'Q. What dost thou receive by Holy Baptism? A. I receive the remission of sins, and am added to the company of Christ's people; at the same time I promise before God, and before his church, to live henceforth a clean and sinless life, even as I came up clean and sinless from the water.'

"A short Catechism, revised and approved by the most holy governing synod, and published by command of his Imperial majesty for the use of schools' expresses itself thus: 'Q. What is the tenth article of the creed? A. I acknowledge one baptism for the remission of sins. Q. Why is baptism called a mystery? A. Because of the grace which mysteriously worketh in it. Q. In what consists baptism? A. In this, that the believer is dipped thrice in water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Q. Why are we baptized? A. To the end that we may be mystically washed from sin, and receive a new life of grace.'

"The longer Catechism of the Orthodox, Catholic Eastern Church, examined and approved by the most holy governing synod, and published for the use of schools and of all Orthodox Christians, by order of his imperial majesty, has the doctrine thus: 'In baptism man is mysteriously born to a spiritual life.' A sacrament is defined as 'a holy act, through which grace, or, in other words, the saving power of God, works mysteriously upon man.' Baptism is a sacrament in which a man who believes, having his body thrice plunged in water in the name of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, dies to the carnal life of sin, and is born again of the Holy Ghost to a life spiritual and holy.' 'Q. What is most essential in the administration of baptism? A. Trine immersion in water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Q. What is required of him that seeks to be baptized? A. Repentance and faith; for which cause also before baptism they recite the creed. Q. But why then are children baptized? A. For the faith of the parents and sponsors, who are also bound to teach them the faith as soon as they are of an age to learn. Q. Why cannot baptism be repeated? A. Baptism is a spiritual birth; a man is born but once; therefore, he is also to be baptized but once. Q. What is to be thought of those who sin after baptism? A. They are more guilty in their sins than the unbaptized, since they had from God special help, and have thrown it away.'

"In the Treatise on the Duty of Parish Priests, composed and printed in 1816, by George Kontsay, bishop of Mogilef, with the assistance of Parthenius Sopkopsky, bishop of Smolensk, and adopted by common consent 'wherever the Slavonian church dialect is understood,' it is enjoined that the godfather or godmother be an orthodox believer and know those articles of faith which are necessary to salvation."

"The writer, in the Bibliotheca Sacra, next quotes from a work written by John Adam Moehler, D. D., Dean of Wurzburg, and late professor at the University of Munich, who thus states the Roman Catholic view: 'They, (the sacraments) work in us by means of their character, as an institution prepared by Christ for our salvation, (ex opere operato utitur a Christo in place of quod operatus est Christus),* that is to say the sacraments convey a divine power, merited for us by Christ, which cannot be produced by any human disposition, by any spiritual effort or condition; but is absolutely for Christ's sake conferred by God through their means. Nay, the religious energies of the human soul are set in new motion by the sacrament, since its divine matter impregnates the soul of man, vivifies her anew, establishes her in the most intimate communion with God, and continues to work within all men, who do not show themselves incapable of its graces, or, as the council expresses it, do not place an obstacle in the way.' Speaking specially of baptism in a work entitled, Symbolism or Exposition of the Doctrinal Differences between Catholics and Protestants, he says, after reference to the richness of the symbolism connected with its solemnization in the Catholic Church since the second century: 'Symbol is crowded upon symbol in order to express, in the most manifest way, the one idea; that a total permanent change is to occur in man, and a new higher, and lasting existence is henceforward to commence; and hence, among other reasons, baptism is not to be repeated.'"

From the above extracts it will appear that the trinitarian creed and trine immersion are correlates in the teaching of the Russian and Greek churches, and that the Roman Catholic writer dates the symbolisms of Catholic practice in the sacraments, back to the second century.

*From the work as performed by Christ, in place, of what Christ works.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"Peculiar People." No. 1.

That God's people should differ from all others of the human family is clearly shown in the history given of them in the Bible. The object in view in writing a series of articles upon this subject, is not for the purpose of inviting criticism, nor to dogmatize, but to edify and instruct. Two prominent traits that distinguish believers will be noticed in treating the subject.

1. Their faith.
2. Their practice.

First, It is not my purpose to give in detail the items of faith held by believers in God's Word, as that would involve much labor, and occupy to much space, besides it might be the means of alarming some timid natures that are ready to regard any written statement as a creed. I shall therefore briefly summarize the things most surely believed by the peculiar people.

Concerning man, they do not believe he is immortal, nor possessed of immortality, but that by a patient continuance in well doing man can seek for immortality; and at the resurrection of the just will be made immortal. They believe that Jesus the great pattern of life emerged from the tomb with an undying nature, and has thus given a pledge to believers that he will also raise them up at the last day. These promises form the basis of this faith: "Because I live ye shall live also," and "All that the Father hath given me I shall lose nothing but raise him up at the last day."

Immortal life with Jesus dates from his resurrection from the dead. "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore." Immortal life with the believer will begin when the trumpet sounds and the dead are raised incorruptible. Concerning the future home of the righteous, they believe that this earth and not heaven will be the eternal abode of all the saints. this faith is predicated upon the testimony of Moses and the prophets. Jesus and the apostles, all of whom taught that the earth is to be the home of the righteous. The Bible opens with a history of the earth as a home for the race, it closes with the sublime announcement of the original purpose accomplished. The entire book is in harmony with these statements. Upon the basis of this grand fact rests the promise of God to Abraham of an everlasting inheritance of the land. It is the mighty pillar that supports the oath of God to His Son, to give him an everlasting kingdom, whose dominion should extend from sea to sea and from the rivers to the ends of the earth. It is the firm foundation upon which is based the hope of all the redeemed that they shall reign upon the earth. He whose faith makes heaven the grand central idea of the Bible has made as great a mistake as would the astronomer who should assert that the earth is the grand center of the solar system. If a person should be asked, what is the capital of England, and should reply by saying Liverpool, it would be clear proof that the person was ignorant of the geography of that country. How many there are who have not studied the geography of the Bible.

The peculiar people believe that the Lord Jesus Christ will come to earth again to establish a glorious kingdom that shall have no end. They believe that the kingdom of God will be a literal government upon earth in which universal peace and righteousness shall prevail. That the saints are to be corulers with Christ in the great work of governing the world. That in order for them to perform the duties that will devolve upon them in that age they must be qualified by obedience to the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. The future government of the earth is to be no experiment, to result in a possible failure, but to be a fixed reality that will be as unchangable as the eternal existence of God, therefore the rulers for that age will have been fully tested as to their moral fitness for the positions they will fill, and this being determined by the divine standard, they will at the coming of the Lord be changed to incorruptible beings and thus be morally and physically fitted to fill positions in the kingdom. That which will best enable us to govern others, is the ability to govern ourselves. The grandest victory man ever achieved is the subjugation of his passions the control over his propensities, hence the wise man Solomon says, "he that ruleth his spirit (temper) is better than he that taketh a city."

Remember, ye who expect to associate with Jesus in the rulership of earth, that none but the tried and true can share with Him the honors of royalty. The moral standard by which character is to be formed is high, but none too high. There is not a requirement but that can be complied with. It requires effort and constant practice to qualify for the duties devolving upon believers; and so it does to fit persons for the ordinary duties of this life, and it is to be feared that too little attention has been paid to the cultivation of the practical part of Christianity. The relation of believers to the world has been such that much time has been spent in the defence of theoretical truth. This has engendered a spirit of controversy that has brought into use the strong argumentative powers of believers while earnestly contending for the faith. While this is necessary let us all diligently cultivate those traits of character that are so often urged in the epistolary writings. To this part of the subject we propose to devote the next article. One more prominent item of faith demands notice; the final destiny of the wicked.

As God's plans never change let us learn what disposition God made of the first sinner. The history discloses the fact that the penalty inflicted upon the first sinner was death. In harmony with this read the statement of the prophet: "The soul that sinneth it shall die," and for further confirmation read the statement of the apostle Paul: "The wages of sin is death." Death then and not life in misery is the final doom of sinners. "All the wicked will God destroy." W.

Selections from the Messenger.

Eternal Life.

"And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." 1 John ii. 25.

What words of hope and cheer to believers in God's Word, which is truth. John xvii. 17. Many sad hearts have been made to rejoice in contemplating the exceeding great and precious promises of the Scriptures, among which is the promise of eternal life. What condescension upon the part of God, to confer this priceless boon in the future on the obedient. But, notwithstanding, God in His benevolence, has promised eternal life, many in this age of fables (2 Tim. iv. 4) arrogate to themselves an immortal nature now, irrespective of Jesus and the resurrection, through which it is attainable. Acts xvii. 18, 18, 32; John vi. 39, 40. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 22, 23. Our life is hid with Christ in God, and not in ourselves. Hence Christ is our life. Col. iii. 3, 4. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life." John xi. 25. He also gave utterance to the following words: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." John xiv. 6. Eternal life is obtainable through Jesus Christ, our Lord, and all who secure it escape the second death. The punishment for sin is death, (Ezek. xviii. 4, 20; Rom. vi. 23; James i. 13, 15; v. 20; Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6; xxi. 8,) which will be everlasting punishment. Matt. xxv. 46; 2 Thess. i. 5, 10. The result will be everlasting, not the process. We read of eternal judgement, Heb. vi 2, eternal redemption, Heb. ix. 12, and eternal salvation, Heb. v. 9, but do not conclude that God will be eternally judging, redeeming, and saving us, and that we will, consequently, never be fully judged, redeemed or saved. It is not the process but the result that is eternal. So with the punishment of the wicked; it is not the process, but the result that will be endless or eternal. Hence the finally impenitent will never possess eternal life, but will utterly perish in their own corruption. Mark x. 29, 30; 2 Pet. ii. 9, 12. The Bible doctrine of future punishment is an unanswerable argument in favor of conditional immortality. Eternal life is a conditional blessing, as clearly evinced by the following Scriptural testimony. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, (Num. xxi. 5, 9) even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. John iii. 14, 16. "And this is the will of Him that sent me, that everyone which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 9, 12. What glorious possibilities for the future! How my heart is stirred within me to know that God has promised eternal life, (1 John ii. 25) and that what he hath promised He is able also to perform. Num. xxiii. 19; Rom. iv. 21. That I myself, and not some material ghost, may live in the future a deathless being, like Christ, my risen Lord. Luke xx. 35, 36; 1 Cor. xv. 47, 57; Phil. iii. 20, 21; 1 John iii. 2; Rom. vi. 9; Rev. i. 18. And the joys of this endless life no one can portray. It will be a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 17; Rom. viii. 18. To realize the joys of an endless life (Heb. vii. 17) we must actually inherit it. Mark x. 17. In the ages to come (Eph. ii. 7) it will be said: "The tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them." Rev. xxi. 1, 5. And the psalmist David in rapture exclaims: "Thou wilt shew me the path of life; in Thy presence is fullness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures forever more." Psa. xvi 11. The joy cannot be increased, the pleasures are endless. In view of such exceeding great and precious promises, (2 Pet. i. 4) let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith. Heb. xii. 1, 2. Friends, arise and go forth to the battle between truth and error. Panoplied with heaven's armor (Eph. vi. 10, 18) you can war a good warfare; holding faith and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck. 2 Cor. x. 3, 5; 1 Tim. i. 18, 19. Let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Phil. iii. 8, 14. "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called." 1 Tim. vi. 12, 19. Though now we are mortal and corruptible, (Job iv. 17; Rom. i. 23) if we seek for glory and honor and immortality, God will render eternal life. Rom. ii. 6, 7. "For he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." We shall reap if we faint not. Gal. vi. 7, 9. Be not deceived kind reader, should you cherish the popular notion that you possess an immortal nature now, thereby verifying the words of the serpent, "Ye shall not surely die," which contradicts God's blessed Word. Gen. ii. 17; iii. 4. That fatal lie, uttered by the father of lies, (John viii. 44) has I fear, deceived not only Eve, but a vast number of descendants, even down to the present time. Those that are unworthy of everlasting life will not obtain it. Acts xiii. 46; Luke xx. 35, 36. Eternal life belongs not to the present age of sin and death, but will be enjoyed in the world to come, which will be a sinless and deathless world! Luke xviii. 28, 30; Isa. ix. 21; Rev. xxi. 1, 4. The saints who have been seeking for immortality will eventually (at the resurrection) put it on, as they come forth from the dust of the earth, crowned with the habiliments of immortality, no more to die. Rom. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 51, 55; Dan. xii. 2; Matt. xxv. 46; John v. 28, 29. Let us strive to inherit everlasting life. Matt. xix. 27, 29. The complaint of Christ against perishing man is, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." John v. 39, 40. Let us acknowledge our complete mortality, and humbly confess our dependence in Christ for the life that now is, which is soon to pass away, and also for that which is to come, which will continue through the ceaseless cycles of a blissful eternity. 1 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

"All that I am, e'en here on earth,
All that I hope to be,
When Jesus comes and glory dawns,
I owe it, Lord, to Thee."

Blessed hope! Let us then, with such a hope to cheer us, keep our banner unfurled to a world of dying men and women, with the inscription: Seek for glory and honor and immortality. Seek and ye shall find. Lay hold on eternal life. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live." Rom. ii. 7; Matt. vii. 7; 1 Tim; vi. 12; 1 John v. 12; Deut. xxx. 19; Ezek. xviii. 20, 23, 32. A pilgrim in hope of eternal life Titus i. 2.

Lord Beaconsfield and Prophecy.

Lord Beaconsfield's political career has been somewhat singular, and, in several respects, quite remarkable. His early writings were almost exact prophecies of his future career.

In a late letter from a friend in the north of England, the writer says: "There is some talk about a prophecy being fulfilled during the late congress. You will find it in Zechariah viii. 23."

A day or two after this letter was received I wrote to the Rev. W. H. Poole, of Toronto, recording the above statement, at the same time expressing my doubts about the application of this prophecy to Beaconsfield. In reply, Mr. Poole writes:

"When I saw France, Germany, Italy, Austria and Turkey, each send two plenipotentiaries to the grand council, I wrote to friends in England that if it would be possible to have that man, a Jew, sway over to his side, and his terms, the whole ten, that if he did, I would say Zechariah viii. 23, is fulfilled. To me it seems very plain that a kind of Divine power, unseen, must have controlled and directed the Jew, and the ten who followed him as one follows another by holding on to his skirts."

"You must not," says Mr. Poole, "include Russia, because seven powers met to decide a grand question between two of the seven; for really the question was, who shall have the 'gates,' (the Dardanelles and Constantinople,) and Asia Minor. It was really between England and Russia, and twice five plenipotentiaries, or the ten, said, 'we go with the Jew.' Of course Turkey and Russia were the two combatants in sight of the world, but in the eyes of prophesy and Providence it was England and Russia."

Another letter is just received from J. G. Olmstead, L. L. D., Archeologist of Fort Edward, N. Y., containing an additional item that may interest some of your readers. It is this:

"A friend, who has the means of knowing, wrote me a few days ago, that Lord Beaconsfield, who is a Jew, has for thirty years believed that the British, or Anglo-Saxon race, is descended from the 'Lost ten tribes of Israel.'"

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I would like to talk a little with you as regards the truth in this place. There is no church here of the Abrahamic faith. There are a number of Adventists, however, who would feel more interested if we had preaching here. There is one sister here with whom I have conversed, who is very anxious to have some good brother come this way and try and stay long enough to organize a church. If this much could be done there is no doubt there would be a good attendance. The greatest difficulty is the lack of money. All plead poverty. But I do think if there was a start made one and all would become interested enough to make an effort toward paying something for the support of whoever would come.

The name of the sister to whom I have referred is Pratt. "Oh," said she, "I have walked the city over and over until I have been sick, urging people to make an effort to have preaching here. I know my husband and son would have obeyed the gospel if we had meetings; they have lost their interest now, but I know they would take hold again if we could have preaching."

Sister Pratt is very poor, with a large family of children. She is also in poor health, but I know she will make every effort and sacrifice in her power to accomplish the great and glorious end. I have loaned her THE RESTITUTION, and I think she will soon send for a six months' subscription. I will send one dollar towards my subscription, and will send the other dollar when my rent money is due. I will do all I can for the support of the gospel.

If you can find a place for these few lines in your paper, it may reach the eye of some preaching brother situated somewhere near Erie, Pa., and perhaps we can arrange for such an one to give us a call.

General Sherman's One Great Trouble.

WASHINGTON, August 14, 1878.

General Sherman has not gone out into New Mexico with the border troubles in his mind, but has sought novelty, and the excitement of traveling as a distraction. Within the last six months General Sherman has grown old very fast. The attempt to reduce the army wore upon him more than one would suppose it would, but the crushing weight was the departure of his favorite son for a European monastery. Most people do not know that the General is as much a foe to Catholicism as his wife is a friend, and the reason that he lives apart from his family—he in Washington and they in St. Louis—is that he will not tolerate the presence of a priest under the same roof with him.

Mrs. Sherman is the most ardent and active lady worker that the Pope has in America; she stands high in the counsels of the church, both at home and abroad; and her name is as familiar in Rome as the name of St. Agatha, although she was never there in her life. She is the trustee in this country of "Peter's pence"—the offerings of devout Catholics to the Pope's private treasury—and shortly before he died, on the occasion of the anniversary of his Pontificate, the late Pius IX. sent her a rosary of solid gold, with a fragment of "the true cross," set in the crucifix as a gem. Her house in St. Louis is the home and headquarters of all the migratory priests in America. She is admitted to all the confidences of the church, and Bishops and Archbishops go to her for advice.

On the contrary, General Sherman hates a priest with a profound hatred; he despises their methods, and curses their class as the destroyers of his home; but Mrs. Sherman was a Catholic before he married her—the Ewings are all Catholics—and, while his married life has always been a happy one, he has never been able to abide with a priest, and Mrs. Sherman has never been able to abide without one.

Thomas Ewing Sherman, the oldest son, was intended by the general for the bar, and he was educated at Georgetown College, a Catholic institution, chosen by Mrs. Sherman, and afterward at the Yale Law School, an institution chosen by his father. After he graduated at Yale, he went to his mother's house at St. Louis, and entered the law office of the Hon. Samuel Reber. The second son General Sherman wants to make a soldier of, and the boy, now at the age of fourteen years, is well read in the whole library of military history, and can describe in detail all the military operations of the war. There are but two sons, and Mrs. Sherman had fixed her mother's heart on having one of them for the church. To any suggestion of this he would not listen, and she knew him well enough to realize that an argument on the subject would do no good. But while the eldest son has had his eyes on his law-books, his mother has been inspiring in him an ambition to distinguish himself in the priesthood, and not until his conviction was formed, and his plans decided upon, did his father have the slightest suspicion of a change of intentions. When the decision was announced to him, General Sherman is said to have groaned with sorrow, and he has not since seen his wife or son.

Mount Sinai.

President Durbin, writes to an exchange as follows:

I have stood upon the Alps in the middle of June, and looked abroad upon their snowy empire; I have stood upon the Alpines, and looked abroad upon the plains of beautiful, eventful Italy; I have stood upon the Albanian mount, and beheld the scene of the Æniad from the Circean promontory, over the Campagna to the Eternal City and the mountains of Trivoli; I have sat upon the pyramids of Egypt, and cast my eyes over the sacred city of Heliopolis, the land of Goshen, the fields of Jewish bondage, and the ancient Memphis where Moses and Aaron, on the part of God and his people contended with Pharaoh and his servants, the death of whose first-born of man and beast in one night filled the land with wailing; but I have never set my foot on any spot from whence was seen so much stern, gloomy grandeur, heightened by the silence and solitude that reigns around but infinitely more heightened by the awful and sacred associations of the first revelation in form from God to man. I feel oppressed with the spirit that breathes around and seems to inhabit this holy place. I shall never sit down on the summit of Sinai again and look upon the silent and empty plains at its feet; but I shall go down a better man, and aim so to live as to escape the thunders which once reverberated through these mountains, but have long since given way to the gospel of peace.

POETRY.

Oh, Lead Me Gently, Lord.

L. M. BURGESS.

Oh, lead me gently, Lord!
I am so weak;
Fain would I follow thee;
Thy ways I seek.
Yet am I fearful I
May faint or fail.
"Oh, lead me gently, Lord!"
My constant wail.

Let not great sorrows tempt
Me to rebel,
Nor worldly pleasures heaped
Lead me to dwell
In ease, careless of thee—
I am thine own;
Oh, lead me gently, Lord,
Close to thy throne!

Oh, lead me gently, Lord,
Lest I should stray;
Lest I should thee forget,
Forget thy way.
Lest I forsake thy paths
Whose name is peace;
Oh, lead me gently, Lord,
And never cease.

Till thou hast bidden me
Lie down and rest
In quiet, dreamless sleep,
In earth's calm breast.
To lie and softly sleep
Till thou shalt call;
And gently waken me,
No more to fall.

Oh, lead me gently, Lord,
To love thee more,
And into heavenly air
Diviner to soar—
To soar and sing my songs
Of praise to thee,—
Oh, lead me gently, Lord,
Till safe I be.

SELECTIONS.

Industry and Generosity.

There is a beautiful harmony between the precepts of the Bible and the dictates and sentiments of intelligent and thoughtful humanity. "Whatsoever things are true, venerable, just, pure, lovely, and of good report," are enjoined in that Holy Book. Conspicuous among these stands

INDUSTRY,

Industry in providing for the supply of one's own wants. Self-support is recommended throughout its pages. The following quotation from the book of proverbs is a very good sample: "Drink waters out of thine own cistern, and running waters of thine own well." Prov. v. 15.

"This proverb," says Dr. Kitto, "is very much elucidated by the fact that even at the present day every respectable house in Jerusalem has a reservoir or cistern sunk in the courtyard, and this, during the later spring rains, is filled up with water, which serves over the long dry summer, and then is again filled by the early autumn rains. This is in fact the main dependence of the inhabitants of a region where springs of water are few, and where nearly all the rivers dry up very early in the summer. Therefore a man who has not his own cistern must depend on the cistern of others, and must be constantly asking what is really a great favor from them, and an inconvenience to them, while the supply from this source is likely to be cut short as soon as the owner of the cistern suspects that the water is likely to run short, or that the season of drought threatens to be of long duration."

Viewed in this light, the proverb—"Drink waters out of thine own cistern, running waters out of thine own well," very aptly enforces the duty of providing for our own wants by personal industry.

The book of Proverbs abounds with injunctions to personal industry, and warnings against slothfulness or dependence upon others; and amongst the apostolic injunctions we readily remember this—"Diligent in business; fervent in spirit, serving the Lord;" "Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good." Eph. iv. 28. See also 1 Thess. ii. 7-12—"If any man provide not for his own, especially for those of his own household, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Again—"Owe no man anything."

Do not these precepts commend themselves to our better judgment? Is there not something noble in supplying our need out of our own resources, and something despicable in the opposite?

As a general rule, it is well to follow the maxim—"Neither beg, borrow nor steal." Soliciting favors always places one under obligations, and therefore in an inferior position. So it is also with borrowing. "The borrower," says Solomon, "is servant to the lender," Prov. xxii, 7. Borrowing sometimes borders on dishonesty, e. g., when the borrower is able to purchase the article than the lender. The practice, however, is oftener the result of inconsiderateness and a want of proper self-respect.

Maxims are but general rules, and the proverbs and advice of Scripture always take for granted that the reader has common sense. This remark applies to what I have advanced, and to what follows. Never ask another to do for you what you are able to do for yourself, even at the cost of considerable inconvenience. "Drink water out of thine own cistern."

All this, however, is only one side of proper conduct. In spite of the most diligent industry and careful frugality, we often find ourselves in circumstances where we cannot help ourselves. The water of our cistern is exhausted, and we have no means in our power to refill it. Human life is full of vicissitudes. Causes beyond our control render us helpless and poor. In such circumstances the iteration of the foregoing principles in our ears would be tantalizing and cruel.

The wisdom of God is manifest in this, that alongside of the injunctions to industry and frugality, we find those enjoining

GENEROSITY.

Hence following the proverb, "Drink water out of thine own cistern, and running waters out of thine own well," we have this—"Let thy fountains be dispersed abroad—rivers of waters in the street."

Having filled your own cistern so as to be beyond the necessity of begging or borrowing from other people, be not chary in dispensing its treasures to those less favored than yourself. Give, and that bountifully.

The proverbs of Solomon are not like those of Benjamin Franklin, all on the side of getting, gathering and keeping; but, eschewing true wisdom, they balance each other. Hence generosity is frequently recommended in these wise sayings. For instance, "He that hath friends should show himself friendly." "He that hath a friendly eye shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor." "He that giveth to the poor shall not lack."

In the law of the Lord, which is perfect, generosity to the poor and needy was also inculcated. How beautifully so in these words: "If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth. Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, the seventh year, the year of release, is at hand, and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought, and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin unto thee. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him; because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all thou puttest thine hand unto. For the poor shall never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee, saying, thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in the land." Deut. xv. 7, 11.

Our blessed Lord, who came to fulfil the law, instructed his disciples in the same generous doctrine. "Give to him that asketh of thee; and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

His apostle also adds to the counsel of industry already quoted: "Let him stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good." This good reason, "that he may have to give to him that needeth."

Seeing we know these things, let us put them in practice, by diligently providing for our own wants and for our own household, and generously distributing of our stores to to the poor and needy ones. Thus shall we obtain the blessing of the Lord that maketh rich, and the blessing of the poor that maketh glad the heart. W. LAING.

Foreign Views of the Treaty of Berlin.

La Patrie—Anti-Republican Paper—Paris, July 12: Open your map of Europe, and cast your eye on the magnificent sea lying between Europe, Asia, and Africa; it is the Mediterranean. Its entrance is guarded by a fortress—Gibraltar; English flag, English guns. Further on, towards the middle, where the sea becomes narrower, there is in the midst of the waves a citadel—Malta. It too bears English guns, and over it floats the British flag. At the eastern extremity lies another island, which commands the vast basin surrounded by Asia Minor, Turkey in Asia, and the mouths of the Nile with the Suez Canal. It is Cyprus. By virtue of the Convention of the 4th of June, this advanced sentinel is to be occupied by English troops and has already hoisted the English flag. While these things were being done, our government and the Parisians were indulging in delirious rejoicings, which they called "national!" Patriotic shame forbids us to dwell upon it. If we had had real diplomatists, this is what would have happened: When the Anglo-Turkish treaty was announced to the Congress, the French Plenipotentiaries would have replied: "To-morrow a French squadron will occupy Tunis, which is only a continuation of our Algerian possessions. We leave it to Italy to take care of Tripoli." If this haughty and equitable reply had been made, the Congress would have assented, the prestige of France would have been raised again, and the amour propre of our diplomatists would have taken a fine revenge. But this reply was not made, and our prestige and interests have received an irreparable blow.

Los Debates—Madrid, July 12: When the lion of St. James seemed to be expiring, when the influence of powerful Albion seemed at an end, and when the enemies of political liberty declared, without being able to hide their satisfaction, that England hardly figured in the great concert of civilized States, that nation suddenly gives a proof of valor and influence which adds to the interminable catalogue of her triumphs. * * * Mistress of Gibraltar by the errors of our fathers, never sufficiently felt by us, and possessor of Malta, England now advances her influence and her squadrons to Cyprus, thus making herself all but arbiter of the sea of civilization. What lesson ought this to teach us? That nations governed by representative institutions go on increasing in importance, despite the most ambitious with respect, and are looked up to for salvation by the victims of misfortune.

L'Italie—Rome, July 13: The final conclusions to be drawn from the treaty of Berlin are—that Russia has made a decided step in the realization of her programme; England has acquired the moral domination of Asiatic Turkey; the Ottoman Empire resumes the peaceful course of its decomposition; the small states have obtained their autonomy—the effect of which experience will teach them; Austria-Hungary has received a partial satisfaction, somewhat lessened, it would appear, by the resistance of Turkey; Germany has presided at the partition with the simple object of arriving at a result which would prevent war, and to pay her debt to Russia; Italy and France have looked on at this work of dismemberment and reorganization, and have vainly endeavored to protect the rights of civilization; England has been aided in throwing Greece overboard, although she had loudly proclaimed herself her protector; Roumania and Servia have been abandoned. Such is the work of the Congress; but it is not peace—it is a truce.

L'Italie, Rome, July 13: We now know what to think of the motives which inspired the attitude of England. The Cabinet of St. James cared as little for the interests of Europe as for those of the kingdom of Dahomay. Perish Europe, but let the British possessions in Asia be saved, and especially let England obtain good advantage from peace. Lord Beaconsfield has been the worthy interpreter of the sentiments of England. The telegraph informs us that the London papers approve the action of Lord Beaconsfield in signing the Treaty of the 4th of June. What are the stipulations of this treaty? Mr. Cross, the Home Secretary, has only given us incomplete details, but they can be taken as the following: The Island of Cyprus is absolutely given to England, and the Sultan has ceded his rights of sovereignty over this island to Queen Victoria, who has accepted them. In exchange for this England undertakes to defend Turkey against future aggressions, but should Russia return to Turkey the conquered territory in Asia the Convention of the 4th of June is to be annulled, and England will abandon the Island of Cyprus. It might as well be said at once that England will forever retain the domination of the island, for it is most probable that Russia is disposed to extend her domination, and it is almost impossible that she should be disposed to give up her conquered territory. In this step of the English Government the Italian Press sees a return to the old policy of England in the Mediterranean, which it was thought was abandoned by the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece. But, whatever may be the judgment of the Western Powers, that will not change the facts.

National Zeitung—National Liberal organ—Berlin, July 14: The Congress of Berlin has completed its work, preserved peace for Europe and sealed the fate of Turkey. As a ruling people, the Osmans have disappeared from the stage of the world. The treaty which the Porte concluded with England on the 4th of June will be more fatal for them than the Treaty of San Stefano. * * * The anger of the French and Italians at England's selfishness and boldness will avail nothing. The fact remains to the glory of Lord Beaconsfield that, without drawing the sword, he forced the Russians to give up their most important claims in Europe, and, while leaving them an unfruitful and thinly populated strip of territory and a harbor, procured for his own country the hegemony in Asia Minor, and gave her arms and resources for the inevitable struggle of the future. But none can deny that it was the blood and exertions of Russia that have made millions of oppressed Rajahs citizens of their country; for the immeasurable advance which the civilization of Europe has made, for the solution of the Eastern problem which hung like a black cloud over Europe, the world is indebted to Russian bravery; and it has to thank above all Russian statesmanlike wisdom and resignation in a serious moment for the maintenance of the peace of Europe.

Neue Freie Presse—Vienna, July 14: The Treaty of Berlin forms a remarkable turning-point in the history of Europe. Heretofore it has been sought in all treaties, even when moral right was most rudely infringed by them, to spare the principles of international law. The older diplomatic school was Conservative, and did not readily depart from the usual paths. The diplomatists of the present day are out-and-out revolutionists, however much they may object to the designation. They recognize neither traditions nor general rights; they follow the inspiration of the moment and their own practical advantage, or what they regard as such. Numerous as are the Congresses which have been held in the present century, at none of them has the policy of force displayed itself so openly and without cloak. * * * It has been proved that the Congress was unable to disentangle the Eastern knot, and that the clever and daring hand of one unscrupulous statesman could do a great deal to relieve Europe from chronic disease. Lord Beaconsfield knew clearly what was needed. Whilst the Congress dabbled in half-way measures, whilst some diplomatists talked much, and others eat much and drank much, Lord Beaconsfield has effected a deed which has somewhat of a Russian flavor, but which has yet outdone all the acts of the Congress.

Convulsions of Nature.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

August 9th and 10th were terrible days all over New England, Northern New York and Ontario. The period was distinguished for unprecedent rain falls, the water pouring out of the skies in torrents, with rain and electrical discharges. The rains were actually tropical in their excess of fury, and the fires of heaven played alarmingly day and night. The thunders roared, crashed, and pierced with terrific sound. Hail such as is seldom seen in the above region fell rattling on roofs and fields. For a space of 600 miles the elements held furious carnival. In many towns the sky became black and it was dark as midnight in the dwellings. Chariots of ruin seemed rolling abroad. In but two Boston dailies I count up as follows: Deaths by lightning, four; persons who were partially injured by the fluid and either shocked or made unconscious but recovered, fifty; dwellings, buildings, shops, churches, and barns struck and consumed, fifty; houses struck and injured, twenty-five; other things struck, twenty. This does not include any cases in Ontario. In addition to these casualties, the city of Washington, D. C. was visited by a terrible tornado. Warwick, in Mass., also experienced one, and Wallingford, Ct., was swept with the besom of destruction; over fifty dwellings being torn to atoms, thirty others partially demolished, and fifty barns destroyed. The lives lost reached thirty; twenty-seven of these were buried in one day, and the property loss is $250,000. The force of the wind was frightful. Whole rafters and clap-boards were carried to Haddam, twelve miles away, and papers were picked up at Peacedale, R. I., sixty-five miles away! Into all the region where descended the fury of the storm, was carried terror. Men never saw more vivid and dazzling lightning. No such tornado ever before was witnessed in Connecticut, and the one at Washington was "one of the most terrific ever seen there." At Cambridge, Mass., hail fell two and three inches in length, and an inch square. Many were the size of hen's eggs, and one piece of ice weighed four ounces. Balls of fire fell near men, and were seen to roll through dwellings.

Such was the ruin of two days only. Memorable days indeed to thousands. God is right behind the storms. He rules. His indignation flashes upon an evil world, and in the thunder he utters his warnings. The season is a marked one, and strikingly phenomenal. The pestilence has struck the South, and a hundred cities are in dread. Its ravages are sudden and malignant to a degree never before known. The worst is to come. Death rides on the breeze and thousands will fall before his sickle. I expect storms will rage, pestilence devour, and ruin make havoc with life and property till Jesus comes. And these evils will culminate and intensify, as the world approaches the catastrophic focus of 1880–1885. There is no safety for any one, anywhere, save in Jesus Christ. Let us hide in him as our eternal refuge. Impenitent reader, fly, O, fly to Christ to-day, yea, now.

Egypt.

Not the least significant link in the chain of British diplomacy is seen in the virtual assumption of Egypt by England. It is true that there has been no public treaty, but it is not difficult to divine that some of those secret clauses of which we have heard so much have had reference to this matter. Virtually the Khedive is dethroned, because without his lavish and scandalous display of money the Khedive must of necessity be nowhere. Nominally Nubar, Pache, is President of the Council, but the true drift of affairs is seen in the appointment of Mr. Rivers Wilson to the post of Minister of Finance. This gentleman has been sent out from the English National Debt Department, and the significance of his appointment may be seen upon the surface. Here is another manifestation of that British supremacy which it is Lord Beaconsfield's aim to establish around the world.

The Scriptural commentator, Cumming, wrote twenty years ago that the Turkish of the Old Testament prophets meant England. He said that not earlier than 1874 she would at some time "lend ships, wealth, influence and all territorial power to carry back the sons of Zion and reinstate them in the midst of Jerusalem." His followers say that Berlin, Disraeli and Cyprus foreshadow these events.

The Egyptian Government has resolved to establish a weekly line of steamers between Alexandria and the island of Cyprus.

Regular steam communication has been established between Liverpool and Cyprus, the vessels sailing fortnightly. Two ships have already sailed for Larnaca, carrying miscellaneous cargoes, such as hardware, building materials, and manufactured goods.

DIED.

ZACHARY—died August 22, of congestion of the stomach and brain, Maud, daughter of E. C. and L. M. Zachary, aged one year and about three months.

At the grave brother Rose read 1 Cor. xv., and the hymn—"We shall sleep, but not forever," was sung. What a change a day can make. O Lord how long shall death reign.

POETRY.

[Relshaw.]

"Behold, He Cometh!"

Lo! we lift our heads with gladness, and cheer our hearts with song,
For the triumph and the glory shall dawn on us ere long.
In faith we cry, Come quickly, Lord, and claim us for thine own,
And where on earth thy cross did stand, oh! come and fix thy throne.

And though the strife grows keener still, and foes increase in strength,
Lo! the day of our redemption is drawing nigh at length,
With loving expectation each waiting heart is stirred,
And the joyful cry, "He cometh!" shall soon by all be heard.

Awake, awake! the night is spent, the day is dawning fast.
For the clouds on the horizon are breaking up at last.
Now the night winds, sad and mournful, have slowly died away,
And our joyous songs are greeting the coming of the day.

Awake, awake! lift up your heads, redemption draweth nigh!
Lo! the tokens of the coming day are spreading to the sky.
The sun of righteousness shall rise with healing in its wings;
And unto every watching heart be sweet deliverance brings.

Awake, awake! the promises are now to be fulfilled,
And in hope's glad fruition shall each rising doubt be stilled.
Now shall our dim eyes brighten so long clouded by our tears,
For he who maketh all things new, our Lord and Christ, appears.

A Visit with a Friend.

BY "PHILOS."

I here send you a sketch of a visit I had with a friend some time ago. Perhaps it may be of interest to the readers of our paper.

Some time in April last I met a cousin of mine on the street in the town of ——, and had a short interview with him. On parting with him he gave me an invitation to pay them a visit, which I consented to do, but told him that when I came I wanted a big argument with him. He said he was ever ready for argument.

After some time had elapsed I sent him a note containing several important questions on which I requested him to post himself till I should come. So when the time of my anticipated visit had come I went to redeem my pledge. On arriving at my friend's house I found them all at home and well, and enjoyed my visit very well until Sunday morning, when a Mr. F. came there, who soon commenced railing out against the Bible, and stigmatized Jesus as being a bastard child. But my friend's wife, being ashamed of him, sharply reproved him, telling him she did not want to hear any such language in her house; and I myself felt like taking the Savior's advice—"Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn upon and rend you." Matt. vii 6. And so I soon left them to have their enjoyments to themselves.

But to return: On Saturday evening, after my friend had done up his chores, I made several unsuccessful attempts at getting up some Scriptural conversation, which he avoided as long as he could, consistently, but I finally pressed the matter so hard that I got him started.

I first tried to draw him out on the nature of man, but failed on that subject. I then asked him whether the gospel was ever preached to Abraham. After hesitating a little he said he thought it was. I then asked him what the gospel preached to Abraham consisted in. He could not tell but wished me to.

Before complying with his request I asked him the meaning of the word gospel. His answer was, "good news." "Good news of what?" I added. He said it was good news that a Savior was born, forgetting, however, that the Savior was not then born yet. So I told him that this was truly good news to the shepherds who were keeping watch over their flocks at the time the Savior was born; but Paul says the gospel preached to Abraham was that in him (Abraham) and in his seed (Christ) should all the nations of the earth be blessed. Gal. iii. 8–16.

I then showed him that according to the prediction of the angel Gabriel to Mary, even before the birth or conception of Jesus, Christ must sit on David's throne, establish his kingdom, and reign over the house of Jacob forever. Luke i. 31–33. And that according to many other predictions of the Scriptures his kingdom would become universal and extend over the whole earth, (Dan. ii. 34, 35, 44, 45,) when peace and good will shall abound among men; nation shall no more lift up sword against nation, and men learn war no longer. Isa. ii. 1–4; Micah iv. 1–7; Amos ix. 11, 12; Acts xv. 16, 17. Showing him that as Abraham had the promise of being heir of the world, and Christ being the seed of Abraham is heir to the same inheritance, (Rom. iv. 13,) and all who are Christ's are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29. Thus showing him that it was through Christ and the saints as joint heirs with him, ruling the world in righteousness that all the nations of the earth should be blessed in Abraham and his seed.

Hence the gospel preached to Abraham, and which, on the condition of our faith in and obedience thereto will give us an inheritance in the kingdom of God's dear Son, was good news concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. "When they (the Samaritans) believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12.

Thus I showed my friend that the practice of the apostles was to preach the gospel of the kingdom wherever they went, and when their hearers believed this gospel they were baptized without delay, referring him at the same time to the commission of Jesus to his apostles, as given by Mark, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel (not simply a gospel, but the gospel, the same he himself had preached,) to every creature; he that believeth (believeth what? this gospel) and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16.

Query: What was the gospel Jesus preached?

Answer: "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Matt. iv. 23.

"And Jesus went about all their cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Matt. ix. 5.

"Now, after John was put into prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." Mark i. 14.

"And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent." Luke iv. 43.

"And it came to pass that he went throughout all their cities and villages preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." Luke viii. 1.

"Then he called his disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." Luke ix. 1, 2.

"Jesus said unto them, Let the dead bury their dead, but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Luke ix. 60.

Thus I showed my friend that the gospel Jesus preached was the gospel of the kingdom of God; and that it was this same gospel he sent his disciples to preach.

And next, by a reference to Acts ii., I showed him that the apostles in starting out under their last commission from the Savior, preached the same gospel, and demanded of their hearers a manifestation of their faith in the same, by a reformation of life, and forthwith being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their past sins.

"Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him (David) that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne.... Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this they were pierced in their hearts, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts ii. 30, 36–38.

Here my friend began to demur, saying he believed baptism was an ordinance and a Christian duty, and that all true Christians ought to be baptized. This assertion, however, I denied, and challenged him to show one Bible instance where a Christian was baptized, or commanded, or even recommended to be. He made no attempt at this, except a reference to the case of Cornelius. He thought Cornelius must certainly have been a good man, even before he was commanded to be baptized, having already received the Holy Ghost.

This, of course, I admitted, showing him, by reading the narrative, that notwithstanding he was a good, just and devout man, yet he was not a Christian until he was adopted into the fellowship of the saints by baptism into Christ, in obedience to the gospel of the kingdom; thus showing my friend that the Holy Spirit was not given Cornelius to make him a good man or a Christian, but that the object was to convince Peter and his Jewish brethren who accompanied him thither that the Gentiles were also included in God's plan of salvation, as Peter afterward acknowledged. Acts xi. 4–8.

But my friend still persisted in his notion that the remission of sins could not be connected with baptism, from the fact, as he alleged, that Simon the sorcerer had been baptized, and was not pardoned—had not experienced a change of heart, and was still in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity.

To all of which I replied as follows:

1. Philip went to Samaria and preached Jesus unto the Samaritans; and in doing that he preached the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, which constituted the gospel Jesus preached, and concerning which he said, "He that believeth (it) and is baptized shall be saved."

2. Luke says Simon did believe and was baptized.

3. Just so sure as Jesus and Luke told the truth, Simon was saved from his past sins. Notwithstanding, he afterwards sinned in thinking God's special gifts could be bought with money, offering money to Peter that he might have the power of conferring the Holy Spirit on whomsoever he might lay his hands.

Now let us look at the true phase of this matter a moment. Peter, in correcting Simon, said: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter; for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. Repent, therefore, of this thy wickedness, and pray God if perhaps the thought (not thoughts nor sins) of thine heart may be forgiven thee; for I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness and in the bond (not bonds) of iniquity."

Thus we see that it was but a single sinful thought for which Peter admonished him to ask forgiveness.

But here my friend thought he was getting me into close quarters, and accordingly rather sneeringly asked: "Ought not Peter to have admonished Simon to be baptized again if the remission is connected with baptism?" And so according to our views he thought that every time a Christian did wrong he should be baptized in order to obtain pardon.

I told my friend that if I held baptism to be a Christian duty, as he did, his conclusion would be consistent, showing him he greatly erred, not knowing the distinction between saint and sinner; that according to the testimony I had already introduced, faith in the gospel of the kingdom, repentance toward God, and baptism, were inseparably connected in order to become a child of God spiritually; and being a child of God, the saint can now approach God, his Father, as the little child which has transgressed its earthly parent's laws, in true penitence acknowledging and confessing its sins, and asking pardon in the name of Jesus, according to the instruction given by John the beloved: "If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 Jno. i 9.

My friend now, in great surprise, exclaimed: "Then you have two ways for sinners to come to God and obtain forgiveness of sins! It appears that you would have the unconverted sinner come to God by faith, repentance, and baptism, while the Christian sinner can come to him by repentance and confession in prayer, and obtain pardon."

To this I responded: Your astonishment at this is the result of your ignorance of the Scriptures, and hence your inability to rightly divide the word of truth. And so I admonished him to take Paul's advice to Timothy, to "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed; rightly dividing the truth." 2 Tim. ii. 15. And for the want of this one most important thing the whole fraternity with which he stands identified fail to see the beauty and harmony of the Scriptures when rightly applied.

I next showed my friend that the uniform practice of the apostles was to receive individuals into their society by faith in the gospel of the kingdom of God, repenting of their sins, and being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of the same. This I did by comparing the apostles' practice with the commission given to them by the Savior, challenging him to show me one instance where they did otherwise. And I now venture the assertion right here, that any church inviting or receiving members into its fellowship on any other terms is not founded on apostolic principles.

I next inquired of my friend, if under the old dispensation every institution occupied its particular place, and had its particular office to fill, whether it was not so under the Christian dispensation also.

He assented to the affirmative.

Then I demanded of him to tell me what place baptism occupied in the Christian system; what office it fills, or what object it accomplishes. He hesitated awhile, but finally said: "I suppose you would make it the door into the church." But he never attempted to say what place or office he would assign to it; and so commenced quibbling about the meaning of some of the texts I had introduced. He said that if the remission of sins were connected with baptism it would involve human agency; therefore he could not endorse the doctrine.

I then showed him that while he professed to be Christian, his objection weighed just as much against himself as against me; for what could he know of the plan of salvation, or of a Savior, or even of the Eternal God, independent of human agency?

According to such reasoning there could be no other ground for him to occupy than that of an infidel or an atheist. Then, like a drowning man catching at a straw, he referred to 1 Peter iii. 21, saying that he believed baptism was the answer of a good conscience toward God, and not for the putting away of the filth of the flesh.

I told him I believed every word of this text, and that Peter did not contradict himself; but that baptism was intended for a much nobler purpose than to simply wash off the dirt or filth from the body, and that it even reached the conscience. Now, said I, how can you have a good or clear conscience toward God while refusing or neglecting to obey this institution, when your own conscience demands it of you? "For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." 1 Jno. iii. 20, 21.

Query: Can we have that confidence toward God while our own hearts or consciences condemn us for disobeying God's commandments?

Query 2: How can anyone occupying such a position reasonably claim the forgiveness or pardon of past sins?

I then gave my friend Luther's version of 1 Peter iii. 21, showing him that it is in baptism we enter into covenant relation with God.

"In the like figure, water in baptism does also now save us; not the putting off the filth of the flesh, but the covenant of a good conscience with God."

Wilson's translation is still plainer: "Not a putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the seeking of a good conscience toward God."

Here my friend put in another of his quibbles, as follows: I do not believe water can wash away the guilty stain of sin.

To this I replied that neither did we as a people, but we believe, with John, that the blood of Christ cleanseth us from our sins. 1 John i. 7.

But where and how do we get an application of that blood?

Answer: Christ shed his blood in his death; hence in his death we come in contact with his blood, and so are cleansed from all our past sins.

But when, where and how do we get into Christ's death?

Answer: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Therefore we are buried with by baptism into death." Rom. vi. 3, 4. So we see that it is by baptism we get into the death of Christ; and as his blood was shed in his death, so in his death we come in contact with his blood, and thus are cleansed from all our past sins.

Here my friend began to plead for retiring to rest, as it was getting late in the evening.

On Sunday morning, breakfast being over and chores done up, I again introduced the subject of the evening's conversation, by calling my friend's attention to the following proposition:

"God never bestows a blessing on any person, without a place where, a time when, and a means by which such blessing is bestowed.

I then showed my friend that in Jesus, and not out of him, was the place where the pardon of sin was obtained. "In whom (Christ Jesus, the Beloved) we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of his grace." Eph. i. 7.

"In whom (Christ) we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Col. i. 14.

Having now established this point, I proceeded to show him that it was by baptism, preceded by faith in the gospel, and repentance toward God, we come into Christ. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death?" Rom. vi. 3.

Again: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.... And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 27, 29.

Then my friend said he believed that if a person was truly converted it was not so very essential to be immediately baptized, for he thought the pardon of sin was experienced in conversion.

To this I replied that baptism being the last step, or consummating act in conversion, it was impossible for any one to be thoroughly converted without being baptized, referring him to Acts ii. 38; iii. 19; x. 34 48, as proof of my affirmation. The reader is also referred to the following testimonials as further proof: Acts viii. 12, 36–39; xvi. 15, 32; xviii. 8.

Here my friend began to complain that I took more than my equal share of the time, as he thought he was entitled to at least half the time. But what time he did occupy was simply spent in quibbling on the plain Scripture testimony I brought to bear upon the subject, while he never attempted to read one text of Scripture in support of his views, during the whole of our conversation.

So then I told him if he had anything more to say to go on. But just then, as he was about to reply to my last remark, Mr. F. and wife came up to the gate in front of the house, he having been especially invited not to fail to come there on that day, as I afterward learned from Mr. F.'s own daughter, I suppose for the express purpose of having him to triumph over me by burlesqueing and ridiculing the Bible.

So here our conversation ended, as my friend's infidel friend had to have all the attention paid to him. So I left my friends to enjoy themselves as best they could.

I would fain have staid and pursued the argument further, if circumstances had been more favorable. I should liked to show my friend the relative time when the sinner is pardoned, or made free from sin.

Rom. vi. 17, 18: But God be thanked that though ye were the servants of sin ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered to you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

Query: When were they made free from sin?

Answer: When they heartily obeyed a certain form of doctrine.

Query 2: What was that form of doctrine?

Answer: A death to sin, and a burial and resurrection with Christ in baptism.

Col. ii. 11–13: In whom (Christ) also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ; (How?) buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you . . . hath he quickened with him, having forgiven you all trespasses.

In conclusion let me ask, Why is it that our pretended Christian friends, notwithstanding their boasted pretentions of the Bible being their only rule of faith and practice, I ask, emphatically, why is it that they are so dreadfully afraid of the Bible?

But I must close, as my letter is already too lengthy. I subscribe myself your friend, in the hope of an inheritance with you in the soon-coming kingdom.

God is Never at a Loss to Accomplish His Purpose.

And a Highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness. The unclean shall not pass over it; for he (the Lord) shall be with them (margin). The wayfaring men, though fools, (simple) shall not err. Isa. xxxv. 8.

God has promised to set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, and assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. Isa. xi. 11, 12. He has also promised a highway (a thoroughfare) for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt. Verse 16. This highway will be prepared for the ransomed of the Lord, when they shall return and come to Zion. Isa. xxxv. 10. Even upon the land that is now desolate and barren, when it shall blossom abundantly, and the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it. Isa. xxxv. 2. This highway will be a way of holiness; for it will be established by the Holy One, and for a holy purpose. When the time of this highway (great road) is come, God will cause his people to pass over it in safety; then will he raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaks thereof; and will raise up his ruins and will build it as in the days of old. Amos ix. 11. And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof and shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them. Verse 16. The time is not far hence for the highway to be built and brought into use.

BREVITIES.

Fifty thousand eucalyptus trees are to be planted about the city of Mexico. These trees grow very rapidly, and in a few years will make a material modification in the rainfall about the Mexican capital.

An artesian well 3,250 feet deep has been bored in Pesth, Hungary. It is the deepest in the world, being nearly twice the depth of that in Paris. It sends up a jet of nearly boiling water forty-two feet high.

When Cyprus had been wrested from the Venetians by the Turks in 1571, the latter inaugurated their reign by slaughtering 20,000 of the inhabitants. The Turkish rule has proved the curse and ruin of the island, once so rich and flourishing.

Queen Elizabeth once claimed the sovereignty of Cyprus, contesting the Turkish usurpation—1570–3—probably on the ground of Richard Cœur de Lion's conquest. The arms of Cyprus are blazoned on her tomb, and her right to the title of Queen of Cyprus was recognized by the College of Heralds of her day.

The three Fox sisters, who originated the rapping phase of spiritualism twenty-nine years ago, are all alive. Margaret, the youngest, who claimed to be the wife of Dr. Kane, is giving exhibitions in England. Kate is living in France, having married a titled Frenchman. Leah is Mrs. Underhill and a resident of this city.

A Biblical curiosity in the English section of the Paris Exhibition which attracts crowds is the model of the Tabernacle as it rested during the wandering of the Israelites in the desert. The exterior and interior are constructed in strict accordance with the details given in the Old Testament.

The Pueblian Mejicano of Guadalajara says that over forty bolts of lightning fell upon that city during a recent storm. Three persons were instantly killed, one a student who was passing along a public street, and several others were injured. At the same time a deluge of rain fell. The inhabitants of the town were overwhelmed with terror.

There are 10,000 Israelites in San Francisco, and 10,000 more in the rest of California. They comprise all nationalities, with German Jews the most numerous. They control several important branches of business, a large part of the importing dry goods and fancy goods trade being in their hands, as well as large wholesale grocery houses. They have nearly a monopoly in boot and shoe manufacturing and the hide, leather, and wool trade. Many of them are very wealthy, and are liberal patrons of the fine arts and booksellers. Musical people say that they would never have had a first-class opera in San Francisco if it had not been for the patronage of the Hebrews of that city, and a leading theatrical manager says that he would have to "shut up shop" in these hard times were it not for the money he gets from them. They have five synagogues, one of which cost nearly $200,000, and three religious weeklies. In point of belief they range from the ultra orthodox to the ultra reformed and liberal. Their rabbis preach in English and German. They have representatives in all professions, in mining and agricultural enterprises, and in politics, and there is no part of the country in which they are on friendlier footing with their neighbors of other faiths.

The cattle in a large portion of Bengal are dying at the rate of hundreds a day, and the streams are completely choked with dead bodies. The decrease in the number and the deterioration in the quality of the agricultural cattle all over British India is one of the gravest features to be noted in connection with the general condition of the peasantry. In no respect have the various famines produced a more dangerous effect than in this direction. There is a reason to doubt whether either men or animals obtain a sufficient supply of food now even in ordinary times. The consequence is that both succumb with terrible facility to the slightest scarcity or to the mildest disease. Such a state of things tends to perpetuate itself. The quality of the cultivation falls off with the character of the bullocks employed in it. Deep ploughing becomes more and more exceptional, while the cost of replacing the dead animals by other beasts tend still further to the impoverishment of the people. In Madras and Bombay the destruction of cattle has been appalling, while in Burmah there has also been a plague. The general condition of the agricultural population throughout India is such as to occasion the gravest uneasiness. Continuous impoverishment bids fair to be followed by continuous famine. There is scarcity amounting almost to famine even at this moment in Madras, Bombay, the northwest provinces, and Bengal. Yet the only remedy proposed is increased taxation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates in a very large degree the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Impending Crisis.

When you see these things begin to come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.—Luke xxi. 28-31.

All history and human experience attest the truth and wisdom of the saying of Thomas A. Kemphis, "Man proposes but God disposes." The history and career of Nebuchadnezzar, of Cyrus, of Alexander, of Cæsar, and of Napoleon, and of the empires they founded, illustrate and confirm this observation. They concur in enforcing the solemn lessons of Holy Writ, that "the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations," [illegible] promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south; but God is the Judge. He putteth down one and setteth up another." This he does to carry out his own ulterior purposes.

The recent uprise of the Jews, suddenly, silently and simultaneously, throughout the world; the advancement of members of this ancient race to the highest honors and the most commanding positions in statesmanship, legislation, diplomacy, wealth and power, from the civil disabilities, the political proscription and the social ostracism of ages past, is certainly a phenomenon in history, and must be ranked among the most extraordinary events of the nineteenth century—events whose end is not yet.

At this moment it is Benjamin Disraeli, a Jew, who fills the first and most commanding position in the eyes of mankind, as Prime Minister of the first empire in the world—that of Victoria, Queen of England and Empress of India. In France, it is a Jew, Gambetta, who wields the widest influence in shaping the policy and destiny of that most active and aggressive of all the continental powers of Europe.

It is a Jewish house, the Rothschilds, that, with almost endless ramifications throughout the world, fixes the money values and holds the purse-strings of the nations of the earth. It is a Jew, General Todleben, whose fame dates back to the memorable siege of Sebastopol, and who stands at the head of the military engineers of the world, and as commander-in-chief of the armies of the almost boundless Russian Empire, holds in check the military movements, not of the Ottoman Empire alone, but in a great degree, of all Eastern Europe.

Again, it is a Jew, Sir Moses Montefiore, whose memorable services and sacrifices in successfully stimulating and organizing Jewish immigration and colonization in Palestine, have made his name illustrious, and who has expended his own vast fortune in this and similar works of benevolence in behalf of his scattered and persecuted people. Now, in the ninety-sixth year of his age, and recently on his sixth special mission to Jerusalem on the same errand and like his great namesake, the Jewish law-giver, it is said, "his eye is not dim nor his natural force abated." He is the intimate friend and associate of Benjamin Disraeli, and we cannot doubt, has warmly appreciated, if, indeed, he did not inspire the recent work of Jewish emancipation at Berlin. In Germany and in the Austrian dominions, these wonderful people are found in large numbers and are now filling positions of trust and honor heretofore unknown in Gentile [illegible] the historian, and Mendelssohn and Wagner the greatest of living composers in music, men of science, learned professors and scientists, doctors in law and philosophy, all members of the lately proscribed race, daily come to the front in the unusual conduct of Gentile affairs in the broad arena of mankind, extending to both hemispheres of our globe. Their wealth is enormous; so much so as to be proverbial. It is all portable, too, consisting of money, stocks, bills of exchange, capable of safe and easy transmission to all parts of the world on short notice. Their immense capital is disposed or invested in all the great money's centre of commerce and finance; in London, Paris, Amsterdam, Berlin, Vienna and St. Petersburg; in Canton and Calcutta and Bombay; in Melbourne and Jeddo; in New York and San Francisco; in Mexico, Rio Janeiro and Valparaiso.

This great money power enables them to command and control the money markets of the world. Who can doubt that they have a mission from the hands of God, which, insensibly to themselves, they are working out, in furtherance of his will?

As Daniel, though in captivity and exile in Babylon, was raised by the direct providence of God to be the prime minister of the first monarch of the ancient world, so we have in Disraeli—Lord Beaconsfield—also an exile from his Fatherland, and an alien in blood and race from the British people, by the same providential oversight, the able prime minister of the first monarch of the modern world; the Queen of England and Empress of India, (in which last character, she is also the modern Queen of Sheba, Sheba and Dedan being embraced as provinces and countries in the Indian Empire). Her prime minister, Disraeli, recently represented his sovereign in the congress of Berlin and, like his countryman, Daniel, seemed interested with the mission, of achieving, by the overthrow and destruction of their Moslem oppressions through the Gentile powers of the world, the rescue and redemption of his captive race from the cruel bondage of their enemies, and thus, in the end, effecting their restoration in great wealth and fame and prosperity to the land and home of their fathers—to Jerusalem, the golden, yet to be the "City of the Great King."

He must be blind, indeed, who does not read in these modern wonders the actual fulfillment of the promises made long ago to the ancient fathers, and plainly recorded in the Bible; that the house of Israel, after their long dispersion and exile among the nations of the earth, should be restored, in the wise providence of God, to their ancient heritage in the east. This is the key to the interpretation of the strange events in the east we are daily witnessing, and hence, only such events are permitted to occur, either in war or in diplomacy, as will influence and control this great result. Truly, God reigns.

The future is big with portentous developments which will affect the destiny of our race and our world, not for a time only, but forever.

Our Duty No. 5.

Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. 2 Cor. x. 5.

There is nothing more essential in all our duties than a habit of right thinking; in fact, this is the very root of a holy life. But, you say, we can not help thinking. True, but we are not to harbor them. If thoughts of evil things, be what they may, come, as they will, into our minds, we are to put in their place, thoughts of better things; in no other way will we bring our thoughts into captivity. Instead of thinking of impure or simple things, we are to think of those things that are good. "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise—think on these things." Phil. iv. 8. If we do these things, our thoughts will be brought into obedience to Christ.

Our hearts are required to be pure, but this can not be if our thoughts are evil, for from our hearts proceed our thoughts. "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." Psa. xxiv. 3, 4. Our Savior says that "a good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things, and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." Matt. xii. 35. In the preceding verse he says: "O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts." Mark vii. 21. "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Prov. xxiii. 7. How truly this corresponds with the Savior; if a man thinks evil, his heart is evil; if he thinks good, his heart is good. The same writer says: "The thought of foolishness is sin; and the scorner is an abomination to men." Chapter xxiv. 9.

Where our treasure is there will our hearts be; and where our hearts, there will our thoughts be found. The fact is, you will think of that for which you seek. If you seek worldly wealth, your thoughts are there, but if you are seeking first the kingdom, and are seeking the wealth of the world to the honor and glory of God, then your thoughts will be there. It matters not what it is about, our thoughts represent our hearts. If we seek the life to come, we must obey God, and if we obey him, we will purify our hearts; our hearts can not be pure and our thoughts evil. You cannot love your enemies if you continue to think you hate him or think to do as he hath done to you, and it is so as to any duty; our thoughts must conform to the commandments as well as our words. "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts." Isa. lv. 7. "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if, perhaps, the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." Acts viii. 22.

The testimony I have given is conclusive evidence that we are responsible for our thoughts—not the unbidden, but the ones that we retain—the ones we meditate upon, and the ones which are formed into a purpose: "For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts; adulteries, fornications, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness." What! Lord, do you mean to say that we commit murder in the heart? that we commit adultery, etc., there? Yes, I mean to say that "all these evil things come from within and defile the man." Mark vii. 23. "I say unto you that, whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Matt. v. 28. This is no exception; all other sins are committed in the heart first. You say this is a terribly strait way. Does not Jesus say, strait is the gate and narrow the way, and few there be that find it? If we forgive men from the heart; if our thoughts are right toward them; if, instead of allowing our thoughts to dwell on evil and foolish things, we think on those things that are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report, and virtue and praise, we will be justified before the Lord, though the opportunity to act should never occur. So, if we purpose in our hearts to commit a sin, even though the opportunity never should occur, we will be held guilty in the sight of God unless we repent.

Many thoughts are sins that do not form any purpose. For instance, we think evil concerning others though we may not intend to do them an injury, we think concerning evil things without forming any purpose; and we think many foolish things—they are all sins. Too much thought about the affairs of this life is a sin; for Jesus says, "Take no thought," or, as the Diaglott renders it, "Be not overcareful for the things of the morrow," or what you shall eat, drink, or wear. So every thought is a sin that occupies the mind to the hindrance of holiness.

Instead of our minds being occupied with foolishness,—what the world would term being jovial—and with the vain amusements which are only another phase of foolishness, evil, or overtaxed with the cares of this life, we should meditate on the word of God. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful; but his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

If our thoughts are all right, our speech, as a matter of course, will be, and we shall be able to bridle the tongue and perfection would follow. We are striving towards perfection; then let us lay the ax at the root of the tree and we shall come off conquerors.

Conference Report.

The annual conference for southwestern Missouri met at Shiloh, August 9th, pursuant to call. There was no representation from other Kansas or Arkansas, hence the meeting for the three districts fell to two ground, and I hope the brotherhood will bear with me while I indite a few thoughts that rush upon my mind bearing upon this subject. In Luke xvi. 8, our Savior seems to have contemplated the church in its Laodicean state, and endeavored to arouse those who were under his own immediate supervision to the danger of falling into that lethargy which would be the cause of their rejection, "or being spewed out." By comparing the actions of the children of light with those of the children of this age, (in their generation,) generation has succeeded generation for 1800 years, and the language of our Savior sounds with redoubled force, "The children of this world are wiser than the children of light" Yes, we say, if not in words, at least by actions; I am rich and increased with goods and have need of nothing. Rev. iii. 17. Each individual or body, of whatever size, is all-sufficient for every emergency. Not so with the children of this world.

We are just now passing through a political campaign, and each of the two parties, upon whichever side, acts as though the success of his party devolved upon his sacrificing time, money, ease, comfort, all, to accomplish what in four years or less will have to be repeated again. If the children of light were impressed with the same feelings relative to the cause that they advocate, this meeting would have been a success; and, instead of every individual, or little isolated body being left to itself to live or die according to circumstances, we might have brought them together, and so encouraged and supported them, as to have assured their spiritual growth. To my mind it is not strange that so many fall away or become cold. They are vagabonds, having no home, nothing to hold them together; and as we take on impressions easily, so these take on the impression of the world, and the last state of that man is worse than the first, and I opine that the responsibility rests, not upon one, but upon all. Are we doing our whole duty? Are we not responsible, to a certain degree, for the fate of those that go back to the weak and beggarly elements? Do we use the proper means to keep them in the strait and narrow way that leadeth unto life? Do we bear one another's burdens? Do we love one another with a true heart fervently? These are questions that each one should ask himself or herself, and let our actions be in accord with our decision, that we may stand before the Son of Man and not be ashamed at his coming. There are many more things I would like to say, but my report will be too long before I get through, so I will defer them till a future time.

Brother Stringer preached on Friday night to a good audience. Met in conference at 9 a. m., Saturday; prayer by J. Butt, and proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year. J. Butt was chosen president, Brother A. Robertson, secretary, and Brother Miles Winchester, treasurer; Brother J. E. Stringer was chosen evangelist. Amount raised to support evangelist, $71.00, to be expended this fall and winter. Preaching brethren present: Jonah Peirce, James Messick, J. E. Stringer, Stephen Oliver, and the writer. Preaching at 11 o'clock by Brother Peirce; dinner on the ground; conference after dinner. The brethren everywhere in the bounds of this conference requested to take THE RESTITUTION and use their efforts to extend its circulation. Preaching at 8 o'clock by Brother Messick; preaching at night by Brother Stringer.

Met on Sunday at 9 a. m. for social meeting: preaching at 11 o'clock by the writer; dinner on the ground; conference after dinner. The subject of holding weekly meetings was taken up, and it was decided to hold meetings at Shiloh on the second Sunday, King's Point on the first Sunday and Turnback on the third Sunday. Conference decided to hold the next quarterly meeting at Spring Hill, Polk county, Missouri. We then met around the Lord's table to partake of the emblems of the broken body of our absent Lord. There was a goodly number present, and all seemed to be impressed with the solemnity of the occasion, and we doubt not, but every heart yearned for that time when they would be permitted to eat it with their elder brother in the kingdom of God. For ourself, we felt that the time was not far distant, and every time we are admitted to the glorious privilege, we feel that we are drawn nearer to God and to Christ, and that they draw nearer to us.

Preaching at night by Brother Stringer, when two came forward and demanded baptism. We met on the banks of Stahls' Creek, at 9 o'clock on Monday morning to attend to the ordinance of baptism, when the two candidates were inducted into the saving name by the writer. We then repaired to the house for the purpose of attending to unfinished business. It was decided that all ministers belonging to this conference receive credentials, and that all members leaving this conference for some other, receive letters of recommendation. The conference then adjourned to meet on Friday before the second Sunday in November, at Spring Hill, Polk county, Missouri. Four others put in their membership, making six accessions in all. Most of the brethren went home on Monday, but Brother Oliver and myself decided to continue the meeting, which we did till the next Sunday, painfully yet lively interest all that time, and closing with a house crowded to suffocation and as many outside. Thus closed one among the best meetings we ever attended, and we pray God that he will give the increase as he sees fit.

JAMES BUTT.

Phelps, Mo.

"Eternal Fire."

On this phrase, Dr. Whitby remarks: "This fire may be called eternal, not that the bodies of the wicked shall be ever burning in it, and never be consumed by it, since this cannot be done without a constant miracle; but because it shall so entirely consume their bodies as that they shall never subsist again, but shall perish and be destroyed forever by it." Again, with reference to the word eternal, we know that it sometimes has the sense of final, or nearly that sense. Because this destruction is eternal, it does not follow that the act of destruction is to be always going on, but rather that the state of destruction is such that there is no recovery from it. Thus, if a man were destroyed for a year, and then restored, it would be punishment for a year; if for a hundred years, it would be a century of punishment; if for a thousand years, it would be a millennium of punishment—but if he was destroyed never to be restored throughout eternity, it would be an eternal punishment. That such is the case, we learn from the word of God.

"The Apostle Heb. vi. 2 speaks of 'eternal judgment.' We are not to infer from this that the judgment day is never to expire—but simply this, that whereas earthly judgments are temporal in their character and results, here shall be a judgment where everything wrong shall be made right, and the decisions of which shall not be subject to alteration or reversal—hence, it is an eternal judgment; so also a punishment where there is neither reprieve or restoration may fitly be called an eternal punishment."—Pauline Theology, pp. 60, 61.

Bancroft, the learned Unitarian, says, "We read of eternal redemption Heb. ix. 12, not that God will be forever redeeming men; but the blessed effects of redemption will be eternal. In the same sense we may understand the punishment of eternal fire, of eternal destruction, etc.; not that the act of destroying, or the fire of consumption, will be perpetual and eternal, but the effects will be. A destruction which will never be reversed, may, with strict propriety, be called an everlasting punishment."

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Shakespeare truly says—
"Every one can master a grief but he that has it."

True beauty increases; while false lessons on examination.

Liberality consists less in giving much, than in giving wisely.

Can houses, acres, heaps of glittering gold,
Grim death disarm, and my sad heart console?
What are broad lands, proud piles, and wealth untold,
If I must have them all and lose my soul?

After crosses and losses, men grow humbler and wiser.

"From every place below the skies
The grateful song, the fervent prayer,
The incense of the heart may rise
To heaven, and find acceptance there."

If one strives to treat others as he would be treated by them, he will not fail to come near the perfect life.

The love of God is deeper
Than human hate or fear;
But in its perfect fullness
It doth not yet appear.

A true Christian faith starts with the truth of a personal redemption and leads the man up to personal duties.

The spirit of piety is the spirit of genuine courtesy. It prompts a man to be urgent in his proffers of kindness towards others.

He that thinks he hath no need of Christ, hath too high thoughts of himself; he that thinks Christ cannot help him, hath too low thoughts of Christ.

A religious or holy life has a voice; it speaks when the tongue is silent; and is either a strong attraction, or a perpetual reproof of those around us.

A little while, oh, brow,
With fever burning;
These hours of noonday heat
Have no returning;
Life's later hours are full of calm,
And eventide shall bring the balm,
After a little while.

Dust, by its own nature, can rise only so far above the road; and birds which fly higher never have it upon their wings. So the heart that knows how to fly high enough, escapes those little cares and vexations which brood upon the earth but cannot rise all the into that purer air.

The most unhappy of all men is the man who cannot tell what he is going to do, that has got no work cut out for him in the world, and does not go into any. For work is the grand cure of the maladies and miseries that ever beset mankind—honest work which you intend getting done.—Carlyle.

The gospels make much of our Lord's prayers. Frequently he spent whole nights in prayer. For each new scene of trial he girded himself by prayer. He understood the philosophy and the practice of prayer, so that he could teach others both its form and its spirit. His Father's public recognition of himself and his work was given in response to prayer while he was engaged in the act. For the record of two such instances we are indebted to Luke's gospel.

This smothered grief, when will it cease?
This heart so torn, when be at peace?
These silent tears that dare not flow,
Repressed so oft, make deeper woe.
O God, to thee, on bended knee,
I pray for strength this strife to bear;
My heart grows faint—O succor me—
I long for peace—peace anywhere!

One of the saddest things about the yellow fever scourge in Memphis is, that just as the sickness is reaching its turning point, and the diminishing temperature begins to give notice of coming frost, many of the heroic men and women who remained in the city relieving the distress of the sick and the dying are themselves beginning to fall before the destroyer. Among them are not a few citizens who, if they had consulted their own convenience and safety, would have fled at the first outbreak of the epidemic, but chose rather to abide at the post of duty and danger. Being acclimated, they have escaped attack until within the past week or ten days. An idea of the desolation which prevails in this afflicted city may be formed from the fact that, out of a population of sixty thousand, only about twenty-five hundred whites and six thousand blacks—less than one-sixth of the whole—remain within the city limits; and yet out of this small number of people a hundred have been dying daily, which gives the appalling death rate of over one per cent. a day of the resident population. The same death rate applied to the million of people who inhabit Manhattan Island would produce over ten thousand deaths a day. Prayers for an early frost may well be devout in Memphis.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 2, 1878.

Our own health has improved since our last issue. Bro. Harsh is able to attend to business. Though still reduced in strength we hope through the divine favor, to fill the places to which the Association has appointed us during the remainder of the year.

THE yellow fever record is as dismal as ever. The epidemic is spreading into the country. The total number of cases on Saturday, Sept. 28, footed up 8,404 and 2,750 deaths at New Orleans, and the recorded number of attacks and deaths were large at twenty or twenty-five other places.

WE have now reached the last quarter of the year, and hope our brethren will renew all subscriptions that become due. During 1877, we were only able to issue forty-six numbers, and unless our brethren are prompt and help, we may not be able to do any better this year. If there be one, two, or three intermissions in the weekly issue our brethren can easily divine the cause. We do not wish to make an indebtedness this year to be paid from next year's receipts. We are not owing near as much as we did one year ago and we desire to get entirely out of debt. To reach this result we are willing to sacrifice on our own part and believe our brethren will aid us in becoming entirely free from the incumbrance of debt. It is better, if need be, to miss two or three papers than to add any more to our indebtedness.

Trine Immersion.

And Jesus came and spake unto them saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world, Amen. Matt. xxviii. 18, 19, 20.

Since writing the preceding articles a misiaid pamphlet, advocating trine immersion, by W. C. Thurman, has been found; and as the controversy on this subject is pressed by the particular denomination with which he stands connected, it will, no doubt, interest our brethren to become acquainted with some of the arguments and positions taken by this writer, who certainly, in who ever else he may be lacking, is not lacking in unlimited confidence in himself. The prominent idea of the pamphlet is that the Greek word baptizo is a frequentative verb, and, from its etymological force, demands the action, of which the verb is an exponent, repeated a number of times. Of the ability, fairness and trustworthiness of the writer we shall leave our readers to judge, after having called their attention to some extracts most scrupulously given in his own words. Take the following as a specimen:

"Therefore, we think that every honest man, who is willing to confess the truth, is now compelled to admit that, according to our English translation, the commission cannot admit of less than three actions. Therefore, it only remains to know whether it in the original conveyed the same idea. But that being a dead language, and our most learned Greek scholars as schoolboys, are entirely dependent for every word they know about Greek on those who wrote while it was a living language. Without stopping to enquire of them, we will at once go to the fountain-head, and consult those who did not have to guess, but knew the correct meaning of every word employed in the commission. I mean those learned men in whose mother-tongue the apostles preached and wrote. And if Chrysostom is admitted to have been the most learned of all, we should consult him first, and thus appeal to the highest authority known on earth.

"Indeed, I am not sure that the apostles themselves had a better knowledge of the proper construction of the Greek language than the learned Chrysostom, in whose own mother-tongue the commission was written. But since they are silent, it is certain that we can appeal to no higher authority than this celebrated Greek lexicographer; and his answer is that 'Christ delivered to his disciples one baptism, in three immersions of the body, when he said to them, Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' (Bingham, Vol. 1., p. 324.)

"Thus the question is now settled, not only by the undoubted authority of the best lexicographer that ever lived, but also confirmed and ratified by all the Greek and Latin fathers; for without a single dissenting voice this was the universal opinion of the whole Church of God, 'the pillar and ground of the truth.' (1 Tim. iii. 15). Then what but wilful ignorance can cause men to prefer the modern inventions of those who 'change times and laws' (Dan. vii. 25)? And whether Christ will accept of the new mode of single immersion as a substitute for the original institution or not, one thing is certain, it is in disobedience to his express word which limits us to the use of but one 'name' for each action, for it assumes the authority, as we have noticed, of using three names in one immersion. But not so with the first Christians, those who sealed the truth with their own blood; for, says Jerome, 'We are not baptized in the NAMES of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, but in one NAME.' And then mentions the only way that this can be done, that is, 'We are thrice dipped in the water.' And this the Church of God, 'the pillar and ground of the truth' (1 Tim. iii. 15), understood to be the commandment of Christ. For, says Tertullian, 'We are thrice immersed as the Lord commanded in the gospel.' And all that is necessary to prove that this was the apostolic mode is to notice the date down to which it is certain that the true mode was continued; and this is done thus: According to the undoubted testimony of Clement of Alexandria, the death of the Apostle John could not have occurred earlier than about the eighteenth year of Trajan, which fixes the close of the apostolic age to A. D. 117."

It will certainly be news to our readers to learn that Chrysostom was the "most learned of all" in the Greek, "the highest authority known on earth," and "the best Greek lexicographer that ever lived." We are in possession of a lengthy article written in German, on "Chrysostom, Archbishop of Constantinople, Viewed as a Preacher," by C. F. W. Puniel, and translated by H. J. Ripley, professor in Newton Theological Institution, from which we will make a few extracts to show the standing of Chrysostom as an orator and scholar. Our author says:

"Among the early preachers, no one's life and fortunes were determined so much by his eloquence as were Chrysostom's. It was the cause both of his elevation and abasement; of the high respect he acquired while living, and of the still higher and more enduring renown which has been awarded to him since his death. His proper name was John. The surname Chrysostom (golden mouthed), became appropriated to him in after times; yet certainly before the year 650, since Isidore of Hispala, who died in that year, speaks of him under this name. . . .

"We now pass to the inquiry, How did Chrysostom become so distinguished an orator? In reply, it must first be said that he was naturally endowed with most eminent oratorical talents. A strong, penetrating and comprehensive mind, a brilliant invention, an inexhaustible imagination, an abundant vein of wit, presence of mind, fervor and depth of feeling, readiness and exactness of observation, a decidedly practical bent of disposition—in one word, all the highest and most essential requisites of a good orator were united in him. . . . Still, with all his great excellences, Chrysostom was not free from faults which ought carefully to be exhibited for caution's sake, since he has been so extensively admired as the most complete model of sacred eloquence. Though he distinguished himself in the interpretation of the Scripture, above the most of his contemporaries, yet he is here occasionally in fault. Sometimes, . . . he adopts the errors of the Septuagint; then, again, he does violence to the language of Scripture from compliance with the current doctrinal opinions of his age. The definitions which he proposes are often vague, and include matter irrelevant and erroneous. He not only takes partial views of subjects, but also deduces from such views consequences quite unjustifiable. Related ideas he confounds with one another, and does not, with sufficient accuracy, separate the true from the false.

"Many of his doctrinal and practical principles are open to a similar remark. With all his strength and liberality of mind, he was the child of the age in which he lived, and partook in many respects of its errors. Were not the external form of his panegyrics and treatises on the martyrs and their relics, on virginity and monasticism, quite as good as that of his other productions, one could hardly believe that a man who wrote so much that is truly valuable could have framed such distorted views of religion."

How preposterous the appeal is to Chrysostom as the "most learned of all" in Greek, and the "highest authority on earth," may be readily apprehended by carefully reading the above extracts.

So far from being the most learned Greek that ever lived, he hardly occupies more than a third or fourth place among the so-called Fathers of the Church. Basil, the Great, who "excelled in eloquence and logic, philosophy, natural science, medicine, poetry and the fine arts, and who was one of the most ardent advocates of classical literature and eloquence in Christian schools" was a far more learned man than Chrysostom. The same may be said of Gregory Nazianzen who was carefully educated in the schools of Cæsarea, Alexandria, and Athens. Chrysostom studied law under Libanius, a very distinguished heathen rhetorician, who gave him a thorough literary training so far as the study of Roman jurisprudence was concerned. Through the instruction of his pious mother, Anthusia, he was led into a thorough acquaintance with the Scriptures, in which he was further improved by the instruction of Diodorus. He never like Basil, Gregory, and others, received the complete training and discipline in classical literature that were imparted to those scholars that were taught at the great centres of learning where these fathers attended. Even Basil and Gregory, who were very much the superiors of Chrysostom in scholarship, were not the peers of the celebrated Origen who from childhood, was familiarized with the works of Plato and the other classics, as well as the Scriptures. He made the study of all known philosophy the preparation for the scientific study of Christianity. He became well acquainted with Hebrew, of which Chrysostom was ignorant, and became the compiler of the Hexapla which bears his name. We may conclude our remarks on the scholarship of Chrysostom in the language of another:

"Chrysostom was the most eloquent, though not the most learned of the Fathers. He was more of the practical, ethical divine than the logical theologian, conserving rather than advancing theology."

Chrysostom was the Whitefield of his age, with probably far less learning than possessed by Whitefield.

The most amusing part of the information that the [illegible] of the pamphlet has communicated is, that he has settled the question of trine immersion, "by the undoubted authority of the best lexicographer that ever lived," meaning Chrysostom. Now, so far from Chrysostom's having been a lexicographer, or compiler of a dictionary there is not the least evidence in the world that he ever saw either a lexicon or dictionary. In regard to dictionaries we give the following from a learned work:

"The ancient Greeks and Romans made use of glossaries of unusual words and phrases, but had no dictionary of language in our sense of the term. In learning a foreign language, they seem to have adopted the natural method of conversation. It was not till after the invention of printing, when a taste for the classic languages of antiquity began to prevail, that dictionaries came into use. The Latin Thesaurus of Robert Stephens made its appearance in 1531; and in 1572 the Greek Thesaurus of Henry Stephens was published."

Glossaries explaining the words used by single authors were in existence in Chrysostom's time. Apollonius wrote a glossary explaining words, and idioms contained in Homer's works.

Julius Pollux wrote a work explaining certain Attic words and phrases. Timæus explained by a glossary the terms occurring in Plato. Some larger works explained legal and political terms. Works of a later age than the times of Chrysostom explained proper names and many of the common words belonging to the language.

Pliny wrote a Natural History treating on 20,000 matters of importance, drawn from about 2,000 different volumes, but this work was more nearly a Cyclopædia than a dictionary and was in Latin. These glossaries, grammatical [illegible] stories, were of eminent service in making dictionaries after the art of printing was discovered. Chrysostom acquired his knowledge of Greek from conversation, reading, and the explanation of his teachers; and if he had anything beyond these helps it was merely the help of a glossary explaining idioms and difficulties. So far from being the "best Greek lexicographer that ever lived," there is not the least particle of evidence that he ever wrote a page of this kind of composition, or even ever saw anything like a lexicon or dictionary. It will be in point to see how Chrysostom employs certain words as the equivalents of the word baptizo. We take our examples from Dr. Conant's work on the usage of the word by different authors. Quoting from Chrysostom's Commentary on 1 Cor., we have the following language:

"For to be immersed (βαπτίζεσθαι), and to sink down (καταδύεσθαι), then to emerge, is a symbol of the descent into the under world, and of the ascent from thence. Therefore Paul calls the immersion (βάπτισμα) the tomb saying we are buried (συνετάφημεν) with him by the immersion (βαπτίσματος) into death."

Here Chrysostom rightly explains baptism by two equivalent Greek terms which are forms of the verb katadunai to dip under, to sink, immerse and yedein, and of the verb sunthapto to bury, or inter with another. Query: Would Chrysostom, by this way of defining baptism, have us understand that we descend into the under world and ascend from it three times? Yet this is the way that our learned oracle teaches us that we must understand the meaning of baptidzo on what he terms "the authority of the best Greek lexicographer that ever lived" or otherwise submit to be called "wilfully ignorant."

It is well known to readers of Ecclesiastical History that the so-called Fathers taught that catechumens who were martyred before they were immersed in water were regarded as receiving an equivalent for this immersion in water in the bathing in their own blood. Chrysostom, in speaking of a case of this kind, says:

"And wonder not, if I call the witnesses (the martyrdom) an immersion [illegible]. For here, also, the Spirit hovers over with great fulness, and there is a taking away of sins, and a cleansing of the soul wonderful and strange; and as they who are immersed [illegible] are bathed (λουόμενοι) with water, so are they who witness (who are martyred), with their own blood."

Here baptidzo, in one of its derived forms, and a defined form of the verb louo, to bathe, are made equivalents by Chrysostom. We could give other examples, but these are sufficient, only asking: were all martyrs three times bathed in blood?

The worst of all is the quotation from Tertullian where he is made to say:

We are thrice immersed at the Lord commanded in the gospel."

Now, Tertullian never said any such thing. It is a most outrageous misrepresentation of his words. In our first article we gave the extract from Tertullian in full. We again give so much of his language as is atrociously garbled in the above extract. Regarding the mode of baptism Tertullian says:

"Quam utiliter, ibidem, sed et aliquanto prius in ecclesia, ante antistitis manum contestamur, non renunciare nos diabolo et pompæ et angelis ejus. Inde ter mergitamur, amplius aliquid respondentes quam dominus in evangelio determinavit." This, in English is: "Then when about to go to the water, and but a little previous in the church, under the hand of the bishop, we renounce the devil, his pomps and his angels. Then we are three times immersed, answering somewhat more than the Lord prescribed in the gospel."

The words that are in italics are the words in question, and we give Dr. Conant's translation of them. Tertullian is the first author that uses the word trinity in its theological sense, and the very first author that mentions trine immersion. And he positively says of this threefold dipping that it "answers something more than the Lord prescribed in the Gospel," which is true; for he requires immersion into the one name comprehending Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, while the trinitarian formula, or symbol, prescribed an immersion into the name separately. Let us now read Thurman's language while he puts into this pamphlet for Tertullian's and the language of Tertullian himself side by side. Thurman affirms that Tertullian says "We are thrice immersed as the Lord commanded in the Gospel," while Tertullian actually says "We are three times immersed, answering somewhat more than the Lord prescribed in the gospel." Such is the writer who would claim that "wilful ignorance" is the sole reason why such men as Robert Hall, Carson, Conant, A. Campbell, and many others, have not embraced trine immersion. Something on his grammatical and critical deliverances hereafter.

The Compassionate Savior.

So who a they continued asking him, he lifted up himself and said unto them, He that is without sin among you let him first cast a stone at her. When Jesus had lifted up himself and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, woman where are those accusers? hath no man condemned thee? She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more. John viii. 7, 10, 11.

Thus spake the Savior of the world eighteen hundred years ago, when rude hands and sinful hearts brought into the presence of this Divine personage a helpless woman to receive her condemnation. Yes, eighteen hundred years ago, for since that date no such answer has been given; no such word spoken. And the woman has sinned, been stoned, cast into prison, hooted, hunted like a wild beast, driven from the haunts of men, sometimes to death, sometimes to lower degradation. We would ask in all candor, why was such an example given? Why such words spoken, if ever after they were to be disregarded? Was she the only sinning one to be forgiven? Was not that example as much for us as any other given by the same authority?

An example quite to the contrary came to our notice recently, which brought the above in beautiful contrast to our mind. They were taken, he and she, before the so-called tribunal of justice; he was acquitted, put on the cars and sent away free. And, go and do as thou hast done, might as well have been written on his brow, for such is the lesson learned by those who will follow in his footsteps. But what of her? She must languish in jail unless she possesses money enough to clear her crime; (money pardons all crime in this age) three hundred dollars was required in this case, and she failed to raise it.

We have many similar cases, and he or she who have humanity enough to speak a word in their behalf is soon branded as another guilty one. "Lift up the erring one, care for the dying," may be written, sung and played, but let that brother or sister stoop down to lift up the erring one and how quickly falls the censure of the world upon them. That soul who dares to follow out the example of our Lord and Master must be strong and brave, ready to face the fiery darts of the wicked one, and to stand alone and unprotected. If need be, not only in her cause, but in the cause of right, justice and religion. Great God, how long! how long! But let not our spirits faint within us; the day dawn is almost at hand; the cry of the oppressed has already reached thine ear; thy hand is not shortened that it cannot save, or thy power spent to fulfil the words that have gone out of thy mouth. Oh, beware! self-righteous Pharisee, lest the publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of God before you. May we who name the Masters' name, seek earnestly to do his will, and if we walk by his example, surely he will say, well done, whatever the world may think to the contrary. The cry is now from every quarter, whom can we trust? God only!

Yours, seeking to do the Master's will, MRS. O. F. HALL.

The Gospel Dispensation.

By the gospel dispensation is meant the proclamation of the covenant of grace to all the nations of the earth, both Jews and Gentiles. When the angel announced the birth of Christ to the shepherds, he said: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people."—Luke ii. 10. And when Simeon took the child Jesus in his arms on the day of his presentation in the temple, he spake of him as "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Israel." v. 32. But until the trial of the Israelitish nation under their covenant was ended the gospel could not be preached to the Gentiles. During his personal ministry as the Messiah, Christ was "not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." And during that period he commanded his disciples, when sending them forth, "Go not in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."—Matt. x. 5, 6. By the terms of their national covenant the kingdom of heaven was promised to Israel on condition of their obedience, and until they had finally, by rejecting and crucifying the Lord of life and glory, forfeited the promise, and incurred the abrogation of their covenant, it could not be offered to any other people. The "handwriting of ordinances"—the Israelitish national covenant—that was against us"—Gentiles—"which was contrary to us," must first be blotted out, and this he did, "and took out of the [illegible]. And then he said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; Go ye, therefore, and disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." And now "the mystery which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men, was revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." Eph. iii; 4-6. And they who were afar off as aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world, were made nigh by the blood of Christ.

The covenant of grace in Christ Jesus as the seed of the woman, and the Abrahamic covenant, were not affected by the abrogation of the Israelitish national covenant. They still continued in full force and virtue; and the gospel dispensation founded on the Abrahamic covenant, extends the provisions of that covenant to all nations, according to that which is written, "A father to many nations have I made thee." The gospel is not a new system of redemption, separate and distinct from the previous dispensations of grace; but is only a new measure adapted and designed to bring all nations into the Abrahamic covenant—to bring them under the influence of the truth as it is in Jesus for their instruction and salvation. The gospel in the Mosaic dispensation was like a flower in the bud, folded in the calyx of the Israelitish national covenant, but now like the flower in full bloom with the corolla expanded, it diffuses its fragrance to all the nations of the earth: as Jesus said, "this gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations."

The extension of the gospel to all nations did not exclude the Jew. On the contrary, even the gospel dispensation was "to the Jew first," as Peter said (Acts iii. 26), "Unto you first, God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you in turning away every one from his trespasses." For Christ had said "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."—Luke xxiv. 47. This was in accordance with the Abrahamic covenant in which the natural seed had the priority. And had they all believed the gospel and obeyed it, it would have superseded the calling of the Gentiles. But through their unbelief salvation is come to the Gentiles. Because of their unbelief, the natural branches of the Abrahamic covenant—the Jews—have been broken off, and room is made for grafting in their place the seed of faith from among the Gentiles or the wild olive tree. Through their continued adhesion to their abrogated national covenant, blindness in part has happened to Israel until the complement from the Gentiles shall be brought in.

The object therefore of the gospel dispensation is to take a people out of the Gentiles—a people consisting of believers in Christ who together with believing Israel, and believers of all preceding times, shall constitute the election of God—the seed of faith—the heirs of the kingdom of heaven; and to them, as "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people," the kingdom [illegible] from the Israelitish nation in not a fleshly [illegible] be given. This is the election of whom Paul speaks (Rom. viii. 28-30). "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified." And as their election is according to the foreknowledge of God, so it is also in harmony with the free agency of man, and embraces all who in every age believe and obey the word of God. Hence Peter's exhortation: "Wherefore the rather brethren give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—2 Pet. i. 10, 11.

During the gospel dispensation this election will be completed; and the mystery of God will be finished at its close. The Gentile complement will be brought in, the branches broken off from the good olive tree, representing the unbelieving Israelites under the national Sinaitic covenant, shall all be replaced by grafted branches taken from the wild olive tree, representing all that believe from among the Gentiles, whether before or since the Israelitish covenant; and so the number of the elect, being the number of Israel under the Sinaitic covenant, will be saved. These shall constitute the first fruits of humanity, who shall be kings and priests unto God and reign on the earth. Then an occupant for every throne in Christ's kingdom will have been prepared. The cabinet of Jesus will be filled. The Church, the Bride of the Lamb will be perfect. The purpose of God in taking a people out of the Gentiles will be accomplished. Then the gospel dispensation will end, and there will be no more preaching of this gospel; no more calling and election to joint heirship with Christ in the kingdom of heaven. This measure of grace will be accomplished. This part of the Divine plan will be finished; and all the means necessary for its progress and completion will terminate. This will be indicated by the restoration of Jewish nationality in Jerusalem and the Holy Land, for the termination of the gospel dispensation and the restoration of Jewish nationality and dominion in Palestine must synchronize, as Jesus said, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The condition of the Jews in Jerusalem and Palestine has of late years been much improved, and the immigration correspondingly great, embracing many of the well to do classes, so that they are able to avail themselves of the advantages which must result from the recent establishment of an English protectorate over Asiatic Turkey. And we confidently expect that in a very few years their nationality will be acknowledged by Turkey and the powers. It will be interesting to watch the development of this unfulfilled prophecy, especially as it has such an important bearing on the destiny of the Church and the world. We see the fig tree of Judaism already putting forth the leaves of nationality and we know that the end is nigh. "But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer." J. G. W.

Anæmia, or bloodlessness, is becoming common among English colliers. It is supposed that want of fresh air and light is a chief cause.

A man walked into the Philadelphia yellow fever relief office, gave $1,000 to the treasurer, refused to tell his name, and went away unrecognized.

POETRY.

Thanks.

L. M. BREGESS.

Father we thank thee for the rain, the sunshine,
The gentle dew, the clouds that glow at even,
For health, for food, love human and divine,
For every gain or pleasure that life gives,
For the deep rest with which night clothes us,
For the sweet waking each morning to light and life.

Father we thank thee for our lives of sorrow,
For all the evils that we here have borne,
For so much brighter we are glad to-morrow
Will be the memories of that lasting morn,
When flowers will bloom in place of every thorn.

But, most of all, we thank thee, oh, our Father,
For thy best gift, thine own beloved Son,
And that eternal life which he shall give us
When time is o'er and all our tasks are done,
Our battles fought, our glorious victory won.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Duty seems to demand that I should write a few lines to inform the brethren and sisters where I have labored in the past, of my whereabouts, and what I am doing. It is about one year since I came home sick from the coal regions of Luzerne, Pa., and I have been able to preach but very little since, and unable to do manual labor. I therefore started a little store, having found a few friends to let me have a few goods on time, and worked on the shoe bench a very little.

I still love the glorious truths of the coming reign of our Messiah, and to proclaim the same, when health and opportunity opens the way. The great trouble in this region is the lack of means, or of the desire to freely give as they are willing to freely receive. I have labored a good deal without fee or reward, and paid my own fare, but I could go no farther.

Elder R. V. Lyon has been with us, and gave seventeen discourses in a grove, and in Lincolnville and Little Cooley, two and one-half miles each side of us. The subject of the Coming Age and Return of Israel was fully set forth, and I hope a better understanding of the plan of salvation may result from his labor among us.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find seventy-five cents for tracts. I have been alone in the one faith for the last three years, except one sister, twenty miles from here. We have been trying to do what we could for the truth as it is in Jesus. Brother B. Wilson came here a short time since, and taught the people the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus. Several seem to be waked up to a knowledge of the truth. My prayer is that they may come out, obey the truth, and become heirs to the kingdom of God. May God bless the editor, restore him to usefulness again and his labor of love.

Yours, in hope of the soon coming of our Lord and Savior.

Editor Restitution:—You will find enclosed one dollar. I see my time is about out for the paper. I would like to do more. I never felt the worth of the paper as I have lately. About two weeks ago a young man made his appearance at my house from Arizona, by the name of Cotten. Brother Cotten, of Indianapolis, had sent him the paper, with some tracts. He saw my address in the paper, was convinced of the truths of the Bible, and dropping all, came to Texas in search of me to be immersed. I immersed him the next morning. He gave me ten dollars and went on his way rejoicing. So we see Brother Cotten's money for the paper and tracts was not spent in vain, but had the desired effect. We are doing well. The cause of truth is prospering in Texas. Z. GOWER.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar for the payer to be sent to Granville McFarlin, Whitehall, Wis. The above named brother has been investigating the gospel message, and has become so well satisfied of its fulfillment that he has concluded to put on Christ by being baptized into his name, and thus become an heir of God and joint heir with Jesus Christ. We expect to witness his burial Sept. 12, if the Lord will. We commend him to God, in whom he trusts. Others in this neighborhood are convinced that they have not completed their citizenship by simply believing the gospel, yet they seem not to have the courage to obey from the heart that form of doctrine that has been delivered to them. Our prayer is that God will remove all obstacles that seem to be in their way.

I hope the brethren who have means will see to it that THE RESTITUTION is kept alive until the times of the restitution, (of which it is such an able advocate,) shall come. "Gather my saints together unto me, saith the High and Lofty One." But who are they? Let us read: "These that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Psa. l. 5. Now, brethren, do not so cling to the root of all evil, for not a solitary dollar can you take with you. I expect you will accept this admonition from one who loves you. The Lord grant it. We ask it for his name's sake. Amen.

Editor Restitution.—I came to this country one year ago last August, and hoped to find some brethren residing here, but found none. After about four months, my wife was prostrated with lung complaint, and after suffering much for two and a half months death came to her relief. She fell asleep Feb. 11th, 1875. Dear brethren, you can hardly realize how lonely I feel in my isolated condition without a brother or sister to speak so much as one word of comfort to me and my children.

Should this fall under the notice of any of our brethren in Oregon, I want them to correspond with me. Cannot some of our preaching brethren give us a call? We would do our best to insure their comfort. We have a good country here should any one be coming to Oregon in pursuit of a farm. Could Bro. Bryant, of Marshland, come this way? Yours, waiting for the soon coming kingdom.

J. W. PERINGER.

Editor Restitution:—For my own part I feel I could part with a nearest friend as well as I could part with the weekly visits of THE RESTITUTION, and I watch for its arrival as I would for the coming of an absent friend. It regales me to find that there are brethren through the world that have their hearts filled with love and joy, looking for the soon coming of the King of Glory. We, here in Hamilton, are striving to hold forth the faith once delivered to the saints. I want to be little and unknown—loved and prized by God alone. Worldly honors have no charms for me; the things pertaining to my Master I prefer to all the world besides. I loaned some papers to a lady who moves in the higher circles, and is much in the society of those who call themselves reformers, who have thrown the doctrine of eternal torture to the winds as well as the natural immortality of the soul, but comprehend nothing of the plan of salvation revealed in Christ as the seed of Abraham through whom alone salvation can come to them. She promised to loan and re-loan them till they are worn out. My prayer is that they may be the means of opening some of their eyes to see the truth as it is in Jesus.

From your humble sister, who is looking for the soon coming of the Master and King who will make all things right, when faith will be turned to sight, and we be called home to His heavenly kingdom. Yours truly,

MRS. CHARLES LEE.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find postal order, a year's subscription for 1876; we fear you may need it now, so will not wait until our subscription expires; are thankful we have it. What a season this has been, so eventful to the waiting ones. To us these signs are much, while to the world they simply stand amazed for the moment, then pass on with renewed zest to the worldly allurements, determined to drink to the very dregs the so-called pleasures of this world. Said one to me a few days since: "Oh, everything and anything, but to stop and think." Poor, deluded child, we pity her. We have not time enough from distressing care to think of the glory, beauty and purity that shall be bye and bye, of the wrongs all righted, of the judgments just and true, of the strivings to conquer sin and temptation, selfishness and evil speaking. The seekings to get a little higher, a little nearer to the perfect life the Lord desires we should live, and by the grace of God we do sometimes gain the victory, and if we fail, many point. He knows how hard we have tried, how we long to be his very own, loving, faithful and obedient. Yours, waiting,

MRS. O. P. HALL.

Adrian, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—A very good suggestion has been made by the editor, namely, that of writing shorter articles for the paper, in which we all ought to take an interest. I propose, for one, that our able writers give us brief and pointed articles on the different subjects that are not probably understood by the majority of new beginners. Now the immortality question all of us understand thoroughly, as also the resurrection of the body, the future reward, the state of dead, the promises, etc; all ought to be quite conversant with these subjects, as also the kingdom. Give us short articles on the seventy weeks spoken of in Dan. ix. 24 to end, as a great many differ on this question of importance, some believing that it is all in the past, others that there is one week still in the future. Also on the signs of the times in which we live etc., short, practical remarks are in demand. Well, we have our new tent pitched again, in the city of Stockton this time. This is the first time since the conference, and I earnestly hope some good will come of it. Bro. Corbaley is on hand again. We do wish he had some help. Poor man, he was feeling very unwell on his arrival on Tuesday, Sept. 10th, and in the evening he opened the meeting with a hard headache, but he said he forgot all about headache before closing for the evening. There was a good attendance for the opening, and among the number were three preachers of the outside persuasion. Bro. and sisters Kimball, Dougherty, Hawthorne and mother did all they could to make us comfortable. Thanks, brothers and sisters.

And now a few words to dear friends who are putting off from time to time their duty of being baptized into the Anointed One: If you understand the Scriptures, and believe them as being the words of eternal life, which are able to make you wise even unto salvation, then I say repent of the past by turning your back upon the past, go down into the water and be baptized, and rise up to walk in newness of life. Do not let pride or bashfulness stand in the way. I am earnest about this matter, for I feel an interest. Put not off till to-morrow what can be done to-day, but let us come out from among her (Babylon or Babel, or confusion of tongues, meaning the world at large.) Oh, friends! the time is not long at the farthest; death may overtake us at any moment, it stares at us on every side, and a misstep or a slip may lead to death. Just stop and consider for a moment the importance of heeding the word of God; there are the promises and conditions—no compulsion in the matter. Do not think as some do, that they are a few crazy fanatics, as we are sometimes called. There were only eight saved in the ark, and out of 2,000,000 Israelites that started from bondage to the land of promise only two entered therein. Even their leader, Moses, fell. Recollect many are called but few are chosen. Harken, my brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs to the kingdom? "Wherefore laying aside all malice, all guile, and all hypocrisies, and envyings, and all evil speakings, as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." 1 Peter. xi. 1, 2.

In conclusion, let us hold fast to our profession that we may be accounted worthy of the world to come. Oh, blessed promise! Dear friends, we need not fear if we do our part. God will do his part surely and without fail, for the Lord has spoken.

SELECTIONS.

The Coming Conference in New York.

Brother Pike:—I would like to call attention to the movement inaugurated last Monday evening at the church of Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., D. D. It is the call for a conference to be held in his church building, Oct. 30, 31 and Nov. 1, to discuss the all-important question of our Lord's advent the second time. I was present at the meeting on Monday, and will here detail to you the proceedings, which, however, I expect will be fully published in some authorized channel, and you will see it.

About 8 o'clock p. m. the meeting was called to order by Dr. Tyng, he offering extempore prayer, and such a prayer as might well fill every mouth whose heart was attuned to the cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I was greatly pleased, as all seemed (the number present was perhaps sixty), at the after proceedings. Dr. T. stated this was preliminary to gatherings which doubtless would be greatly enlarged, and the next meeting was appointed for next Monday week—6th inst. A committee of three were elected with powers to call a much larger one for furthering the objects of the conference. I was pleased to learn from him that sect and party are to be kept in the background, yea, not even to be considered as having any place in this delightful question of questions, "Will he come?"

The doctor called upon all present to quote from memory such Scriptures as bore on the advent, and he opened the same with "This same Jesus, which is taken up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. A very general response to his call was made, and all seemed to feel the importance of the subject.

The hymn "When Jesus Comes" was sung, and sung, too, with feeling. Dr. Tyng, was asked by one present if he believed in the personal coming of Christ, to which he replied he did; he believed he would come for his saints, and then with his saints, and occupy the throne of his glory upon the earth.

If the meeting then held is an indice of the future meetings, then great good can only come from this conference, the like of which has no parallel in this country.

Dr. T. also said that the question had fallen into the shade greatly, stating that forty years ago it was one of the questions much talked of, and this conference is to see why this has been, and an effort is to be made to reinstate the glorious subject in its place of honor and distinction. If this can be done, men will be led to see—as we see—the very great importance of the coming of Christ "the second time without sin unto salvation." For if he come not, then certainly they who have fallen asleep in him are perished; for he comes to give life, eternal life to all who are his at his coming.

For many years I have been a firm believer in this doctrine, which is my hope, but my heart warms toward it as I am led to believe the time may not be far distant when he who is to come will come. He will come!

Dr. Tyng hoped that all who are in sympathy with this movement will come, leaving side issues at home, and only discuss such points in the question as are involved; and while all, you or I, or thousands like us, may not hear the full sound of the things associated therewith, yet the movement is a grand one, and must in the very nature of the case open the eyes, and, I trust, the minds and hearts of many who now only see this question in part.

Strange to me that any should say Christ comes any other way than the one way; as for instance, at death, in conversion, and many other ways unworthy of being mentioned.

This movement looks to me as in the right direction, and I mingle my prayers with others that God would further its ends.

GEO. W. YOUNG.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 16.

We take the above, written by our beloved Brother Young, from The Herald of Life. In another column also will be found a notice from the N. Y. Sun. We add that there has been a desire on the part of our brethren east, that Brother H. V. Reed should visit them. He would like to visit the brethren at Cleveland, and perhaps some other places, while on an eastern tour. Should he be enabled to make a journey as above, he would like to be in New York at the time of the contemplated conference, of which Brother Young speaks. He can not go at his own expense. Will our brethren, who are able, make provision to defray his expenses to New York and return, as well as something for his time, to meet the wants of those dependent on him? He could do much, both for the cause of truth, and for THE RESTITUTION. If the privilege to take any part in this conference should be accorded to any one, specifically holding the faith and hope of Messiah's return, and the literal fulfillment of all that God's holy prophets have spoken concerning the restitution of all things, Brother Reed would certainly do the subject full justice. Should the brethren east desire that Brother Reed should come, will they correspond with him at once, and let our brethren west raise enough to pay his expenses and something more? We may have something more definite next week.

Intemperance.

Where do we stand as a brotherhood on this important question? What the duty we owe this government of ours? Its increase for the last fifteen years among the youth of our land has been fearful. The same ratio for fifteen years to come will place our government in the hands of a lawless, demoralized set of roughs, and its morality and grand civilization will have gone; all the prayers of the crusade on fast days of the clergy will not stop the result. God's, as well as nature's great law is, and has always been, reform or perish. Even Israel, his covenanted people, was not exempted. We are standing on the eve of a terrible national chastisement. Let every brother or sister see to it at once that their skirts are clean from this great crime. Speak out, act out, and in every way that is prudent. It may be God may stay the storm of his wrath and spare us and our children these terrible results. E. S. M.

Springfield, O.

The poison that is in the root comes out inevitably in the leaf; the mud that is in the fountain-head mingles with the stream as it rolls onward; how necessary then to pray, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

DIED.

VINNEDGE—On Sept. 6, 1876, Mrs. Sophrona A. Vinnedge, aged thirty years.

She was daughter of Warren Burch, of Marshall county, was born near Plymouth in 1846, and was married to Joseph Vinnedge of Lake county, Oct. 10, 1872, and died at her home in Crown Point, in the evening of Sept. 6, 1876. She became a member some ten years ago, of the Christian Church in Marshall county, and united March 4, 1877, with the Baptist church at Crown Point. She had resided in Crown Point about three years, and gained many friends. Her health began to fail about four years ago, and during the last few months she declined rapidly. Her preparations to leave this world were made quietly, intelligently, and with a cheerful humble, resigned, submissive spirit. Several days before her death, after spending perhaps fifteen minutes in prayer and thanksgiving and praise, she told her husband she wanted to procure some article that might soon be needful in the event of her dissolution, and she obtained them with the same cheerful spirit which she would have shown on an ordinary occasion. Some two weeks before her death, she sang in the still hours of night, the Midnight Cry, "Trim the Lamps and be Ready." She was evidently thinking of the coming of the Son of Man. As her bodily strength failed, her mind seemed to grow stronger. The night before her death Dr. Bedell brought her some fine flowers. She was very much gratified with them, and glancing forward it may be to thought to the beautiful world which is yet to be, she said, they are but a "foretaste" of the future. She remained about an hour in the margin of the river of death, and then said to her husband, "Good-bye, I am going." She called for her father and mother, and others, told them all good-bye, and then, as we have abundant reason to believe, like the early Christians, went to sleep in Jesus, to wake with countless multitudes in glory, in the morning of the coming day. Funeral services were held at Cedar Lake, discourse by Rev. T. H. Ball. Text, "Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning." Such is the exhortation she would leave to all her friends. T. POETRY.

(New York Observer.)

Chosen in the Furnace of Affliction.

H. W. C.

I Peter iv. 12-19.

How long! how long! the furnace fires rage high!
Hath God forgotten me here I lie
In these ashes? In my weakness
That I must endure trial, pain and loss—
Oh, for the Master's voice!
Will he forsake?
Here in the fires alone
Must my heart break?

"Be patient, suffering soul! I hear thy cry.
The trial fire may glow, but I am nigh.
I see the silver, and I will refine
Until my image shall upon it shine.
Fear not, for I am with
Thy help to be.
Give Me then all thy pain
My love for thee!"

Thy love for me, O, Lord! is then the place
Where I may see the shining of My face?
Here may I learn thy holy will to know,
And into thy dear image nearer grow?
Unto this blessedness
May I aspire,
To glorify Thee
Even in the fire?

"Yea! even here! oh suffering one, be strong!
This trial of thy faith may not be long.
Even now, thy soul, submissive to my will,
Is learning how to trust me and be still.
My everlasting Arms
Do they not shield?
Precious they are to me
As most fine gold."

I hear thy voice, my Lord; I fain would rest
Secure in all my weakness on thy breast.
But even now, though unconsumed I burn low,
My spirit trembles underneath Thy blow.
Must there be trial still?
Is there no place
No fitness yet, upon
This heart of mine?

"The silver truly may reflect my love,
Yet must I fashion it until the grace
And fair proportion of Christ I see—
A closer likeness, conformity to me.
As many as I love
I thus refine;
Thou shalt be fair indeed,
For thou art mine!"

"Even and am still; I doubt no more.
All quietly I rest—the strife is o'er.
Thy will, O Lord! can I resist. Thy will
Or fear to follow Thee through joy or ill?
I may not understand
The way I go;
The perfect day will come.
Then I shall know!

COMMUNICATIONS.

Misapplied Scriptures.

When speaking with Christadelphians and others who argue for the resurrection of the unjust to appear at the judgment seat of Christ, they invariably quote the following texts or passages from the New Testament as conclusively proving their view, and I propose now to reproduce them to your readers, with your permission, with a few comments intended to illustrate their true meanings in opposition to the generally received ones.

Before doing so, I would premise that all of our Lord's warnings or those of his apostles concerning judgment, or judgments are based upon the belief that the Lord's second coming would transpire in the lifetime of those addressed, and the attitude of the church in relation to these warnings and admonitions must continue to be the same till the Lord comes.

The failure to keep this fact in view has been and will continue to be the cause of the prevailing ignorance concerning the meaning of those oft quoted though much abused texts.

Chief among these Scriptures stands 2 Cor. v. 10. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ that everyone may receive the thing in body according to that he hath done, whether good or bad."

Now let us anyone sit down and soberly read this epistle and chapter and dispute if he can, 1st, That the epistle is addressed "unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints, which are in all Achaia,"—language which excludes the unjust. 2d, That the resurrection of the dead either just or unjust, is not even referred to in the epistle, and in this fifth chapter he studiously excludes the dead from consideration. 3d, That the apostle in the opening verse of the fifth chapter assumes the certainty of acceptance before God of all of whom he is writing when he says, "For we know that if our earthly house * * * were dissolved, we have a building of God," and which confidence is reiterated in every subsequent verse till we come to the verse under consideration. 4th, That, as the pronoun "we" wherever else found in the epistle or in the chapter, invariably refers to justified persons, so "we" in the tenth verse must also apply to the same individuals. 5th, That the conclusion is irresistible that no argument for the appearance at the judgment seat of the living unjust, much less of the unjust dead can can be drawn from this passage.

Another favorite passage occurs in Rom. xiv. 10-12. "For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For thus it is written, as I live saith the Lord every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

I challenge successful contradiction on the following points:

1. Those of whom the apostle speaks "are the Lord's" (verse 8), which fact is asserted or inferred in every previous verse.

2. Paul pleads the justification in God's sight of all of whom he speaks, whether they regarded "days" or regarded them not, whether they ate meat or ate not (verse 6), and the very proof of their acceptance is his argument that (verse 10) "we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ."

3. That verse eleventh so far from proving the appearance of the unjust at the judgment seat, on a reference to Isa. xlv. will be found to prove that only the just are alluded to:—see verse 23, "Unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear," not confess. Verse 24, "Surely shall one say in the Lord have I righteousness and strength." Verse 25, "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified and shall glory."

4. That "every one of us" of verse 12 is the same "us" of verse 7, of whom Paul affirms they are "the Lord's" Verse 8.

5. That there is not a little of evidence in this chapter to show that unjust persons, either dead or alive, are alluded to 2 Thess. I. 6-10. Your readers will please refer to this passage, which is too long for quotation. This is another supposed citadel of strength for Christadelphians and nearly all professing Christendom besides, the argument being, as suggested from an inconsiderate reading of the passage, that, as those pagan Thessalonians had rendered themselves liable to punishment for the persecution of the Christians, therefore, as the Lord had not appeared in their lifetime, they must be raised from the dead to make good the apostle's word. But in coming to this hasty conclusion they forget: 1st, that while many generations of wicked men may and do escape God's wrath, yet no generation is exempt from liability thereto as witness the threatnings against Israel in the days of Moses (Deut. xxviii.), which, despite their repeated backslidings and idolatry, were not fully accomplished until A. D. 70. Compare Matt. xxiii. 34, 35, illustrating God's way that "sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily," (Eccle. viii. 11.) And that He is "long-suffering," "not willing that any should perish." 2 Pet. iii. 9. 2d, That Paul kept constantly in view the coming of the Lord within the lifetime of himself and of his contemporaries (see 1st Thess. iv. 17) and 3d, That as judgment upon Christ's enemies would accompany his coming, Paul's language concerning these persecutors of the church would be most appropriate and natural.

From these considerations it will be seen that the language Paul employs regarding these pagan persecutors of the church, does not imply or include their resurrection, as their death prior to the Lord's coming is not contemplated by the apostle, the sense of the passage demanding their continuance in life till the judgment overtakes them, because the "vengeance" of verse 8 is "on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel," which can only be said of living sentient beings, dead persons being incapable of either knowledge or obedience.

Heb x. 26-29. This, I believe, is considered another powerful passage in favor of post-resurrectional punishment; but if we can divest our minds of what the apostle has not even hinted at, viz.: the resurrection of the dead, and in its place supply what he has in view, viz.: the coming of the Lord, (see verse 25) in relation to the living generation, then this passage also must be discarded by the advocates of the resurrection of the unjust.

1st Pet. iv. 17. "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel?"

The next verse explains the meaning of the foregoing one, viz.: "If the righteous scarcely be saved where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" the "righteous" being synonomous with "the house of God" who are saved at the Lord's coming after judgment in this life. To make it plainer I find—

1. That the resurrection of the dead is not under consideration.

2. That the coming of the Lord expressed as "the end of all things is at hand" (verse 7) was in view, an account of which they are exhorted to "be sober and watch unto prayer."

3. That the "judgment" alluded to in verse 17 refers to their "sufferings" as "christians." See verses 12, 13, 14, and 16.

4. That these sufferings or judgment is shown to be in this life and not subsequent to a resurrection.

5. That the apostle having ultimately in view the coming of the Lord contrasted the relative positions of the living church, and the living ungodly and sinner when Christ would be revealed in flaming fire, etc.

2 Pet. iii. 9. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgement to be punished."

"Unto the day of judgement" should read "unto a day of judgment," (see Diaglott) which makes a very great difference; while "the day" directs persons mind's involuntarily to the great day of judgment yet future. A day of judgment means any day of judgment, which is the truth which Peter wishes to impress upon those to whom he writes. That the judgments he refers to are upon men in this life he shows fully by the several citations which he makes from the writings of Moses to illustrate what he means. Judgments that not only overthrew the "unjust" "reserved" unto these "days," but in each case "delivered the godly out of temptation": vide: the overthrow of the "angels" (Korah Dathan and Abiram and 250 princes of the congregation) and at the same time the deliverance of Moses and Aaron. Num. xvi; the "bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly," but which very flood "saved Noah, a preacher of righteousness" by destroying his enemies, who doubtless would have destroyed him but for this timely intervention of Jehovah; the overthrowing Sodom and Gomorrah, "making them an example unto those that after should live ungodly" and at the same time "delivered just Lot vexed (and consequently tempted or tried) with the filthy conversation (or conduct) of the wicked"; all made illustrations of Peter's text.

But if the apostle's 9th verse must be interpreted to refer to judgment subsequent to this life, what becomes of his "examples?" (verse 6.) To introduce the resurrection here is clearly out of place. It has nothing to do with the apostle's argument, which is strictly confined to, and illustrated by, God's judgments upon men previous to death.

In further vindication of my position, I refer your readers to the first verse of this chapter, which reveals the sort of characters of whom the church were warned: "false teachers" "who privily bring in damnable heresies" (who were the anti-types of the "false prophets" of the previous dispensation) "and bring upon themselves swift destruction." When? I ask. After they are raised from the dead? Surely not. Yet this is the answer a Christadelphian is compelled to give, if he would be consistent in maintaining his interpretation of the 9th verse.

Is it not evident, that, in order to preserve the harmony of the apostle's argument throughout, and to preserve the "type" in the anti-type, the judgment or judgments he refers to to come upon the "unjust" must be accomplished upon men in this life.

It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgement than for that city. Matt. x. 15. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation and shall condemn it. Matt. xii. 41.

These passages are also quoted in support of a resurrection of unjust persons, notwithstanding what the 44th psalm declares: "man" that "understandeth not is like the beasts that perish"; and that Jude writing specially of Sodom and Gomorrah in his 7th verse says they "are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."

But what do they really teach?

1. The cities and the generation among whom Christ and the apostles preached were much more highly favored than either Sodom, Gomorrah or Nineveh.

2. That in the case of Sodom and Gomorrah, when their "day" of judgment came upon them, it was of a merciful character, (being overthrown as in a moment. Lam. iv. 6) because of their ignorance, compared to the "day" of judgment which would come on those cities who rejected the apostle's testimony—a judgment which would be of a lingering character, one of prolonged agony. Such as finally befel them.

3. That the recollection that the men of Nineveh "repented at the preaching of Jonas" and were thereby saved from destruction, would thus "rise in judgment" with or against that "adulterous generation" who rejected the "greater that Jonas," when the "day of judgment" would have come upon them, as come it did, when their city was besieged and finally destroyed, over one million Jews perishing, after enduring untold miseries and agonies, added to which would doubtless be the recollection of our Lord's warning. How such thoughts at such a time would condemn them! and how amply must our Lord's words have been fulfilled.

Matt. x. 32, 33. "Whosoever therefore shall confess (or deny) me before men, him will I also confess (or deny) before my Father which is in heaven."

As Christ is the "advocate" or "great high priest" of and appearing in heaven for, those only who confess him, so he is represented as denying those who deny him, which is done when he ceases to be our advocate.

No question of resurrection is involved. It simply relates to our present position in relation to Christ in heaven as "high priest over his house."

Matt. xii. 36. "Every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

How is this to be understood? If literally, it involves some outward conclusions.

In the first place "men" must be understood in a wide sense, much wider than any Christadelphian contemplates in view of the resurrection of such Christadelphians believing that the "unjust" to be raised are with some few specified exceptions, exclusively those who have made shipwreck of faith. Again, the literal interpretation arraigns just and unjust before the judgment seat, and compels a literal narration, and, consequently "remembrance" of "every idle word" not only of the unjust, but also of the just of whom it is declared "their sins and iniquities will I remember no more" Heb. x. 17, which accords with what we gather from 1st John I. 9, "If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." I might also urge the strangeness of the spectacle presented of say thousands of millions of human beings rehearsing the story of their lives, more particularly their "idle words."

On the other hand, a figurative interpretation dispels the above untenable conclusions, and presents to our minds that "everything is naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do," and that as "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil," so "every idle word" is taken account of and judgment rendered: whether immediately or deferred to a later period of a man's life.

I see no necessity for introducing the question of resurrection, which I am satisfied had no place in our Lord's mind at the time, and which will be seen to be unnecessary to a full and correct understanding of the passage.

The parables of our Lord—those of them that speak of the time of reward and judgment are made to do duty when the resurrection of the unjust is being contended for; but a very little consideration will shew the erroneousness of such a conclusion. As I remarked at the opening, Christ, in his addresses ever had in view the LIVING generation at his coming. How far I am borne out in taking this position will be seen from the following:

1. In the parable of the sower (Matt. xiii. 28) the servants ask the householder "Will thou then that we go and gather them (the tares) up." Verse 29, "But he said nay. * * * Let both grow together until the harvest, etc., which could only be said of the LIVING.

2. In the parable of the net cast into the sea, in the same chapter: also of "the laborers in the vineyard," (Matt. xx) the LIFE picture is presented. I invite your readers to read this last parable, and discover, if they can, any allusion to the dead, especially the unjust dead,

3. The parable of the "householder" "which planted a vineyard and let it out to husbandmen" (chap. xxi.), is another LIFE picture. The husbandmen are represented in the 41st verse as being alive, working in the vineyard when the Lord comes and destroys them. So also is the LIFE picture presented in the parable of the "king which made a marriage for his son," (chap. xxii.) also in the parable of the "ten virgins," and that of the nobleman in chapter xxv. I repeat, in all these utterances of our Lord, not an allusion is made to the dead either just or unjust, nor can they in any legitimate manner be included. If we would know about the dead just or unjust we must enquire of the portions of scripture which make special reference thereto.

Then why make our Lord responsible for what he has not spoken. Let us adhere closely to the text of his words and we will find no support for the resurrection of either just or unjust in any of his parables.

Another universally mis-applied passage is John v. 28, 29. It is made to do duty for Christadelphians and those who hold with them to a resurrection of only a portion of of the unsaved among men, as well as for those who argue for a resurrection of all mankind—the latter to my mind with more consistency than the former. Strange to say, the passage can be claimed by neither, as I shall endeavor to show. The Lord Jesus had just cured the impotent man, it being the Sabbath day. The Jews found fault with him because he had done it on the Sabbath.

Jesus then answered them in a parable, his invariable practice when speaking to Pharisees and their disciples concerning the mysteries of the kingdom. Luke viii. 10.

This parable teaches those who (unlike the Pharisees) have an understanding of God's word, that (verse 17) as God the Father "worked" in Judah, so also the Son working with the Father, not only caused the "lame to walk" as in the case of the impotent man, thus quickening into life what had been physically dead, but (verse 21) raised up, also, and quickened, the spiritually dead, which was done (verse 24) through hearing Christ's word and believing on him that sent him by which they "passed from death unto life." All this was occurring daily among "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" to whom alone Christ was sent. Thus, some in Israel who had been spiritually "dead in trespasses and sins" were "quickened" by the "hearing" of God's word, and so came forth out of their former death-state into a state of spiritual life. But, rising in his argument, he not only shows (verse 25) that this condition of things "now is" (referring to the time then present) but that (verses 28, 29) the hour is coming (at the coming of the Lord to restore Israel) in the which all (Israel, including the ten tribes) that are in the (national and spiritual) graves, shall hear his voice (in the countries in which they are nationally dead and buried) and shall come forth, (out of these national graves,) see Isaiah lxvi. 20; Ezek. xx. 34) they that have done good unto a resurrection of life (represented in the spared remnant, Zech. xiii. 9; xiv. 2,) and they that have done evil unto a resurrection of condemnation (represented in the "rebels and them that transgress against me" who shall be "purged out," (see Ezek. xx. 38, also Zech. xiii. 8 and xiv. 2).

Ezekiel gives us a similar prediction (chapter xxxvii.) excepting the element of judgment. He represents Israel as dry bones, devoid of life or being, becoming clothed with sinews, flesh and skin, and finally breath being breathed into them, causing them to live and stand up "upon their feet a very great army," and Ezekiel is told that these "bones" represent "the whole house of Israel" who say "our bones are dead, our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts"—"having no hope and without God in the world," dead and buried among the nations. But God promises to deliver them from this, forlorn condition, see verse 11: "I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves and bring you into the land of Israel," (verse 12,) "and ye shall know that I am the Lord when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, verse 24, and shall put my spirit in you and ye shall live."

Had the spirit, by Ezekiel, not interpreted the meaning of this vision of dry bones, and shown that it represented the living house of Israel in a nationally, spiritually dead and buried condition, no doubt this would have been used as another proof text of "the resurrection of the dead" seeing how ignorantly and superficially the Scriptures are read. Now, let any one read John v. 25 to 29, and Ezek. xxxvii. and he cannot but be persuaded, I think, that Christ and Ezekiel are referring to the same great ingathering of Israel in the time yet future. Such, at all events, is my belief; a belief in which I am not altogether singular. If I am right, the conclusions arrived at, show the "parable or dark saying" of our Lord to be of an exclusively Israelitish application, to whom (Israel) alone the Lord was sent, and entirely shuts out any interpretation that would apply it to Gentiles in any form whatever, and consequently, the Christadelphians, who eagerly claim it as especially applicable to the just and unjust in the church, (composed of Jews and Gentiles), and those who wish to have all mankind that have ever lived (including infants a day old) arraigned at the judgment seat, must abandon John v. 28, 29 as lending any support to their doctrines after depriving the theory of the resurrection of the unjust of so many supposed supports, (called by me "misapplied Scriptures") from the New Testament, it is difficult to discover outside of these passages sufficient, or indeed any foundation for the doctrine. The only passage, which, as it stands in our version, is a plain and emphatic declaration of the resurrection of the unjust is found, Acts xxiv. 15, where Paul is made to say, "and have hope toward God, which they (Pharisees) themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the the dead, both of the just and unjust."

Now, if the correctness of this form of Paul's words could not be successfully challenged, I confess there would be very great difficulty in understanding what the Scriptures teach concerning the resurrection; but it so happens that, besides being in direct conflict with Paul's teaching elsewhere, (see Rom. viii. 11; 1 Cor. xv.; Phil. iii. 11,) and also that of our Lord, (Luke xx.; John vi. 39, 40, 44, 54,) it also conflicts no less directly with the belief of the Pharisees, the very class with whom Paul declares himself in harmony. To those who will take the trouble to enquire, (and for no others do I write,) it is an easily ascertainable fact that the Pharisees, to whom Paul alludes, believed in a resurrection of the righteous only. This conclusion may be reached from the fact that, whatever knowledge they (the Pharisees) possessed concerning the dead, was derived from the writings of Moses their teacher—Christ being ignored by them—and Moses nowhere teaches the resurrection of the unjust (the resurrection of the righteous being only taught by implication). On this point I challenge contradiction. Moreover, the testimony of one of themselves (Josephus) is to the same effect. I refer the enquirer to Book xviii., chap. i, section 3, of Josephus' Antiquities of the Jews, wherein we read as follows: "They (the Pharisees) also believe that the souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards or punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life; and the latter are to be detained in an everlasting prison, but that the former shall have power to revive and live again."

Thus, Moses from his complete silence, and Josephus by his distinct utterances, give the most positive denial to the belief, by the Pharisees, of the resurrection of the unjust; and when considered in connection with Paul's own statements elsewhere, that "the dead" (without referring to their character as, see 1 Cor. xv., but in answer to the broad question, "how are the dead raised up?") are raised "in incorruption," "in glory," "in power," "a spiritual body," etc., as well as with those of Christ, that "they are the children of God" and "equal unto the angels," "being children of the resurrection," see Luke xx., it is to me impossible to come to any other conclusion than that Paul could not, and did not utter the words "both of the just and of the unjust," attributed to him in Acts xxiv. 15, which we have seen the Pharisees did not "allow" (while at the same time they did "allow" the "resurrection of the dead," but only of the righteous,) and these words must consequently be considered spurious. If any reader is disposed to take opposite ground, I should like to see his argument,

Having considered what are regarded as among the strongest supports, in the Scriptures, to the theory of the resurrection of the unjust, and endeavored, honestly, to place them before your readers in what I firmly believe to be their true Scriptural import, I leave the subject, for the present, at least, convinced that a correct understanding of this most important doctrine is essential to the harmony of Scripture teaching concerning the punishment of evil doers, and especially to see therein the literal truth of such warnings as 2 Peter ii. 6, wherein a judgment upon men in this life is set forth "as an example unto those that should after live ungodly."

In conclusion, I ask a patient hearing of the arguments advanced, Bible in hand (our sole guide). I am entirely convinced of the truth they are intended to promote, viz: That to emerge from the dust in order to appear at the judgment seat of Christ is the privilege of the righteous alone.

Neptune's Cup.

The Rev. Joseph Cook, in one of his recent lectures, spoke of the difficulty of believing in a world without a directing Mind, and used the following beautiful illustration: "Almost imperceptible creatures in the sea build in the Indian Ocean a goblet. It is called 'Neptune's Cup.' Sometimes it has a height of six feet and a breadth of three. It is erected solely by myriads of polypi. They have no consultation with each other. Each works in a separate cell; each is as much shut off from communication with every other as an inmate of a cell in the wards of Charlestown prison yonder is from his associates. They build the stem to a proper height, and then they begin to widen it. Everything proceeds according to a plan. Is the plan theirs, or does it belong to a Power above them, and that acts through them? As these isolated creatures build Neptune's cup, so the bioplasts, isolated from each other in the living tissues which they produce, build the rose and the violet and all other flowers, the pomegranate and the cedars, the oak and palm and all trees, the eagle and all birds, the lion and all animals, the human brain and all men. Neptune's cup alone strikes us dumb. But what shall we say of the mystic structures built by the bioplasts? There is a cup; it is a fact; and the eye is another Neptune's cup; and all this universe is another Neptune's cup: and out of such cups I for one, drink the glad wine of Theism!"

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a beauty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion, or conformities to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Peculiar People--No. 2.

BY J. F. WAGONER.

The Relation they Sustain to Human Governments.

Can they vote and hold office, or become a part of a human government, without disloyalty to Christ? The question is not, "Has God selected of his servants a few to whom he gave positions in human governments?" but "Has he made arrangements for believers of this age to affiliate with human governments?" To this question a very fitting reply is given by the Savior, and to those who profess to be governed by his teachings it is sufficient to settle the question as to our relation to the governments of earth. "The kings of the Gentiles exercise authority over them....but ye shall not be so."

It is not difficult to see why the Lord drew this broad line of distinction between his followers and the governments of earth. God's people were to be a peculiar people, zealously devoted to his service, and it is a heaven-born truth that no man can serve two masters. Therefore they were required to take no part in human governments. To say that God has in past ages made rulers of some of his servants, will not justify a believer in holding office under human rulers now, especially when positively forbidden by the Son of God to do so. It is claimed that Christians should participate in politics in order to have good government. I wish to say to those who are solicitous for good government, that the only hope of a righteous ruler is the promise of God to send his Son to rule the world in righteousness. Do not those mock God who attempt to do the great work that he has promised to accomplish through his Son?

We have another striking lesson taught by Jesus to his followers, showing their relation to the governments of men. When the inquiry was made as to who were proper subjects to pay tribute, Jesus demanded a current coin of the country, saying, "Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him, Cæsar's. Then said Jesus, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's." Thus, while forming no part of the government, the believer is required to pay tax. This is right; for the government agrees, in consideration of this, to guarantee protection to the rights of property and person, and in this country the additional advantage of free schooling for all. Let it be remembered that the believer belongs to God. Although placed in the world, he does not belong to it, and whatever obligations he owes to the world must be as faithfully discharged as those he owes to his God.

Now, why is it that while every possible condition of life has rules to govern it, no rules are found to govern the conduct of a Christian magistrate or ruler? Simply because God did not contemplate any such position to be filled by believers. The boundary line separating Europe and America is not more clearly defined than is the line separating God's people from the world--both religiously and politically. How can you who have formed unholy alliances with the corrupt political parties of the day, hope for positions in God's kingdom?

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Has the above language any meaning? If so, what is it? It is true a literal application of the above language would develop a class of people who would be indeed a peculiar kind. How odd they would appear! How many strange remarks would be made about such people. Of such it has been said, "You will not even commune with other religious bodies." No, for I have no fellowship with unbelievers. "You will not vote, therefore you should not be allowed to live in this government." No, I propose to let the world run its own machinery. I am chosen out of the world, therefore the world hates me; but I remember that it hated my Master, and for the same cause; therefore I expect such treatment.

The wisdom of Jesus as a teacher is shown in the instructions given to his followers. He never counselled opposition to the existing laws of the country. Hence, to avoid a conflict between his faithful followers and the governments of men, he commands believers to be subject to the powers that be. A human law or command may be unjust; it may even conflict with a divine command. In this case the believer must suffer the penalty. This will satisfy the law, and at the same time be yielding submission to the divine requirement. Take a case as an illustration: Suppose the government requires my services as a soldier. Obedience to the divine rule forbids me to engage in the calling of a soldier. But the government also says its requirement must be obeyed or it will inflict upon me a punishment. Now, to suffer the infliction will satisfy both the human and divine requirements. A human government might require us to renounce our faith, or, as in the case of the early teachers of Christianity, might command us to teach no more in the Name. Should not our answer be as fearless as that given by Peter: "Whether it is better to obey God or man, judge ye"?

It is a sublime sight to see a person so devoted to God as to be willing to suffer the loss of property, or even life itself, rather than prove disloyal to the Master. Such exhibitions of moral heroism have been shown by the peculiar people in former times. Shall we not, if occasion demands, display as much courage now? To be a Christian now requires as much moral courage as at any former period of the world's history.

Another reason why Christians can not mingle with the political parties of the day is the corrupt influences exerted by those who engage in the bitter strife for office. Bribery and corruption have become almost essential to the success of those who aspire to office. The history of politics in the United States has been for years but a recital of schemes of dishonesty through which political preferment has been reached. Money is poured out with a lavish hand, the baser passions are appealed to, the different classes of voters are bought and paid for according to the price fixed by each class for their services. The venders of intoxicating liquors are plied freely with money to be invested in free drinks, to secure a certain class of voters. Still another class demand a higher price for their votes. Now, how can those who are commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil deliberately engage in that which is not simply an appearance of evil, but is evil continually? for every politician knows the statements made above are strictly true.

The talk of some about Christians reforming politicians by mingling with them is as absurd as to try to cleanse a vast pool of stagnant water by introducing a clear spring branch into its filthy bosom. There is a beautiful tributary of the Missouri river that hurls its clear limpid waters into the muddy current of the great filthy stream, and for a little distance the sparkling waters can be traced, then all is absorbed by the "big muddy." So, too, would be any effort at reforming the evils in the political world.

Let us not forget, brethren, that the present age is not for the reformation of the world, but for the purpose of selecting and testing a ruling element to be used in the age to come, when God will deal with the nations of earth through his Son, "whom he hath appointed heir of all things." Do not forget that God has said that the last days of this dispensation would be characterized by excessive wickedness; that there would be a reproduction of the violent wickedness of the days of Noah, and the vile licentiousness of the doomed cities of the plain, and as Noah could not save the antediluvians, nor righteous Lot rescue the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, neither can we save the unholy mass around us, but we may by a godly example snatch a few brands from the mighty throng now pressing onward to the dark waters of death. The times are ominous. Mighty movements in the religious world have a strange significance. A monster meeting of clergymen and laymen of all sects is now advertised to convene in New York city, the last of October, to discuss the question of the second coming of Christ. At the preparatory meeting Dr. Tyng said he was firmly convinced that Christ would come again to earth and establish here his kingdom. The to those faithful ones scattered here and there, let me admonish you, as a brother; stand firm in this hour of trial; the grand decision will soon take place; the great separation of the wheat from the tares will soon be made. Oh, loving Father, gather us with the faithful! Amen!

SELECTIONS.

The Future Romanism.

JOSEPH COOK.

Of necessity, however, two changes will probably be recognized by the new pope. The temporal power is not likely to be insisted upon with such untimely emphasis in the future as it has been in the past. Political interference with strong nations is likely to become unfashionable, even with Vatican Romanism. In view of these changes which are so certain to occur that I need not stop to show that they are probably events in the future, it is pertinent to ask, What are we not doing that we could do for the Romish nations of the globe? Where are they? What is their condition? Glances from St. Peter's around the planet and compare Catholic countries with Protestant.

Put into contrast, first, Italy and Prussia. North Germany, as compared with Italy, has many physical disadvantages--a poor soil, an inclement climate. We know what the German universities are, as compared with the Italian; what German literature is, as compared with the Italian in the last hundred years. I do not forget King Bomba. I do not forget how Italy has been sliced and peeled and seared. But everything considered, has Italy suffered more since Luther's time than Germany did under the Thirty Years' War? Have cannon-wheels and sabers injured her more since the period of Reformation than they have injured Germany? Has she been the battle-field of all the European wars as Germany has been? Where are the demoralizing influences in Italy to account for her inferiority to Prussia as a moral, intellectual, and political force on the globe? I was assured in Rome by a most scholarly and painstaking Italian statistician that when the papal states, in which the pope had his own way, fell into the hands of Victor Emmanuel, a less proportion of the adult inhabitants could read and write than in the darkest provinces of Spain.

Do you say that the climate is against the semi-tropical territories of the Latin races? Very well; cross the ocean. There is Canada. It has two ends, an eastern and a western; and the climate does not differ vastly in the two sections--but the state of society does! It has been my fortune to be mobbed on the St. Lawrence for temperately asserting in defense of a Protestant colporteur, who was my companion, that I did not believe that a priest could raise the dead. I have traveled, I suppose, a hundred miles on foot along the banks of the St. Lawrence, and not been able to find a single cottage of an habitant--this was twenty years ago--in which I could have obtained an amanuensis to write a letter to my friends if I had been too sick to write one myself, or have found a Bible in the vernacular to give. One is surprised in Canada to-to find the rural population very largely in a state of prolonged childhood, just such as characterizes the agricultural portions of Italy, south Germany, and Austria. In western Canada we have the brain of the dominion, and a heart and enterprise that are reaching out their arms to clasp Manitoba, and the fat valley of the Saskatchawan and the Pacific. Western Canada is a Protestant region, and its cooperative force, its progressive valor, as contrasted with eastern Canada, result very largely from its differ nt church life.

What do we see in the City of Mexico at this moment? Scores of ecclesiastical buildings left vacant, and to be obtained for a song by Protestants. The foremost Catholic preacher of Mexico lately took to his residence outside of the city a pamphlet written by a Protestant bishop, with whom I have had the honor to converse. The Roman priest sat down in his summer-house to read this attack on his faith. He was an honest man. He had founded his opinions on tradition more than on the Scriptures. When he found an eloquent plea for Protestantism put before him there in the solitude, by a man who lately had been threatened with assassination, and had written this pamphlet as his last word to the world, the priest was smitten with the conviction that he had been teaching errors. He became a Protestant. "The pope will be converted next," said the astonished Roman town. The priest entered the largest Protestant church in the city, filled it with a vast audience, and with power and dignity rarely matched, began to speak to all Mexico through the press for Protestantism.

Who does not see that in the present posture of the Latin and Saxon nations, so far as they are touched by Romanism, we have a loud call for the inspiriting of all Protestant endeavor in the Latin nations? Where are the men to go to Mexico to occupy to the full the opportunity opening there? Where are the men that can fill up the openings in lower Canada? Where are the men to teach a pure gospel in Portugal and in Spain? Where are the men that can carry the light of Protestantism to the very edges of the windows of the Vatican, open the Scriptures under the dome of St. Peter's, and show Rome what she never has seen, a Protestant church of great power doing its duty thoroughly?

Go to the secretaries who are watching the Latin races in their relations to Romanism. Ascertain the secret whispers of experts on this theme. It is that Romanism at this moment is discouraged on account of the number of defections from Romanism in the Latin races. In Spain, in Portugal, in Italy, in Mexico, there are great stretches of popular, to say nothing of educated, defection. The word of the hour with the Jesuit party is, "Let us occupy the Saxon zone. Let us remember what support we have had from perverts in the last fifty years. A Newman, a Bronson, a Cardinal Manning, a Tractarian party in Oxford and elsewhere have been our most effective apologists. Let us remember that the future church of the globe is in the hands of Saxon nations. As we are failing to hold our own zone of the Latin centers, let us make an attack, not only upon the religious faith but upon the political quiet of Germany, of Scotland, of England, and of the United States. We Jesuits have had a bad name since Pascal wrote his Provencal letters; but we once knew how to manage courts, and shall we not learn how to manage political parties? Once we led because we were better teachers than other men; shall we not lead now because we are better politicians? Who does not know that the world is more and more governed by popular suffrage? Who does not know that two hundred million people are behind us, and have hitherto followed our political as well as religious bidding? Who does not know that if a politician sees in our hands the power to mass the Romish vote, he is ours, unless he is more honest than most politicians are?' This soliloquy of the Jesuit power is heard oftener on the Tiber than we think. It seems to have been overheard by Bismarck and Gladstone, but not by America. It is the explanation of the pope's remark that America is the hope of Romanism. Its success is expected here through the political worth of the Romish vote in the quarrels of American parties.

There is no way of intimidating politicians of the unscrupulous sort except by massing votes, and there is no way to mass votes except by agitation. We must therefore occasionally, difficult as this topic is, speak very frankly as to the divided allegiance of Romanists. The creed of Pope Pius IX. is put for subscription before every priest and every bishop. Every convert to Romanism must signify his assent to it. One of its sections reads: "I do give allegiance to the bishop of Rome," and the sense is: "I do give political as well as religious allegiance."

Let us remember, however, that a great body of the Romish church in republican countries is educated by general customs into distrust of priestly rule. In the city of New Haven the question of the Bible in the schools has lately come to the front; and perhaps the most significant trait of the agitation there is that many cultured Romanists and the leading members of the faculty of Yale College stand together against a few erratic lawyers, a few skeptical politicians, and nondescript oyster-dealers in favor of retaining certain religious exercises in the schools. If the New Haven controversy repeats itself largely throughout New England, it is not unlikely that the cultured Roman element will often be found joined with our foremost Protestant scholars in favor of a certain amount of religious training, or at least of stated moral instruction in our schools, and of the use of the Bible as the supreme text-book in morals.

Repeopling Palestine.

The condition and prospects of the Holy Land, in the future as in the past, will be matters of more than ordinary interest to the intelligent of mankind. The hard lot which for more than twenty centuries has been the fate of this country makes people instinctively look for something better and brighter in its history. Many good and wise men have found words of promise and comfort in the Bible, which by the mouths of the prophets have been repeated again and again respecting the destiny of the Jews. Nor are the signs of the times altogether devoid of indications of the fulfillment of prophecy. The Jews are flocking into Palestine in such numbers that they count twice as many now as they did a few years ago. In 1873 and 1874 they came to Saphed, one of the holy cities of Galilee, to such an extent that to accommodate them house building had to be engaged in by night as well as by day. In some parts of the country whole villages have been formed by this influx of strangers.

It is noticed that many of these Israelites are from Russia, from which country they have been driven by the military laws of the empire which now require service from them. In Poland, especially, they have felt the oppression of the Greek church which has not yet learned to tolerate any religion but its own. As a consequence many of the people have left the land, some going to one clime and some to another--the Jew, following his inclinations, starts for the home of his father.

If he has ever before visited the land, he will find a considerable change in its laws and civilization. Prior to the Crimean war none but subjects of Turkey could hold land, and men had but little inducement to settle there. By an imperial rescript this has been entirely changed, so that a citizen of any country, and of any religion, can now purchase and hold real estate. As a result a revival of commercial prosperity has been felt in Jerusalem, many houses having been built outside the walls. The Jew used to be confined to his own quarter in the city, but now he can build wherever his fancy selects.

Civilization has greatly improved in the last few years in Palestine. Formerly one had no protection to life or property. The Arab robbers would frequently for the Jordan and plunder and levy black mail upon any one who, by hard luck, was thrown in their way. The farmer, if such a term can be applied to any vocation in that land, would have his harvests all stolen or ruined in one night by these mounted thieves. The Jew in Jerusalem, no matter how respectable, could not pass through the bazaar without being insulted by some cowardly and insolent Turk. This haughty bully would sometimes take off his shoe, throw it some distance from him and then call upon any passing Jew like a dog to fetch it to him. If there changed to be man enough left to repel the indignity, his life might pay the penalty. Everywhere fanaticism and violence were the rule, but now all this is changed.

The facilities for travel are increasing every year for the number of tourists who roam through this land, so rich in its historical associations. These travelers take each with himself the reputation of the government from which he comes, and this carries protection and civilization. One need have but little fear of the danger that a trip of this kind would subject him to, for he will be as secure there as in his own land.

In addition to these facts, is the important one that, by treaty obligation, England has assumed the responsibility of administering the government, which means equal rights to all, the humblest as well as the highest.

These considerations, though briefly stated, are sufficient to show that the prospects of the Holy Land are brightening, and who knows but that the dark clouds of adversity which have so long remained over it may be dissipated. Israel be regathered home after a long exile, and Jerusalem again become the joy of the whole earth.

Proof-Text Preaching.

It seems to us a good plan to accompany our preaching or lecture notices with pertinent citations, in brief, of the passages of Scripture on which we may intend to rely, that the people who attend and others may have the inducement and means of seeing by searching out the Bible foundation on which we stand. In that way we help them to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." Brother Magruder sends us one of his notices on that plan, as follows:

BIBLE LECTURE.

The Things of the Kingdom of God; or, "What Shall Come to Pass Hereafter." By request, the undersigned will deliver a lecture, if the Lord will, on the above subject at Russell's school house, on the Berryville turnpike, in Clarke county, on the 29th inst., the fifth Sunday, at 11 o'clock a. m. Seats free.

Proof-texts: Dan. ii. 28, 29, 44, 45; vii. 13, 14, 13, 22, 27; Amos iii. 7; Zech. xiv. 9; Jer. iii. 17; Isa. ix. 6; xl.; xxiv. 23; Psa. ii.; xxii. 27, 28; lxii.; Mat. ii. 1, 6; iv. 23; vi. 10, 13; Mark i. 14; xv. 20, 32; Luke i. 30, 31; viii. 1; ix. 2, 6; Jno. i. 49; xviii. 36, 37; xix. 12, 19; Acts ii. 30, 31; xvii. 7, 19, 20, 31; 1 Thess. i. 10; iii. 13, 13; Rev. v. 10; xi. 15, 19; xx. 4, 7. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

We take it that the great need of the hour is better living. Neither the world nor the church needs learning, or eloquence, or zeal, or sanctified wealth half so much as it needs the power of holy lives. We need a more perfect agreement between profession and practice, between what men in in the church claim to be and what they actually are. Nothing is more hurtful to the cause than the want of such agreement.--The Church Advocate.

God promised forgiveness to your repentance; but he has not promised a to-morrow to your procrastination.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 16, 1878.

To Every Subscriber.

"Letter to a Friend" has been out of print and has not appeared in our book list for nearly two years. "Age to Come not Heresy," "The Perverted Parable," and "Can You Believe", three of our four-page tracts, are also out of print. We have the plates for Letter to a Friend and for Can You Believe, and all that is necessary to put these truly valuable tracts once more into circulation is a few extra dollars from friends of the truth.

THE RESTITUTION, as its patrons can readily see, depends almost entirely upon its subscription list for support. Secular papers always have much space devoted to paying advertisements, and usually have a job office in connection, so that the paper can live aside from its subscription. The cost of publishing THE RESTITUTION is in the neighborhood of sixty dollars a week, with its present list of subscribers, and it has been calculated again and again, that if each would promptly pay his two dollars or his one dollar as soon as it is due, the amount thus received throughout the year would insure the publication of every issue, and leave a little margin besides. And then, if every believer in the faith of the gospel should come to the support of our paper, the weekly edition might as well be five thousand as two, to say nothing of the two-fold wider spread of the saving truths it maintains.

All may not comprehend the meaning of the mark on their newspaper labels. We explain: 1 Jny 9 means that the amount last remitted pays your subscription to January 1, 1879; and so of any other dates you may see, the first figure or figures denote the day of the month, and the last the year, when your subscription expires. Where more than one paper goes to an office, the label will be found pasted on the paper itself, but in the case of single papers, the label is put on the wrapper, and should be always observed.

The paper is on a firm foundation, and the management will see to it that no indebtedness will be created, so that persons sending money may understand that full value will be given, the omissions during any one year being always made up to subscribers.

AGENT.

THANKS to Brother H. Heyes for late London papers.

WE have been compelled to defer much that should have appeared in this number. We are perfectly flooded with communications just now.

BROTHER J. E. LESLIE, of Brooklyn, N. Y. states in a card that Brother Stephenson is expected to visit New York at the time of the conference.

WILL friends do all they can for the paper? We live in an important era, and a crisis is impending. Our health is better, and we are willing to both labor and sacrifice.

THE list of signatures, given elsewhere, to the call for a conference of the believers in the second coming of the Savior, proves how strong this hope is in the minds of many. The signers include clergymen and laymen, college professors and others of all denominations, and the list of papers to be read promises a discussion which cannot fail to be instructive.

As numbers of our friends feel an interest in the results of the coming conference of ministers of the different denominations to consider the subject of Christ's second coming and kindred topics, we have given considerable space to communications in regard to this meeting. We do not know what the result may be, but hope light may spread on the soon-coming crisis.

THERE is but little abatement of the yellow fever in the South, and it has been spreading into the country. At the last report there had been 11,400 cases at New Orleans, and 3,440 deaths. At Memphis there have been more than 9,000 cases, and upwards of 2,700 deaths. At Vicksburg more than 3,000 cases, with something over 1,000 deaths. The mortality has been in proportion to the cases in smaller places.

PEACE is far from being assured in the Orient. It is confidently asserted that the British troops in India have crossed the borders of Afghanistan. It is impossible to forecast the magnitude of a storm that may come from this cloud no bigger than a "man's hand." It is said there are over 230,000,000 Mussulmans in India, and that their sympathies are with the Ameer of Afghanistan, as well as Russia's. The situation is complicated and fraught with danger to England.

Trine Immersion.

One of the leading and prominent positions taken by Elder Thurman in his pamphlet, and by his brethren holding the doctrine of trine immersion, is that the Greek word βαπτιζω—baptidzo—is a frequentative verb, and, from its very etymology, necessitates a repetition of the action, pointed out by the root meaning, an indefinite number of times; or "bapto means to dip, and baptidzo means repeted dippings" to quote Mr. Thurman's own words. That there is lexical authority that some verbs ending in zo may have an intensive, initiative, transformative, frequentative or quantitive signification will not be disputed. We would, however, suggest that lexicons do not make language, but language makes lexicons. For a disputant to prove anything from a word's being used in some particular sense, it is imperatively necessary to bring unmistakable examples of its being used in the sense claimed as the proper and legitimate one. After giving our readers the results of the best grammatical teaching and criticism on the derivation of certain classes of Greek verbs, we will particularly canvass Mr. Thurman's supposed proofs of his position. The following is the grammatical canon of the Greek language on the derivation of verbs. We use English letters, premising that the final vowel is always the Omega, or long O, of the Greeks:

"All derivative verbs end in—ao,—eo,—io,—oo,—yo,—euo,—azo,—izo,—ozo,—uzo,—aino,—uno,—airo,—eiro. All these verbs must be considered as denominatives; for though the stem-substantive for several verbs of this kind is not in use, yet the analogy of the other verbs requires that a substantive should be assumed as the stem of these also." Kuhner's Greek Grammar, p. 280.

According to this canon baptidzo is not a verb derived directly from bapto with the force of a frequentative, but a denominative from some old stem-substantive, and, as a verb, simply denotes that the noun-act has become an noun-acted. Thus, if some old primitive tri-literal root βαπ—bap—meant a dipping, or submergence, the word βαπτιζω—baptidzo—would mean simply to dip or to submerge, by translating the passive meaning of the substantive into the active meaning of the verb.

To illustrate this principle of the derivation of denominative verbs, we will adduce a few examples; from the substantive elpis, which means hope, is derived the verb elpidzo, to hope; from horos, a boundary or limit, is derived the verb horidzo, to bound or limit; from aites, a beggar is derived the verb aitidzo to beg.

In the imitative sense of this termination—idzo—we have from Hellen, a Greek, the verb hellenidzo to conform to Greek language and manners; from Medos, a Median, the verb Medidzo, signifying to become like the Medes. To come still closer to the meaning of the particular class of denominatives that terminate in idzo, we give the rule of Kuhner. He says: "Verbs in idzo often (and generally) signify to make something into that which the root denotes." Thus, from Chrusos, gold, we have the verb Chruidzo to become golden; from hagnos, pure, we have the derived verb hagnidzo to make pure; and from plontos, wealth, we have the verb plontidzo, to enrich. Out of the fourteen terminations of denominative verbs, Mr. Thurman has entirely mistaken the particular termination that grammarians select as indicating frequentative action: it is not the termination—idzo but—adzo that denotes repetition. Thus, from the noun ripes we have the verb ripadzo, to fling frequently to and fro, and in the middle voice, to move to and fro, i. e., from an anxious perturbed state of mind. So, from stenos, something harmful or sorrowful, we have the verb stenadzo, to sigh much or repeatedly. So, from some old form of βαφ, which analogy would make bapos, meaning submersion, or immersion, we have the denominative baptidzo, which denotes the action of submersing. Whether the submersing, or dipping were performed one, three, seven, or more times, must be expressed by some numeral adjective, instead of inhering in the word itself. Of this something more in the sequel. Mr. Thurman informs us that the authority upon which Paul was dependent was his Greek Bible, called the Septuagint, and says:

"The commission to baptize was given by Christ, not in Greek, but Hebrew, therefore, we should first find the Hebrew word in Paul's Greek Bible. The word used by the Jews in their proselyte immersion is "tahtal," and that this is the same word which Christ employed is evident, for it is the only word in the Bible, which, when used in a literal sense is ever rendered either dip or plunge. It occurs fifteen times, once rendered "plunge," Job ix. 31, but in every other case rendered dip. In Paul's Greek Bible one of these texts is rendered baptidzo and all the rest bapto, and we have noticed that, according to the way the classical Greek scholars used the words bapto means to dip, and baptidzo means two or more dippings."

We only find three egregious mistakes in the above short extract. First, Christ did not employ the Hebrew language. In the time of Christ the Chaldee or Babylonian language was the spoken language in Judea and the Syriac in Galilee.

Horne says, Vol. I., p. 109: "The Chaldee, sometimes called by way of distinction the East-Aramean dialect, was formerly spoken in the province of Babylonia between the Euphrates and the Tigris, the original inhabitants of which cultivated this language as a distinct dialect, and communicated it to the Jews, during the Babylonian captivity. By means of the Jews it was transplanted into Palestine, when it gradually became the vernacular tongue; though it did not completely displace the old Hebrew until the time of the Maccabees."

A part of the book of Daniel, as well as a part of Ezra, is written in Chaldee. The Talmuds, some of the Targums, and some other later works were written in this tongue. It is supposed that the Apochryphal books of Tobit, Judith, the Maccabees, and the history of Josephus, were originally written in this dialect. Horne also says, "The Syriac or West-Aramean was spoken both in Syria and Mesopotamia; and after the captivity it became the vernacular in Galilee."

Now, it so happens that we have three expressions of Christ, preserved by the evangelist, in the very vernacular employed by him, and well understood by his hearers. The first is Mark v. 41, where he uses the phrase, Talitha kumi. By turning to the Syriac word Talitha, in Gutbir's lexicon, we find it defined by the Latin word puella, which means a little girl, maiden, damsel, or young woman. The verb koom, to arise, is the same both in Hebrew and Syriac. Another instance where the Syriac expression of Christ is preserved by the same evangelist, is Mark vii. 34, where Ephphatha is the word employed, and is the imperative of the conjugation Ithpual. Once more, when agonizing in the garden, in prayer to his Father, he uses the word Abba, which is the same both in Chaldee and Syriac. This Syriac word is twice used by St. Paul, Rom. viii. 15, and Gal. iv. 9, showing that the colloquial language was not Hebrew. The Scriptures, it is true, were read in Hebrew to the Jews residing in Palestine on every Sabbath day, and no doubt the more learned understood them without explanation, but not so with all. Says Horne:

"In the synagogues of the Hellenists, or Greek Jews, the law was always read in the Alexdrian or Greek version; but in those of native Jews, the law was always read in Hebrew; whence it became necessary, as soon as that language ceased to be vernacular among the Jews, to establish an interpreter, by whom the Jewish Scriptures were expounded in the Chaldee dialect, which was spoken by them after the return from the Babylonian captivity."

Paul was learned, and councils where he made his defense were composed of the instructed class, and he could with propriety address them in Hebrew; but all history is against Hebrew being the vernacular tongue; hence our Savior used the Aramean, and we have no reason to believe that his apostles, chosen from the humble ranks of life, were better versed in the language of the original Scriptures, which, as we learn, had to be explained to the worshipers in the synagogue whenever read on the Sabbath day. Unquestionably he uttered the commission in the vernacular Aramean, which is preserved in the Peshito Syriac, to which we shall have occasion to refer hereafter.

The second mistake that our author makes is in giving only fifteen times as the number of times that tah val occurs in the Hebrew of the Old Testament, and then indirectly representing that bapto and baptidzo are the only terms that Paul found in his Hebrew Bible as translations of the Hebrew word. The word טָבַל tah val—occurs as a verb sixteen times, and it is represented by forms of bapto fourteen times, by a form of baptidzo once, and by a form of μολυνω—moluno—once. This latter verb means to stain or color, and is used where it is said that Joseph's brethren "killed a kid of the goats, and dipped his coat in the blood."

Mr. Thurman seems not to have learned that tah val has, like bapto in Greek, two meanings, one of which is to dip, and the other to dye or color. Accordingly we find the derivative, tebhulim, in Ezekiel xxiii. 15, which is rendered by the Septuagint ταφεντων parabapta, which means tiarai baptai, colored tiaras, according to Gesenius, and which the Vulgate renders tiaræ tinctæ, and our version, dyed attire. The only other instance in which the word tah val is found in any form is in the proper name, Tebaliah, 1 Chron. xxvi. 11, which Gesenius translates, "Whom the Lord has immersed," i. e., "purified." The word tah val as a verb occurs in Gen. xxxvii. 31, rendered by the Greek moluno, Ex. xii. 22; Lev. iv. 6, 17; Lev. xiv. 6, 16, 51; Num. xix. 18; Ruth ii. 14; Lev. ix. 9; 1 Sam. xiv. 27; 2 Ki. viii. 15; Job ix. 31; Deut. xxxiii. 24; Joshua iii. 15; in all of which places it is rendered by certain forms of bapto; and 2 Kings v. 14, where it is rendered by a form of baptidzo. So it will be seen that the word occurs eighteen times in all its forms, and the verb is translated into Greek by three words, which fact was no doubt well understood by St. Paul.

Now we can assure Mr. Thurman that Hebrew scholars, so far from seeing any difference in the meaning of bapto, embapto, baptidzo, and the derivative nouns, baptismos, baptisma, and baptistes, that they have, in translating the Greek New Testament into Hebrew, employed the Hebrew tah val, in its varied forms, as the one term for rendering the one hundred and twenty-six occurrences of all the above Greek words, whether the reference be to "a vesture dipped in blood," or "the washing of pots, cups, tables, or brazen vessels, or the divers washings." His third mistake in its being used as a frequentative, as he endeavors to prove from examples, we will allude to hereafter.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the New Readers of The Restitution.

HEAR YE HIM.

Some have ears to hear, but they do not hear; they have eyes to see, but they do not see; and they have hearts to understand, but they do not understand. Therefore, it is necessary to exhort those who have ears to hear, to hear, to listen, to give attention, to understand.

WHOM SHALL WE HEAR?

Moses said, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me, him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. This prophecy Peter applied to Christ.

On the occasion of Christ's transfiguration a voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him."

Christ said, "Search the Scriptures." He prayed for those who should believe on him through the words of the apostles. He said to them, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Christ himself was sent to preach the Gospel. Here we have the testimony of Moses, and of Peter, and of the Father, and of Christ, that we should "hear Him." He taught us to search the Scriptures, to listen to His words and the words of the apostles.

Then we must hear Christ, whether in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, or in his own words, or the words of the apostles. My object at this time will be to inquire more particularly as to the words of Christ. What did he say? What was his theme?

When he began to preach what did he say first?

"Now after John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God; saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel."

What did he preach this gospel of the kingdom for?

That men might believe it, and repent. If we would induce men to repent and reform their lives, we should preach to them the gospel of the kingdom, as Christ did.

WHAT DID HE CONTINUE TO PREACH?

"He went throughout every village and city, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." This was the motive which he constantly urged to induce men to repent and become worthy of the kingdom of God.

WHAT DID HE SEND HIS APOSTLES TO PREACH?

"He called his twelve disciples together and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases, and he sent them to preach the kingdom of God."

WHAT DID THE APOSTLES DO?

"And they went through the towns preaching the gospel, and healing everywhere."

WHAT DID CHRIST SAY MUST BE PREACHED IN ALL THE WORLD?

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

WHAT DID HE SAY AFTER HE WAS RAISED FROM THE DEAD?

"He showed himself alive after his resurrection by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of things pertaining to the kingdom of God."

Thus, Christ began to preach the gospel of the kingdom to induce men to repent. He continued to preach the same gospel for the same object throughout all the cities and villages of Judea. He sent his apostles to preach the same gospel. He said This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, and he that believeth it shall be saved, and he that believeth it not shall be damned. And after his resurrection he was with his apostles forty days speaking of this same gospel of the kingdom of God.

Then, this gospel of the kingdom was his theme. He had no other. All that he did or said was for this one great object.

WHAT DID HE SAY WE MUST PRAY FOR FIRST?

He said when ye pray say, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." The kingdom was not only first in all of the Savior's teachings; but it must be the first object in our searching, and the first object in our prayers, after having sought first the kingdom of God.

WHAT RELATION DO WE SUSTAIN TO IT?

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"

Then, the highest relation we sustain to the kingdom in this life is that of heirs. We are now heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to give us at some future time.

DID CHRIST PROMISE THE KINGDOM TO HIS DISCIPLES?

He did. He said, "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "As my Father hath appointed unto me a kingdom, so, have I appointed unto you."

WHAT KINGDOM DID HE PROMISE TO THE LITTLE FLOCK?

After he returns from heaven, and after he has taken the throne of his glory, he will say to them on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom?" What kingdom? Was it the kingdom that was established at the day of Pentecost? Was it the kingdom set up in the heart? Was it the church? Was it a good place in heaven? No. Nothing is said about these kingdoms, concerning which there has been so much controversy in the church; no mention is made of them. If it was none of these kingdoms, what kingdom was it? He said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." What kingdom was prepared at that time? The earth was to be the territory of the kingdom. Man was to be the subject. The earth with its inhabitants was the only kingdom that was prepared at that time. That kingdom is the kingdom concerning which the gospel is good news. This kingdom has passed through various conditions, and it has been called by different names. But it is always the same kingdom. The kingdom wherein, moreover, the children of men dwell, and the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven, was given to Nebuchadnezzar, then the same kingdom was given to the Medes and Persians; then to the Grecians, then to the Romans, and the same kingdom where all people, nations and languages, dwell under the whole heaven, will be given to Christ and the saints, of which kingdom there will be no end.

Then, the kingdom which is promised to the saints, is the kingdom where all people, nations, and languages, dwell under the whole heaven.

WHAT IS THE OBJECT OF GIVING THE KINGDOM TO CHRIST AND THE SAINTS?

"That all people, nations, and languages may serve Him." "That he may gather out of his kingdom all things that offended, and them that do iniquity." That he may reign until all things shall be subdued unto him, that God may be all in all. That he may accomplish the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.

WHAT DID JESUS SAY ABOUT THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM?

He said, "It is like leaven that a woman put into three measures of meal till the whole was leavened. Like a mustard seed, which is the least of all seeds, but it grew and became a great tree." And the prophet said it is like a stone which was cut out of the mountain without hands, and it became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

WHEN DID CHRIST SAY THIS REIGN WILL BEGIN?

He said, "When the nobleman shall return after having received the kingdom, then he will call his servants to whom he had given the money, and give them the kingdom. To one He will give authority over ten cities, to another over five, to every one according to his ability. To the apostles will be given twelve thrones; and they will begin to reign over the twelve tribes of Israel, when Christ shall sit upon the throne of his glory. And Christ will sit upon the throne of his glory after he comes in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory and begin to reign. Then all who love his appearing will receive crowns of righteousness and begin to reign.

WHAT WILL BE THE CONDITION OF THE KINGDOM IMMEDIATELY BEFORE THE COMING OF THE LORD?

Christ said, "As it was in the days of Noah, and as it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the days before the coming of the Son of man." The kingdom will be in such a condition that it will need the blessings of the gospel—the restitution of all things—the reign of Jesus Christ and the saints.

WHAT WILL BE THE CONDITION OF THE KINGDOM WHEN THE PROMISES OF THE GOSPEL HAVE BEEN FULFILLED?

Then all that remain alive will be righteous; there will be no more transgression; then there will be no more war, or sickness, or pain, or death, or curse; then every knee will bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father. And then the will of God will be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

From the inquiries we have made we learn, that we are to hear what Christ said: that the great theme of his teaching was the gospel, or good news of the kingdom of God; that this gospel must be believed that we may become worthy to be saved. We learn that Christ first began to preach this gospel; that he continued to preach the same gospel; that he told his apostles to preach it; that he said it must be preached in all the world; that after his resurrection he preached the same gospel.

We also learn that he required men to seek first the kingdom of God, and to pray first for the kingdom of God. That his disciples are only heirs of the kingdom; and that the thing promised to them is the kingdom. That the kingdom is the world; that it has been called by different names, and that it is the same kingdom which is promised to the saints, and that it will be given to them at the coming of the Lord, and the resurrection of the saints. We learn that the world will continue to be wicked as it is now, until the Lord comes and takes possession of the kingdom; that after 'all things are subdued to God, then the will of God will be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

The Savior does say what I have written; but does he anywhere teach any other doctrine? Does he deny himself? Then, let us hear him, and believe in his words, and obey him. For in the history of what he did and said, we have the history of what God has purposed to do for the world, and this is the gospel.

Very truly yours in the faith of the gospel.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

Obedience.

He who hears my words and obeys them, I will show you whom he is like. He is like a man who built his house upon a rock.

Then, without obedience we build upon the sand. We have no foundation for hope, no right to expect eternal life will be ours.

The rock of obedience must underlie the structure if we would have it stand.

Faith alone cannot save. It cannot induct one into the household of God. It is the starting point, the moving power, but not the castle of safety. We only enter the fold through the gate of obedience. We may believe all that is written, and yet we will not be saved, we do not comply with the conditions of salvation.

Christ is the door. We can get into Christ only by being baptized into him. An intelligent faith is the first great step toward salvation, but it must be followed by a cheerful, ready and joyful obedience to God's ordinances. He has ordained that we show our faith in Christ's burial and resurrection by being ourselves, in semblance, buried and raised from the dead. Until our faith is thus shown, we have no part in the scheme of redemption, our sins are not remitted—we are out of Christ.

Dear believing ones who are trusting in a correct faith to save you, do not tarry until your feet are on the rock, then you can come to God with confidence, crying, "Abba, Father! I am thine!"

S. B. WINCH.

The promises of Jesus are not to us like the legacies of one long dead; they are not the words merely of a great philosopher, like the Grecian Sage, whom death has severed from all personal contact with our modern life. They are the assurances of a living and present though unseen friend; and when so accepted, they are full of power.

Truth is not seen by judgments prepossessed, No more than Light by eyes with rheum oppressed.

POETRY.

Christ Stilling the Tempest.

Fear was within the tossing bark,
When stormy winds grew loud,
And waves came rolling high and dark,
And the tall mast was bowed.

And men stood breathless in their dread,
And baffled in their skill;
But one was there, who rose and said
To the wild sea, Be still!

And the wind ceased—it ceased—that word
Passed through the gloomy sky;
The troubled billows knew their Lord,
And sank beneath his eye.

And slumber settled on the deep,
And silence on the blast,
As when the righteous falls asleep,
When death's fierce throes are past.

Thou that didst rule the angry hour,
And tame the tempest's mood—
Oh! send thy spirit forth in power
O'er our dark souls to brood!

Thou that didst bow the billow's pride,
Thy mandates to fulfill,—
To speak to passion's raging tide—
Speak, and say,—Peace, be still!

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I see from a late number of your paper that there is some prospect of the brethren in Cleveland, O., holding a conference sometime this fall. I really wish they would. I would like to attend a meeting of that kind. If they do have such a meeting, I wish you could be there. O what a glorious time it will be when all God's dear children meet never to part again, to be forever with the Lord—when the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace! To this end let us not neglect to watch and pray, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

There are a few near here who still meet together on the First day of the week to break bread and to exhort one another, though some appear to be getting careless and negligent in respect to assembling themselves together as the Scriptures require. O let us remember we have only once to pass through this world! Let us try, then, to walk in that straight and narrow path that leads to everlasting life, that when the Master comes and knocks we may open to him immediately. Let us stand, therefore, with our loins girt about with truth, our lamps trimmed and burning, being doers of his word, that we may be blest in our deeds.

I remain yours, still looking for that blessed hope. P. H. BOUK.

Editor Restitution:—With regret I learn from time to time of your feebleness; and on the principle if one member suffers the whole body suffers with it; and I feel assured you must chafe somewhat under the pressure of your duties as editor, when you feel unable to perform the duties of the same as you desire. This is the common feeling of all who, having responsibilities, feel from necessity unable to perform them; and when these our frailties press upon us we are led to hope with renewed anxiety for the coming of the Just One to end the conflict and establish unmoved all who are waiting his coming. This feature of our faith is what led me to take up my pen this evening to write you of the happy experience of myself, and others of my brethren, in the two preliminary meetings of the proposed conference to be held in New York October 30 and 31, and November 1. This conference is to be one of all believers in the second coming and pre-millennial advent of our blessed Lord.

The meetings have been held in the parlor of the church of the Holy Trinity, of which Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., D. D., is pastor. The first meeting was one long to be remembered, and though there were perhaps not more than sixty present, yet it was evident the presence of the Lord was not dependent on numbers. For my part, I have little relish for large gatherings, and have often proved the promise good, "Where two or three are gathered in my name," etc.

The hearts of all then present, as also at the second meeting, seemed to beat in perfect accord as the heartfelt expression of Dr. Tyng, both in prayer and in address, went out in glorifying the great—if not the greatest—truth of the Bible. I say greatest, because I see so much that hangs on this much to be desired event.

The hymns sung were of the true sort, and not like very many which are sung—meaningless, because unscriptural; these Dr. Tyng took occasion to cast a just reflection upon, in that they tell of going to heaven rather than presenting the hope of the church—the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. At this second meeting the testimony of two pastors, one a doctor of divinity and Baptist, was that he was enamored of the doctrine, and why? because, said he, it has made me a better man by believing it. I find, he continued, it has the salutary effect of weaning me from the things of earth as it is and carrying all my hopes forward to the coming of Christ.

The other, pastor of a Presbyterian church, expressed himself similarly affected by the doctrine, and fully expressed his hope and belief as to the nearness of the event. Others in like manner bore testimony to the wholesome effect on the life, as to present conduct, and joys of the same in view of so glorious a truth.

Some, perhaps, and these among ourselves, are disposed to look doubtfully on this movement because it originates not on "our" side. I am free to confess I have no sympathy with any who thus think; and without boasting, I can say, as did my Lord, "They that are not against us are for us," and I accept this movement as one wholly in the right direction; and whether others join me or join me not, I pray God's blessing to rest on this conference, and that good, much good, may come from it.

I am more than partly convinced that there are many who, from some cause or other, need but very little to develop them into such as I bless God we are, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, in the revelation of Jesus Christ to impart life to such as are seeking for "glory, honor, and immortality." Oh, how I wish that the whole question may come in for its due and proper consideration, and that those who now only see this segment of the perfect arch may be led to see not only the coming, but the life and the blessing of the nations through the Christ and his many brethren in the age to come. Oh, how transporting the hope! Christ—my Lord, my Life, my Way—is coming! coming to bless the world with a reign benign and gracious! coming as dew on the new mown grass! coming to reign in righteousness! coming to subject all opposing rule and authority to his, for "All power in heaven and earth" has been given him, and he only waits the time appointed of the Father—which no man knows—when he takes his seat on his throne, even the throne once occupied by David as well as Solomon, and which is called the throne of the Lord! Then, during the administration of Melchizedek King-Priest functions, he shall rule the world in righteousness, and the people with his truth.

Now, in view of all this, and more, too, how desirable the event! Who is there if they see this truth in all its bearings and relations are not daily, hourly praying, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven"! With John on Patmos, my response is, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen."

Editor Restitution:—I am still trying to do my duty. I do not publish my doings—my record is on high. I thought it would be well to let you all know that I am not drawing back to perdition. No, thank God! I wish to return thanks to the kind brother or sister who paid to have THE RESTITUTION sent me. May God bless him. Cheer up! our labor shall not be in vain.

Nothing so tends to rob the disciple of Christ of the proper dignity of his discipleship, as walking before the eyes or the thoughts of men. So long as we are doing so we cannot be unshackled followers of our Heavenly Master. Moreover, the evil of walking before men is morally allied with the evil of seeking to hide our ways from God. Both partake of the leaven of the Pharisees, and both will find their proper place before the judgment seat. Why should we fear men? Why should we regard their opinions? If their opinions will not bear to be tried in his presence who has power to cast into hell, they are worth nothing, for it is with him we have to do. With me it is a very little thing that I should be judged of you or of man's judgment. Man may have a judgment seat now, but he will not have it then. He may set up his tribunal in time, but he will have no tribunal in eternity. Why, therefore, should we shape our way in reference to a tribunal so frail and evanescent?

Oh! let us challenge our hearts as to this. God grant us grace to act now in reference to then; to carry ourselves here with our eye on hereafter; to look at time in the light of eternity!

I would lift my warning voice against the sin of covetousness. I have been in the ministry over fifty years; in the Advent movement since in 1812, in its various phases. All depends upon the light in which you look at men and things. If you merely look at them now, it may be all very well to get on in trade, and enlarge one's concerns—make provision for the future. The man who does this is counted wise now, but he will be a fool then. This deeds, indentures, bank receipts, insurance policies, are current coin now; but they will be rejected then—they will all be spurious just a little ahead. What should we think of courts of law, banks and insurance offices, if we look at them in the light of eternity? These things do very well for men who are only governed by now; but the disciple of Christ is to be governed by then. This makes all the difference; and truly it is a serious difference. The moment I begin to hoard up a sixpence I have in principle departed from the life of faith. I may call my hoard by all the fair names ever invented by worldly minded or unbelieving hearts, but the unvarnished truth of the matter is that my hoard is my god.

I do most firmly believe we have entered the time of trouble. May we be found at our duty.

I expect, please God, to visit some of the churches in the states this winter.

ELDER W. DEVERELL.

Ft. Hill, Ont.

Editor Restitution:—Seeing in the last number of the paper a letter from Brother Gower, of Texas, mentioning the fact of having just immersed a young man by the name of Cotten, and my own name being mentioned in connection therewith as having possibly been the partial means of this my youngest brother becoming interested in those things that make wise unto salvation, that insure the great reward and lead unto life eternal, I have been induced, from feelings of joy and love, of faith and hope, to attempt to write a line of encouragement, not only to such as have been long in the faith, but to such as have recently, from long investigation, as I did, put on Christ by being baptized into his name, resolving no longer to put off that duty we owe to ourselves and our God.

My brother wrote me a letter after having returned from Brother Gower's—stating to me the fact of his having been baptized into the faith, and of having traveled about two hundred and fifty miles for that purpose, he had written to me from New Mexico about a year ago that as soon as he could get away from there he was going to perform this great duty, and that he had been trying to live a life of obedience in all the duties of a follower of Christ, looking forward to the time when he could have an opportunity of obeying the great command.

I have great confidence in his earnest step he has taken, and that he will stand fast in the faith, looking forward to the time when these atmospheric heavens, filled up for man in the flesh, will at last have answered the purpose for which they were prepared, having been purged and purified and made fit for man in his higher life or state of immortality and glory.

May we then realize the fact that our present life is but the infancy of our being, for the earth is not only our earthly home, our birth place, but it is to be our future home; for we are not to be removed to some far-off sphere where all the present glittering constellations of glory that are spread in the heavens above us, looking down in silent grandeur upon the successive generations of men will be forever but a brilliant dream of the past. Then let us not be ignorant of the fact that neither Scripture nor reason gives countenance to the idea that Christ's kingdom is to be established on the earth without commotion. On the contrary, the former reveals what the latter confirms—that the two great forces of good and evil will struggle along together for the mastery until one is utterly vanquished by the other. Not in peace is the millennial day to dawn. Jesus said to his followers, "The world hath hated me before it hated you." "I came not to send peace on the earth but a sword."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I send you the names of three new subscribers with a money order for six dollars. The truth is slowly progressing, and I hope many will turn from death unto Jesus the only life-giver. Let us, brethren, strive to enlighten the gloom that surrounds our fellow beings, with the never dimmed lamp of God's word, and so, in illumining the paths of others, we will keep our feet from stumbling. May God give us strength; may he protect us till Christ comes whose right it is to reign, at which time may we all inherit eternal life.

I am as ever in the truth yours sincerely, W. I. CROCKETT.

Wytheville, Va.

Editor Restitution:—I have six papers, each good in its sphere, perhaps, come to my door weekly and monthly, but I prize THE RESTITUTION above them all. Its truths so ably selected and pruned, are rich and nutritious. It is just the paper we want—advocating no theory as a crotchet, but yet firm and definite on doctrines essential to salvation. Besides this, it contains choice selections and editorials on those events of prophecy and scientific discovery that serve as finger-boards which point to the kingdom just beyond. We can't do without it. The church needs it. Yet it is a strange fact that but few take it who claim to be looking at passing events as marking the coming of the Master. We hope you will be able to continue its publication from the support of the brethren, and that your health may be spared and thus be able to go on in the work. Inclosed find $5.00. Please apply $2.00 on my subscription and $3.00 as a donation to THE RESTITUTION.

I am your brother in hope,

A. J. EYCHANER.

Editor Restitution:—There is considerable stir in this community among the clergy, about what a few of us have to say in regard to immortality, the kingdom, and other Bible doctrines, taught by the Adventists. They had the best talent they could get to come and preach immortal soul, sky kingdom and other old ideas, but they don't seem to make all satisfactory. There never was a more favorable time for some good preaching brother to come here and establish a church than now. We have never had any preaching; there are four or five of us here fighting for the cause in our weak way, and find our labor is not in vain. We are going to make an effort to get some one to come and hold a meeting for us, and we want you to refer us to some good, pleasant preacher that is thoroughly posted and competent to meet the objections of the learned doctrines, that we may correspond with him in regard to the matter.

Yours in hope,

T. M. WALKER.

Bellefountaine, Ohio.

Editor Restitution:—It is time for me to fulfill my promise, therefore, you will find post office order for five dollars, a free will offering for THE RESTITUTION. May it wave till Christ, who is our life, appears to cheer us through this vail of sorrow and tribulation. I see from THE RESTITUTION you have been afflicted. I hope you are well at present, and may you be spared to perform the will of the Lord and work for him and his cause. I would like to have been at Argos conference; was there in heart and spirit. Oh, think of me in my lonely and isolated condition; not a brother or sister to converse with on the all-important themes of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; but the Lord is my helper; I shall not want, and in him is my trust. I see in the last RESTITUTION an article headed "The One faith," written by Benjamin Wilson, of California. He is an easy writer. I am always pleased to see his productions. He is nearer to the views I hold than any writer I have seen. His writing was first to awaken me to diligent search for truth. I sent for the paper he was then publishing in Geneva, Ill. I forget the name now, but I took it till it was changed and moved to Chicago, and have been taking it ever since, and expect to take it while it lives and I live. May the Lord spare our Brother Wilson for future good, and may he be the means of enlightening many more.

I will now close, and remain your sister in Christ,

CHRISTENA JAMESON.

P. S.—I would be so thankful if some one or two of the brotherhood would spend a week or more in our town, Eaton, and lecture on the important truths of the Bible. H. V. Reed, and Stephenson, I think, would get a hearing, and expect there are others that would take with the people just as well. C. J.

Eaton, Ohio.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find one dollar for the renewal of my subscription to THE RESTITUTION. I would send the full amount for the year but cannot at present. I hope, however, to be able to do so by the time this expires. Be assured you have my prayers and sympathies in your arduous "labors of love." May the "patience of hope" ever be yours in your trying position. It will be but little longer and then the glorious hope will be realized and the afflictions which now appear so weighty, will seem light indeed when compared with the glory that will be experienced by all the faithful. Truly, the past year has been an eventful one in the history of the world, and well may we look up rejoicing, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. I often wonder how it is that the world absorbs so many of our thoughts, and so much of our precious fleeting time when such glorious prospects await us. For we know that "the world passeth away and the lusts thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." May we ever be found doing the Master's will, and be fruit-bearing branches in Christ the true vine.

Your sister in hope,

M. HOOK.

St. Joseph, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—Mr. Allen, a Congregational minister from Odell, preached in our town to-day against the personal coming of Christ, and, also against the return of the Jews to Palestine. He did not pretend to prove or disprove one fact from the Bible, only made assertions and ridiculed the idea of Christ's ever coming. He said that he believed this earth, as it is, would stand for hundreds of thousands of years, and he thought people were getting better all the time; and, as for him, he did not think people knew anything about these things. Paul said: "We brethren are not in darkness that that day should come upon us as a thief," but we are sorry to say Brother Allen admitted he was. He said the Jews would never return. Our heavenly Father, through one of the prophets, said he would again gather them. Such flat contradictions of God's word are a common occurrence among those that profess Christianity now a days, and it seems to take well with the people. They tell us that the world is growing better, and then to add amusement to his congregation, he told about a good sister that had her ascension robe made during Miller's day—a thing which was not true. But such misrepresentations suit these people a great deal better than the gospel does. I tell you, friends, the time has come when the people will not endure sound doctrine, but have heaped to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and if ever there was a time that tried the people of God, it is now. Why, if one attempts to defend God's word they are like a set of hungry wolves, ready to devour, not the truth, but those that proclaim it. Why, God's word is hooted at—this I have heard and seen myself—and it is done by those that are looked up to by these so-called professors, and our prayer is, that we shall soon be caught up to meet the Master and ever be with him. If people are determined not to receive the truth in good and honest hearts, we believe the sooner God's judgments are visited upon the earth, the better; for we know, that in our short remembrance, that people are much worse than what they used to be. There are some twenty-five in this neighborhood that are looking for the soon-coming of the Master. The sects oppose in every way our progress. They came out and refused to let our minister preach in their church, although it was built as a union church with the understanding that all could use it; and further, they make their appointments to conflict with ours, but we have learned to be patient and bide our time, until the curse will be removed and the desert made to bloom, when all will be joy and everlasting peace; when the Sun of righteousness shall shine forth with healing on his wings and all the inhabitants of the earth shout for joy, and the glory of God fill the whole earth. Amen.

Your brother as ever,

WM. N. SARVIS.

POETRY.

Only a Woman.

Only a woman, shriveled and old,
The prey of the winds and the prey of the cold,
Cheeks that are shrunken,
Eyes that are sunken,
Lips that were never o'er-bold;
Only a woman, forsaken and poor,
Asking an alms at the bronze church-door.

Hark to the organ! roll upon roll
The waves of its music go over the soul!
Silks rustle past her
Thicker and faster;
The great bell ceases its toll.
Fain would she enter, but not for the poor
Swingeth wide open the bronze church-door.

Only a woman, waiting alone,
Icily cold on the ice-cold stone;
What do they care for her,
Mumbling a prayer for her,
Living not bread, but a stone?
Under cold faces their haughty hearts beat,
Mocking the woes of their kin in the street.

Only a woman! In the olden days
Hope carolled to her happiest lays;
Somebody adored her,
Somebody adored her,
Somebody crowned her with praise;
Somebody faced up the battles of life,
Strong for her sake who was mother or wife.

Somebody lies with a tress of her hair
Light on his heart where the death shadows are;
Somebody waits for her,
Opening the gates for her,
Giving a light for despair.
Only a woman—nevermore poor
Dead in the snow at the bronze church-door.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Prophetic Conference.

Editor Restitution:—I take the earliest opportunity to forward you the official call, published in the New York Tribune, for the conference of pre-millennial believers in the advent of our Lord Jesus Christ. I am sure it will gladden your heart to read the circular, and I hope many will see this who would otherwise be unaware of this movement, were it not published in THE RESTITUTION.

If all the names attached are pre-millenarians, then I am greatly surprised; and wonder why they have not spoken more freely on this soul stirring topic. I have often been told none but enthusiasts (allowing that to mean what it may) or idiots, or those only who desire to be odd, would ever believe in such things. I am glad, therefore, to find bishops, professors, rectors, pastors, editors and evangelists, who, of course, can only be "enthusiasts," or "idiots," or "oddities" in the eyes of those who are more ready to rail than believe.

One pleasing thought comes over me, and it is true: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." That no flesh should glory in his presence." I am glad, very glad, to know such, even, as I can understand this glorious subject, and when this, with its concomitants, appears, then what a galaxy! what a glory shines on every page of the divine Word!

And while I profess to know so much, I am ashamed to be no better acquainted with the deeper—if there are deeper—things. I know many among us who claim dizzy heights of knowledge—they stagger me; and I am constantly falling back on the foundation—Christ Jesus—and I say with Paul, "That I may know him and the power of his resurrection," "If by any any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

Those who are strong ought to bear with the infirmities of the weak, and not to please himself.

Wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near. We are in a glorious war, and our weapons are not carnal, but mighty in pulling down the strongholds! Quit you like men, be strong! The Lord is always on the side of truth; and your buckler, and shield, and helmet, and sword, must be kept intact. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life; though you die you shall not perish; your life is a hidden one, and the reservoir is fully equal to all demands. Fight on, fight on! the victory is yours!

GEO. W. YOUNG.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Preparations are making for the conference of believers in the pre-millennial advent of Jesus Christ. This is to be held at the Church of the Holy Trinity, at Madison avenue and Forty-second street, October 30 and 31, and November 1. The following circular sets forth at length the object of the conference, and gives the names of the bishops, professors, ministers and others who unite in approving the call:

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST: When from any cause some vital doctrine of God's Word has fallen into neglect or suffered contradiction and reproach, it becomes the serious duty of those who hold it, not only strongly and constantly to reaffirm it, but to seek by all means in their power to bring back the Lord's people to its apprehension and acceptance. The precious doctrine of Christ's second personal appearing has, we are constrained to believe, long lain under such neglect and misapprehension.

In the Word of God we find it holding a most conspicuous place. It is there strongly and constantly emphasized as a personal and imminent event, the great object of the Church's hope, the powerful motive to holy living and watchful service, the inspiring ground of confidence amid the sorrows and sins of the present evil world, and the event that is to end the reign of Death, cast down satan from his throne, and establish the kingdom of God on earth. So vital, indeed, is this truth represented to be, that the denial of it is pointed out as one of the conspicuous signs of the apostasy of the last days.

Now, while casting no word of reproach upon those who may differ from us, we cannot be insensible to the fact that there has been a sad decline in our times from the clear, vivid, ardent faith of the early church in regard to this doctrine. Very many Christians have been taught to think of the coming of Christ as equivalent to their own death; others regard it as synonymous with the gradual diffusion of Christianity. Many, satisfied with the present world, have little desire for the return of the absent Lord; while here and there are those who boldly speak of such an event as only a "fascinating dream," destined never to be realized. But while we lament all this, and can but regard it as an alarming symptom of the present state of religion, it is an occasion for the profoundest gratitude that there has within the last few years been such a powerful and wide-spread revival of this ancient faith. Looking over the Church of God in all its branches, and listening to the clear and decisive testimony to this truth that is coming up in such volume from teachers and private expositors as they watch, evangelists and missionaries, it can but appear to us, that after the long sleep of the Church, the wise are at last rising up, and trimming their lamps, in preparation for the coming of the Bridegroom.

In view of these facts, it has seemed desirable that those who hold to the personal pre-Millennial advent of Jesus Christ, and who are "looking for that Blessed hope," should meet together in conference, as our honored brethren in England have recently done, to set forth, in clear terms, the grounds of their hope, to give mutual encouragement in the maintenance of what they believe to be a most vital truth for the present time, and in response to our Lord's "Behold, I come quickly," to voice the answer by their prayers and hymns and testimony, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

We, the undersigned, therefore cordially invite you to meet with us at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Madison avenue and Forty-Second street, the Rev. S. H. Tyng, jr., rector, in the city of New York, on the 30th and 31st of October, and 1st of November, 1-30, to listen to a series of carefully prepared papers on the pre-Millennial advent of the Lord Jesus Christ and connected truths, and to participate in such discussions as the topics may suggest.

"Light Shining in a Dark Place."

Editor Restitution:—If you have not already chronicled the very notable movement mentioned in the subjoined extract, it will doubtless prove interesting and gratifying to the brethren to see the statement in THE RESTITUTION.

Shall we not take steps to be represented on the occasion and in the convention referred to? It will afford a good opportunity to those instructed in the truth, and holding the faith once delivered to the saints, to show to all of good and honest hearts the Bible way of life and salvation.

Most, if not all, those leading in the movement, "both ministers and laymen," though zealous believers and earnest advocates of the second coming of Christ, have very vague and unscriptural conceptions of what he is to do when he comes, where, over whom, and with whom he is to reign, and what will be the characteristics, the duration and consequences of the kingdom he will establish. They will be found uninformed of the Bible doctrine of the gospel in its faith and hope. May we not hope that, by prudence and firmness—blending "the wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove"—we may, under God's blessing, become the instruments in his hands of turning them from darkness to the wisdom of the just, and thus help in the great work of preparing an intelligent, willing and waiting people for the speedy return of their absent Lord? The door is opened to us, and we are invited to enter. How can we decline?

Let us hope that yourself and Brethren Reed, Stephenson, Myers and others, with the aid and company of our zealous and intelligent brethren on the spot, in Brooklyn and New York, will be able to attend and raise their earnest and faithful voices for that which, being "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," works by love, purifies the heart, overcomes the world and giveth us the victory, and meantime enables us to rejoice in that "blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Hence the exhortation, "These things speak and exhort."

Faithfully and affectionately,
ALLAN B. MACKENZIE.

A NEW MOVEMENT AMONG THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

Editor Winchester Times:—As matter of general interest to your readers, will you please give insertion to the subjoined article taken from the columns of one of your exchanges. The subject is one which claims the earnest and thoughtful attention of all consecrated men. It has been, we believe, the hope of saints and martyrs of all ages in the Church of Christ, that our savior would come again in person—"a second time without sin unto salvation to those that look for him and love his appearing," to establish his kingdom and rule upon earth, visibly and literally, as Governor of the nations, and in great power and glory, as King of Kings, and Lord of lords. It has been too much the habit, perhaps, to give to his own and other plain Bible declarations of his literal return to the earth a figurative and parabolic interpretation, which practically makes these glowing prophecies of little use or effect. The Lord's prayer plainly supports the doctrine that his kingdom and reign is yet future and is to be on earth. How, otherwise, can the great promise be fulfilled, that "in him shall all the nations of the earth be blessed,"—that he has been "raised up to sit on David's throne in Jerusalem," which then becomes "the city of the Great King," and the metropolis of the whole world, as many Bible readers contend?

It is fit and appropriate that in this, our land of religious freedom, a theme so grand and imposing as the coming and reign of the Son of God, the King of saints, over our present distracted and travailing world, establishing peace on earth and good will among men, should find men of good and honest hearts of all sects and parties, ready and willing to assemble together and in a spirit of kindness and fraternal forbearance, to investigate and "search the Scriptures diligently" and see if these things be so.

CHRISTIANUS.

[New York Sun]

There was, last evening, a well attended meeting, both of laymen and ministers of all Protestant denominations, in the chapel of the Church of the Holy Trinity, to make preparations for the great Conference to be opened in this city next month to discuss the question of the second coming of Christ.

The Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., presided. The meeting was opened with prayer and the hymn "When Jesus Comes." Then, at the suggestion of the chairman, most of those present repeated a Scriptural text referring to the expected coming of Christ.

Dr. Tyng said that last June there was a meeting of believers at Clifton Springs, at which it was resolved to call a Conference similar to one which lately met in England, to discuss the question of the Lord's coming. The call was drawn up and signed by more than two hundred of the most popular clergymen and laymen of the country. Letters had been received from many of the large cities, including Chicago, begging that the meeting might convene there; but it had been decided to hold it in the Church of the Holy Trinity, New York, on Oct. 30 and 31 and Nov. 1. Mr. Moody, Dr. Tyng said, would probably be there, and many other skilled evangelists. He was sure the Conference would be very largely attended from all parts of this country, and many distinguished English clergymen had been invited, and would be likely to attend. He hoped to see even the Rev. Dr. H. Bonar.

The Rev. Drs. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., and J. D. Herr, and the Rev. Mr. Gillespie, were appointed to nominate sub-committees of arrangements, and, before closing, Dr. Tyng, in reply to a question, said he was firmly convinced that the Lord Jesus Christ would verilably come again to this world to take his kingdom upon earth.

Jewish Schools.

In A. D., 1840, the Mission from the Church of Scotland said, "Schools for Jewish children have never been established in Jerusalem, and in the present state of things it seems impossible that they could succeed." Now there are quite a number of flourishing schools, and the Jewish population is about two-thirds greater than it then was. And now that all difficulties are removed, their future advancement must be very rapid.

BREVITIES.

The isle of Cyprus is believed by many scholars to be the Chittim of the Bible.

The British government has ordered the emancipation of all slaves on the island of Cyprus.

The township of Ortali, Italy, has sunk twelve to fifteen feet below the ordinary level, and the inhabitants have deserted the toppling houses.

A company has obtained a concession from the sultan for laying down a railway between Jaffa and Jerusalem, and it is expected that the road will soon be built.

Rev. Dr. Briggs, missionary of the Presbyterian board, has completed the translation of the Bible into the language of the Dakotah Indians, after forty years' labor.

Russian officers have taken soundings in the great Siberian lake Baikal, which show a depth of 2,940 metres, whereas the deepest sound in the Mediterranean is only 2,153.

A journal called the Cyprus has just been started in her British Majesty's new possession. It is a weekly, consists of four pages of four columns each, and is printed half in English and half in Romaic. The price is ten cents a number.

Lord Beaconsfield will provide that he shall be buried in the Jews' graveyard at Mile End. It was by a trick of the poet Rogers that he was baptized. A Jew who knows him well says that Beaconsfield has respect for Christianity because Christ was a Jew and the Virgin Mary was a Jewess.

The Athenæum: The Bodleian library has acquired a great number of fragments of documents on papyri, written partly in Greek, partly in Arabic, which relate to the administration of Egypt under the Kaliphs. If we are not mistaken the British museum has lately bought from the same source many similar documents.

A family of Turks, consisting of a father, mother, three sons and a daughter, have settled in Knoxville, having fled from the Porte's dominions because oppressed by Turkish tyranny. One of the sons is a physician, one a tailor, and one a shoemaker. The father desired, he said, to see his children protected and enjoying the free air of liberty. They asked no alms of any one. The physician desired to be employed by residents of the Tennessee town, or by the government.

David Whitmer is in possession of the original manuscript of the "Book of Mormon," and Elders Pratt and Smith of the Mormon church have recently been to his home in Richmond, Mo., to secure the book. They urged that it ought to be deposited for safe keeping in Salt Lake City, and offered to buy it, but Whitmer, who has kept it for nearly half a century, refused to give it up.

Cholera of a virulent type has been committing great havoc in the city of Indore. People are dying in hundreds daily. A fakir, who is in the service of the Maharajah Holkar, is doing, or pretending to do all in his power to drive out the disease from the city. He assured the Maharajah that he would at once check the further progress of it by sticking kuboj (a piece of paper with Arabic incantations written on it) on the door of every house.

In the town of Norwich, Vt., on the banks of a brook which empties into a tributary of the Connecticut, is an elm tree, the breadth of whose top is 110 feet in diameter, and the circumference of the trunk, three feet from the ground, 18 feet 7 inches. The age of the tree is about one hundred years, and it is supposed that this is the largest tree of the kind in New England. The man who owns the land on which the tree grows is ninety-six years old, and is still vigorous in body and mind. He was born on the farm, and remembers when this tree was so small that he could span it with his fingers.

A British Consular report from Persia says that almost every child in that country is taught to read and write. The Koran is the text book. But as there are no printed books in Persian characters among the people, the condition of popular intelligence is that of five centuries ago. Few new books are read, the cost of manuscript being too much for popular circulation, and few are written. The Persians adhere in chemistry to the old idea of four elements. In astronomy they believe that the sun moves round the earth. In other sciences, as presented in printed books, their position is the same; although, of course, the highly educated are better taught. In the actual processes of art and manufactures, with samples of Western products before them, they are skilful imitators.

According to an English writer there are four vast areas which have never been traversed by civilized man, and which among them constitute about one-seventh of the whole area of the globe. Of these, the greatest is the Antarctic region, the extent of which is about seventy-five times that of Great Britain; the second lies about the north pole; the third is in Central Africa, and the fourth is in Western Australia. The areas of the unknown regions of the globe are estimated, approximately, at about 11,600,000 square miles.

It is claimed by a writer in a London paper that the word "Jingo," now used so familiarly in England to designate the Tory party, comes from the language of the Basques, that ancient and peculiar people who, during the many periods of European civilization, have remained unchanged in their homes on the slopes of the Pyrenees mountains. Its meaning is "God," and it is commonly used as an adjuration. The writer is of opinion that the word was brought to England by Basque sailors, who first used it as an oath. The forms of the word which appear in various dialects, are given as Jingo, Jinco, Jainco, Jaincon, Gincoa, Yinko and Yainko.

The annual pilgrimage to Mecca will soon be made, and devout Mohammedans are preparing for the journey, or are already on the way. One hundred thousand is the average number yearly joining in the pilgrimage, and among them are Hindoos, Malays, Persians, Turks, Arabs, negroes, and men from the Barbary States. The French government endeavors to prevent the departure of Algerines on account of the cholera that they sometimes bring back with them, but the faithful evade the interdiction by going first to Tunis or Morocco, ostensibly for other business. The pilgrims always travel in large bodies, as they are often attacked by Bedouin hordes of the Harb mountains.

The earliest notice of yellow fever is that of Ligon, in his "History of Barbadoes." He there stated that it broke out early in September, 1647, and that before the expiration of a month "the living were scarcely able to bury the dead." Thereafter it did not attain any very remarkable severity until 1793, when it destroyed not less than 5,000 men of the garrison of Port Royal in the course of a few months. In 1804 it was brought to the south of Spain, and visited Cadiz, Malaga, and Carthagena. But its greatest force fell upon Gibraltar, where out of the civil population of the town amounting to nearly 14,000 persons only twenty-eight escaped the attack.

AN INDIAN MOUND IN CONNECTICUT.

The New Haven Palladium says that at a meeting of the Bridgeport Scientific Society, Monday evening, Dr. W. C. Wile read a paper describing an Indian mound recently discovered on a farm in Newtown, Conn. The mound was about forty inches high and covered considerable ground. Some excavations at one side had brought to light a lot of human bones, flint arrowheads and other Indian relics. Many of the bones crumbled on being exposed to the air, but there was found one complete skeleton, which had been buried in a sitting posture, with his face toward the West. This skeleton and the string of beads found around the neck were exhibited to the society by Dr. Wile.

Some careful statistician who delights in the horrible has been to the pains of keeping an account of the number of people whom death has carried off during the past month. He says that in Europe and America fully 12,000 people are known to have perished by the sword, by flood, by fever, and by railway, coal mine, and steamboat disasters. Nearly 6,000 have died of fever in the South, 600 in the Thames steamship collision, 400 by the great flood at Miskolez, Hungary, 280 by the coal mine explosion in South Wales, 100 by several railroad accidents in Great Britain, 100 by lake, railway and other casualties in this country, and some 4,000 by engagements between Austrians, Bosnians, Turks and Albanians.

The First White Man on American Soil.

A writer in the Jewish Messenger cites Alexander von Humboldt's "Cosmos" as authority for a claim that a Jew was the first white man who set foot on American soil.

The Jew, however, had been baptized. In a note in volume II, chapter vi., Humboldt relates that, on his first expedition, Columbus, when approaching the island of Cuba, believed himself to be between two Chinese ports. Desiring to hand the letters which he possessed from the European monarchs to the "great chan of the Moguls" in China, and then return to Spain, he "sends a baptized Jew, Louis de Torres, by name, to the shore, because he understands the Hebrew, the Chaldaic, and some Arabic, those languages being used in all the mercantile places of Asia."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Hope of Orthodoxy not the Apostle's Hope.

Orthodoxy revels in music, sentimentality and architecture. These three elements constitute its religion. But though the main features in its constitutions they are not always united. One branch may discard the magnificent church and swelling organ tone and make sentiment the very essence of its worship. This class finds ignorance and superstition indispensable. Its votaries, ignorant of the truth as it is in Jesus, are easily wrought upon by sensationalists styled "ministers of the gospel and divines." When wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement they find "religion" and their pent up feelings find expression in shouting and senseless clamor. They are no doubt sincere in their practices, and zealous in what they believe to be God's cause; but their fruits are of the world and their hearts alienated from Christ through ignorance.

The other branch far more enlightened in worldly knowledge and richer in worldly goods build palaces to worship in, and in order to make that worship as pleasant and comfortable as possible, the inside of their palaces are furnished gorgeously. The worshipers recline on cushioned pews while the organ breathes forth its melodies. On the lofty walls are blazoned many passages from the Word of God. On the stained glass of the windows that admit the light of heaven in gorgeous hues, we see many a picture from the life of Christ. We turn to the assemblage of the professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Our eyes rest upon plumes and rustling silks. We turn the leaves of the Book before us, and read: "When pride cometh then cometh shame, but with the lowly is wisdom." And then look upon the folded arms and self-satisfied air of the member of the church sitting in his own rented pew from which he has the power to exclude all (under the rules of the church) though they be famishing for the Word of Life. "By their fruits ye shall know them." What is the hope orthodoxy holds forth from its gilded temples? What does it find to comfort in distress? The hope it clings to, is, that the immortal souls of its votaries may be saved in heaven, and this is absolutely all its salvation and all its desire. That this hope is false and delusive, and that it never was the hope of the apostles is plainly taught in the Bible. The only hope the apostles ever expressed was "The Hope" for which Paul was accused before Agrippa. When brought before Agrippa, Paul answered and said: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." And again, "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain." He says, "For the hope of the promise I am judged." In order to understand this saying fully, we must comprehend what the promise to the fathers is. Turning then to Gen. we read: "And God said unto Abraham, I will make of thee a great nation and I will bless thee and make thy name great and thou shalt be a blessing." "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. All the land of Canaan will I give thee for an everlasting possession."

This is the promise of God to Abraham and to the fathers. God declares, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations be blest." Who is this seed that is to procure the blessings for the nations? Paul in Gal. iii. emphatically declares it is Christ. "He says not and to seeds as of many, but as of one and to thy seed which is Christ." But how is Abraham a blessing? Again Paul declares, "Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness; know ye, therefore that they which are of faith the same are the children of Abraham; and the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith preached before the gospel unto Abraham saying, In thee shall all nations be blest." "Now, as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ; and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Thus we are made partakers of the promise to Abraham through faith; and being adopted into the family of Israel became participants in Israel's hope. The chief elements then of Israel's hope are -

1. The restoration of Israel and its organization into a great and mighty nation.

2. The immortalization of all faithful participants, for God has promised the land for an everlasting possession.

3. That the seed (Christ) will become a great and mighty ruler over the nations, that he will rebuild the throne and tabernacle of David (now in ruins), and of his throne and kingdom there shall be no end.

This is the hope that is held forth to perishing mortality. This is the glorious hope that points to Christ as the blessed Life-giver, for he has promised to change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body. Abraham and David will see his throne established forever when he returns to take to himself his great power and reign. How tame and soulless is the hope of orthodoxy that holds forth nothing tangible. Shrouded in doubt and mystery, with no truth, no firm anchored hope to rest upon, the mind frames from its imagination a paradise beyond the skies. But the moment the sunlight of Israel's hope shines through the clouds of man's traditions we behold in all its truth and beauty the promise, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

W. I. CROCKETT.

Hyattville, Va.

To D. T. Taylor as to his Article "The Coming Throne." No. 4.

BY J. H. COOK.

This voluminous writer in the Crisis is giving a series of articles on the subject of the coming throne. In No. 4 he states the fact that "the Lord had a throne;" the throne of David and Solomon. 1 Chron xxix. Of this he says "nothing is plainer than that the coming throne is the throne of Christ in God's re-established, restored, everlasting kingdom."

He alludes to several facts in the ever-changing affairs of Israel under David and Solomon, and on through the Old Testament into the new; and then, quoting the rejection and destruction of some, he reaches the conclusion that the subjects of the kingdom will be the sovereigns! Of course his language is smooth and oily to avoid all suspicion that he intends to suppress, or subvert the truth of all history and all prophesy pertaining to that people. Probably he does not allow such a thought to trouble his own conscience, much less the thought that he was misleading the uninformed, and "doing despite to the spirit of grace." Heb. x. 29.

Every one should know that "they are not all Israel who are of Israel—Jacob—over whom Christ shall reign." Luke i. 33; Rom. ii. But they should also know that all are not Christians who are of the church. While yet as the church is the Bride of the Lamb, so "all Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation." Isa. xlv. 17; Rom. xi. 26-29.

"The house of Jacob," he says, "can only be understood of the pious Jews of all ages. These alone, without doubt, are the Israel. To these true Israelites, God, in the gospel plan, adds all saved Gentiles."

Please note. His argument ignores, or denies that Israel does exist through the seven times—that Israel is punished seven times more than they had been before these times began. Lev. xxvi. 23-45. They are yet scattered and their land has been trodden down through the whole times of the four horns of the Gentiles, (Zech. i. 18-22; Dan. viii. 11-19: Matt. xxiii. 37-39; Rom. xi. 25-29,) while yet the Lord Christ and all they who are baptized into Christ (Gal. iii.) are the seed to take the gate—the kingdom—the seat of judgment, and bless the nations of earth! Gen. xxii. 17, 18; Psa. lxxii. 17-21; Luke i. 69, 73.

The position he takes subverts Israel through all the history of the seven times;—the 2300 years, or the times of the Gentiles; and then as there must be an Israel, he proceeds to constitute the pieces of every nation gathered in time, another Israel, and yet his house of Jacob! How wise this is! How like God to say Israel as the subjects of all the curses, (Deut. xxviii. and xxix.) and mean it too; while yet the precious promises to that same people are meant for another class! Furthermore he says, "This kingdom will be a sacred democracy! A kingdom full of kings!" Then to complete this paradox, and confound this confusion of all the facts and language, this kingdom which is David's restored—God's—Christ's—shall stand forever through all coming ages; while yet he says eternity (unchangeableness in order or time) is stamped on it all.

Ages succeed each other, but eternity admits of none! He thus makes it all yea and nay, falsifying all truth and also himself.

Jesus is God's beau ideal—God's highest, perfect type of a true king (he says)—to do judgment and justice! But the whole arrangement is without this object or occasion, because all are co-heirs and co-kings, and hence the judgment and justice is for no body.

Again. The sceptre is all his own, but as if to consummate his contradictions, the crowned hosts—millions of saints—share it in common, and make up his sacred democracy! A kingdom full of kings! All kings.

But God's plan makes Christ and his bride the saints, sovereigns after the order of Melchisedek. Then Israel and the nations left and not deceived by satan, are the subjects to enjoy the blissful reign 1000 years! Amen.

The example—the shadow—the vision of the coming kingdom, combine to make known its realities. The transfiguration, which is the vision of the kingdom furnishes its example. Jesus the king of glory was there. Moses and Elijah were there in glory, and then Peter James and John—mortal men—were also there to make up and complete its pattern; its matters of fact. But brother Taylor boldly cuts out and covertly casts away this filling up and complement of the kingdom. Is not this very bold? Does he think how clearly God sees.

Then he seems to allow David's restored kingdom and the Davidic throne, coupled with Messianic times. But strange to tell, his argument denudes the throne and the kingdom of all subjects save the rulers—the princes of the royal household. He is so circumscribed in his view of the loftiest cities of the glory and honor of royal dominion for Christ and his saints, that he slily subverts, ignores or denies all Israel save David's throne (minus subjects) and kingdom, because then only would the type indicate his assumed anti-type.

Again he says of Christ "the sceptre is all his own," while yet he knows the sceptre is the correlative of every king; and as all are to be kings (as he says), they must all sway the sceptre; and so the sceptre belongs to everybody. How beautiful and how consistent! How like God to constitute each one a king, for no purpose but to wear an empty title. To bless and benefit nobody.

The prophet of the Lord assures us, that "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order and establish it with judgment, and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. ix. 6-7; Psa. lxxii; Rom. xv. 8-13; Rev. xv. 4; Dan. vii. 13-14.

But our astute author enjoins all this prophesy except the king and his co-kings! and to crown this climax in the contradiction of truth, the whole, he has without God's aim, or object, or increase. Surely his zeal contravenes the zeal of the Lord of hosts, which Isaiah says will perform this.

Almost every paragraph is consistent with this effort to belittle God's good will to men. Whereas there is disclosed in these and all like prophesies, what may be the infinite and everlasting amplitude of increase that transcends all finite apprehension. Psa. cxxxix.; Isa. iv. 9.

He began boldly as he did years ago, and as if he aimed to echo God's truth, but the effort resulted like this—a promise without performance; a cloud without rain; for Israel and the Lord, as oft expressed in the Word.

As anti-advent men litter out the second coming of Christ, so our author litters out the great object of his reign 1000 years. Rev. xx. 3-7; the great Sabbath (seventh day) of the world. Heb. iv. 1-9; the great and appearing day of the Lord—as 1000 years. Acts ii. 20; 2 Pet. iii. 8; the times of restitution of all things spoken. Acts iii. 19-20; and the dispensation of the fulness of times. Eph. i. 10; 2 Tim. vi. 15.

Nay, more, he writes as if he never had read the oath—confirmed promise—as the two immutable things, nor their wonderous amplification, in the law, the prophet and the Psalms, which must be fulfilled. Luke i. 69-75; xxii. 29-30; xxiv. 44; Heb. vi. But he will doubtless get his reward. It may be the smile of a Jew who love to have it so—that is to have the gospel of God—the glad tidings of the kingdom shorn (like Samson) of all subjects, except none at all, save in subtility, the sovereigns.

Yes he gets further his fee, and the double amen that endorses his article (as if filched from Psalms lxxii. that affirms what he indirectly denies). But I appeal to him and those whom he confirms in reducing divine promise to their jejune standard, whether he gets the unfailing promise made to those who "confess him and his word before men." Luke x. 23.

With profound sorrow I write thus in relation to those whom I would gladly commend, having so long loved, but it is in hope of arresting their attention. Is it better, brethren, to please God rather than man? Yes. Is it safer for an adventist to ignore the oft repeated word of God as to the blissful reign of Christ with his saints, than it is for other devout people to so suppress this second coming altogether?

Let us, like Caleb, follow the Lord wholly, enjoy the abundant entrance, and look for the full reward. Amen.

"Did Jesus Christ Flee to Egypt to Escape the Vengeance of Herod?"

In The Herald of the Age to Come, for Aug. 26th, occurs the following language:

"All we need to say here is, to remind you of the fact, that it is an utter impossibility for you or any one else to harmonize the straightforward narrative of Luke, which is not contradicted by anything in the Bible nor history, and which is in perfect harmony with all the Scriptures of truth, reason and nature, with the contradictory, ambiguous, fictitious, unnatural statements of this writer in Matthew, unsupported by anything in nature, reason, Bible or history, founded wholly upon dreams, and proved to be false by at least fifty Bible testimonies. * * * Did Jesus Christ flee into Egypt to escape the vengeance of Herod? We unhesitatingly say he did not, and pronounce the whole account which says he did, a base fabrication and interpolation in the book of Matthew."

It is not strange, nor new, that such questions as the above should, in these days, be propounded by those who have a theory to maintain, but it is strange how little evidence will disprove a plain declaration of the Bible to those same persons. And is it not also a little strange how they can find contradictions where none exist? It certainly is not the part of wisdom thus to denounce, as contradictory, ambiguous and fictitious, as an interpolation and false, a portion of God's Book, which, with the rest of the first two chapters of Matthew, is found in all the ancient manuscripts now extant which are entire, as well as in all the the ancient versions, two of which are of Apostolic antiquity—these all contain the two first chapters of Matthew. They are also found in a genuine epistle of Ignatius. Justin Martyr, Hegesippus and Clement of Alexandria, living in the second century, have referred to them; Irenæus and the fathers who immediately succeeded him, and whose testimony is beyond dispute; and even those bitter traitors of Christianity, Celsus, Porphyry and Julian, living, as they did, in the second, third and fourth centuries, admit the first two chapters as genuine, and quote from them.

Matthew is also referred to seven distinct times in the Epistle of Barnabas, twice in Clement's Epistle to the Corinthians, ten times in the Shepherd of Hermas, nine times in the Epistle of Ignatius, five times in the Epistle of Polycarp, mentioned by Papias without question and by Tatian in his Harmony of the gospels, by Tertullian, Ammonius, Julius Africanus, Origen, and others, in the third century. Then, shall we unceremoniously and without regard to all this testimony, of such high antiquity, tear out the two first chapters of Matthew? Shall we, in our conceited ignorance, blinded by a theory, and unstable by reason of new hypotheses, assume to contradict Matthew or erase two chapters from his book? Shall we rest our faith upon an obscure manuscript in which the first chapter and a part of the second have been altered or all together torn off? Shall we ignore the testimony of Clement, of Alexandria, and throw away the genealogy of Matthew's first chapter, when not fewer than fourteen manuscripts and two of the fathers read alike? The only question that can be raised in view of all the evidence of the authenticity of these two chapters is, who can doubt that they are genuine?

But, it is said, Matthew's statements are contradictory, and proved false by at least fifty Bible testimonies. Well, fifty are a great many! Would it not be well first to begin with forty-five or forty, or less? But what is a contradiction? It is an assertion to the contrary of what has been said. The synonyms of contradict, according to Crabb, are, oppose, deny. If one Bible writer affirms that Christ went into Egypt at one time and another Bible writer says he did not go into Egypt at any time, then there is a contradiction or a conflict of testimony, otherwise there is not. What are the facts? Matthew says: "He (Joseph) took the young child and his mother by night and departed into Egypt." Now, does Luke or any other Bible writer say that they never went into Egypt? There is no such Bible testimony. The fact that Luke is silent on this point is no proof whatever that he "contradicts" what Matthew has said. It is true that Luke states that Joseph and Mary and Jesus went to Jerusalem about forty days after Jesus was born, (compare Luke ii. 22 with Lev. xii. 2,) and that they (Joseph and Mary) went to Jerusalem every year, but does this statement contradict Matthew, or in any way prove that Matthew's statement is false, which is that they all went into Egypt at a certain time. Could they not go to Egypt and return in less than one year? It is only about three hundred miles from Jerusalem to Heliopolis, in Egypt, at the farthest estimation. Now, in the name of reason and common sense, I ask, could not Joseph and Mary and Jesus make the trip and return in one year, and yet be at Jerusalem every year as Luke says? Verse 41. But, it may be said, that forty days of the year were gone before they could have started on their journey.

Reply. There is no hint given by Matthew that they went to Egypt the first year, but proof that they did not go to Egypt until Jesus was two years old. Else why should Matthew say that Herod "sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof from two years old and under?" Evidently two years had elapsed since the star appeared, and the wise men made the inquiry which apprised Herod of the fact that there was a new king born. And, having failed to find Jesus through the wise men, he purposed destroying all infants born since that time. But, why take those who were two years old and slay them? Because, as Matthew says it was "according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men." If this be true, then, it follows that there is nothing in the way that would prevent using the whole year in a flight to Egypt and returning. But, to give the opposite argument, all the scope it claims, we will suppose that Luke does contradict Matthew, fairly and squarely, even then it will be difficult for the thoughtful to see how this would prove that Luke told the truth and not Matthew. Would not the testimony of Matthew be as likely to be true as Luke's? But they do not contradict each other in this matter. Both statements can be literally true, and are, without doubt, viz: That Christ and his parents went into Egypt, and that they, nevertheless, dwelt at Nazareth and went to Jerusalem every year to the feast of the passover. A. J. EYCHANER.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. L. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 22, 1873.

We return thanks to Brother W. Laing, of Edinburg, Scotland, for late pamphlets.

The yellow fever continues its ravages notwithstanding the change in the temperature of the weather for the past few days. In New Orleans, up to Oct. 21, there had been 12,312 cases and 3,733 deaths. In many other places there have been quite numerous deaths in proportion to the number attacked. Among other sad results the deaths of fifty-six clergymen and twenty-seven physicians are reported.

We owe an apology to some of our brethren for seeming neglect in noticing some propositions sent in by them some time ago. In consequence of sickness, some letters have laid in the Agent's hands, and some have been overlooked that have come into our own. Brother Harsh has been sick again for some time past, and we have had more on hand than we could promptly attend to. We will try to give attention to all as soon as possible.

The following shows the difference between the spirit of Christianity, as exhibited by the Savior and his true followers, and the spirit of bigotry and fanaticism so rife in Mexico where Rome and her priestly subordinates hold the sway over the ignorant masses. Such would be the state of things everywhere were the papacy in control of the power to force all to succumb to her dictation. Her superstitions or the fagot are her alternatives; while Mohammedanism presented faith in the prophet, the sword or Tribute to the subjugated:

NEW YORK, October 17.—A letter from the City of Mexico says: "Sept. 29, at Aizale, a mob, incited by priests, killed twenty Protestants and wounded a number of others. The governor sent troops to quell the disturbance. In Pueblo the mob threatened to break up the Protestant missions. President Diaz has promised Rev. Dr. Butler to do every thing in his power to protect all religious denominations."

True Immersion.

It is only by ascertaining how any particular word, in any language, is employed by the speakers and writers of such language that we can learn its precise force and meaning. In order to know the exact signification of baptizo we must see how those that [illegible] this particular word. Dr. Conant, in his appendix to the revised version of Matthew's Gospel, has given us an exhaustive list of the passages occurring in the works of Greek writers who employed this word in its classical application to circumstances and events which they describe. Of the 228 occurrences of the word, as cited by him from more than sixty different writers, twenty-seven times it is used in reference to the sinking of ships and other sea vessels. Now, let us ask whether ships sunk in a storm, or by an enemy, sink and rise repeatedly? Does not a vessel when completely submerged and filled with water go to the bottom? Was there ever such a circumstance as a laden vessel, when completely overwhelmed, ever rising three times or any number of times?

Dr. Conant has drawn his examples from every department of literature and science. He has quoted from "poets, rhetoricians, philosophers, critics, historians, geographers; from writers on husbandry, on medicine, on natural history, on grammar, on theology; from almost every form and style of composition, romances, [illegible], orations, fables, odes, epistles, sermons, narratives; from writers of various nations and religion, Jew and Christian, belonging to many different countries, and [illegible] long succession of ages."

[illegible] correct when he says, after tracing the word through all [illegible] authors as employed in all their works, "that the ground-idea [illegible] by this word is, to put into water (or other penetrable [illegible]), so as entirely to immerse [illegible]; that this act is always [illegible] by the literal application of [illegible] and is the basis of its metaphors. This ground-idea is expressed in English, in the various connections when it occurs, by the terms [illegible] (or various in this ground-element) to sink, immerge, submerge, to dip, to plunge, to imbathe, to whelm."

Mr. Thurman claims, like [illegible] that sprinkle and pour for baptism, that there is no word in English [illegible] an equivalent for baptidzo, and that it must be transferred to the [illegible] languages instead of being translated. Now we may safely say that there is not a single occurrence of the word where the idea of submerging, dipping or plunging is not an equivalent for the Greek word in [illegible] of its numerous occurrences. It never has a frequentative meaning in Greek any more than the word dip has in English.

Any substance or person may be baptized, immersed or dipped one, three or a hundred times, but some numeral adjective or qualifying term must specify the definite or indefinite number. Even the trine immersion must be signified by the adjective treis or an equivalent.

We will now consider some of the examples brought by Mr. Thurman to prove that baptidzo has inherently a frequentative force or signification. He brings an example from Josephus where the author describes the drowning of Aristobulus through the instigation of Herod. Josephus says that Herod's servants and acquaintances were swimming, and that "After a while, the young man, at the instigation of Herod, went into the water among them, while such of Herod's acquaintance as he had appointed to it, dipped him, as he was swimming, and plunged him under water, in the dark of the evening, as if it had been done in sport only, nor did they desist till he was entirely suffocated." The Greek is [illegible] baptounties aei and baptidzontes, "continually pressing down and immersing (baptizing) him while swimming, as if in sport, nor did they desist till they had entirely suffocated him." The repetition of the immersion is here expressed, not by the word baptidzontes, but by the qualifying expression often pressing him under the water and thus immersing him till he was drowned. Once pressing him under was only one baptizing, while often (aei) pressing him under the water was often immersing him. So that the frequentative meaning of the whole transaction is not expressed by the word baptize but by the adjuncts often pressing him under the water.

He brings an example from some ancient author, which Conant says is erroneously ascribed to Hippocrates, where bapto and baptidzo are used and where Mr. Thurman claims that baptidzo is a frequentative. It is in relation to the diseases of woman, and the English is thus given from the Greek original; "Then dipping—bapsas—(the pessary) into oil of roses or Egyptian oil, apply it during the day; and when it begins to sting, remove it, and again immerse—[illegible] baptidzein palin—it into breast-milk and Egyptian ointment." Because there is a second immersion directed by the physician, and this second dipping is expressed by a form of baptidzo instead of bapto, Mr. Thurman says baptidzo is a frequentative. Has he not penetration enough to see that the repetition is expressed by the adverb palin—again, anew, as it is defined in Greek? If baptidzein means repetition alone and by itself, why use a word that means afresh or a second time?

Another reference is made to an extract from Parallels between Greek and Roman Histories, where a story is related of a Roman general, who fell mortally wounded in an ambush of the Samnites in which the writer says: "But in the depth of night, surviving a little longer, he took away the shields of the slain enemies, and dipping—baptisas, baptizing—his hand into the blood, he set upa trophy inscribing it 'the Romans against the Samnites, to trophy-bearing Jove.'" He thinks that baptidzo is certainly a frequentative in this instance. It is just as much so as its English equivalent dip is by which it is translated and as much as dip is when we speak about dipping the pen in ink when we write. The general might have dipped his hand in the blood one or more times, but it is not because either the word baptize or dip necessitates the repetition but the amount of writing.

We will now call attention to the manner of using the word when more than one immersion is directed or expressed. In the account that we have of the healing of Naaman the leper, we are informed (2 Kings v. 10-14) that Elisha directed him to wash (lousai) in Jordan seven times, and that Naaman dipped (ebaptisato) baptized—himself seven times in Jordan. From this passage Mr. Thurman claims that not only is the verb demonstrated to be a frequentative, but he also tells us that we "may see and know that Paul did indeed have a good Bible reason for supposing that baptidzo is a frequentative verb." Now we credit Paul with more discernment, and with a more critical knowledge of Greek, than to suppose any such absurdity. Paul knew, as any person of good common discernment must know, that the repetition was expressed by the numeral adverb—hepakis, seven times—and not by the inherent meaning of the verb. The same argument that proves that baptidzo is a frequentative in the fourteenth verse would prove louo a frequentative in the tenth verse. It is in the adverb seven that makes the washings seven, and the immersions seven.

To show that Greek writers use bapto and baptizo indiscriminately, we have Dan. iv. 33, translated in the Septuagint by ebaphen from bapto, and in the version of Aquila by baptisthesetai from baptidzo.

In the version of Symmachus, which was made in the second century after Christ, the phrase "I sink in deep mire," Psa. lxix. 2, is rendered, "I am baptized into bottomless depths." In a version made by some unknown writer of Psa. lx. 15, which reads, "the heathen are sunk down in the pit," the author translates the Hebrew word טָבְעוּ tabeyu, which occurs also in the foregoing text, by ebaptisthesan—are immersed; and this is translated demersi sunt, plunged, by an old Latin writer.

But to return to the word when used in reference to the action when repeated, to further show that some additional word must always mark the number of repetitions.

A quotation from Cyril thus speaks of baptism: "After these things ye were led by the hand to the sacred font of the divine immersion, baptismos, as Christ from the cross to the prepared tomb. And each was asked if he believed in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. And ye professed the saving profession, and sank down thrice into the water, and again came up." Here, so far from a frequentative action being signified by the verb, it is necessary to define the number of times by the adverb trison, thrice. So Theophylact is quoted as saying, "The church has been taught to immerse (baptidzein) with invocation of the Trinity, and to symbolize the Lord's death and resurrection by the three-fold sinking down and coming up." Here, again, the adjective trisse, triple, to limit the number of plunges. Tertullian, who first alludes to trine immersion, explains it thus: "We are three times immersed, answering somewhat more than the Lord prescribed in the gospel." Jerome says: "We are thrice immersed, that there may appear one sacrament of the Trinity." The adverb ter, three times, is used to define and limit the number of the immersions. Alcuin, speaking of baptism, says: "And so, in the name of the Holy Trinity he is baptized with a trine submersion"—trina submersione baptizatur. These three last writers, though writing in Latin, have been compelled to give a numerical definition to many immersions should be administered, and they show the origin of this mode, it being a symbol of the Trinity.

The fiftieth of the so-called Apostolic Canons, dating about the fifth century, says: "If any bishop, or presbyter, shall not perform three immersions (tria baptismata) for one initiation, but one immersion (en baptismo) that given into the death of our Lord, let him be deposed." Zonaras, in his Annotations on the Apostolic Canons, is quoted as saying: "Three immersions (tria baptismata) the canon here here calls the thrice sinking down in one initiation; that is, in one immersion entbaptismati." Here the repetition is in the number employed, and not in the verb as a frequentative. We can hardly forbear noticing the absurdity of the language—"three immersions in one immersion," "three baptisms in one baptism," which would be three dips in one dip!

How silly is error. The word bapto has far more claims to being considered a frequentative, as in coloring, or dyeing, the material had to be often lifted up out of the coloring fluid and again submerged. Baptidzein does not in a solitary instance denote a frequentative action any more than the English word dip. If there be three baptisms there must be three dips; if seven baptisms, seven dips; if one baptism, one dip. If we write with our finger, as did the Roman general, we must immerse or baptize the finger as often as may be necessary just as we must dip our pen into ink, once, twice, or a hundred times if necessary. It is neither the word baptize nor the word dip that expresses the frequency of the act, but some qualifying number or circumstance.

The surest method of arriving at a knowledge of God's eternal purposes about us is to be found in the right use of the present moment. We must esteem our present grace and rest in it, and with tranquil assiduity correspond to it. Our present grace is the most infallible will of God.

Heaven is heaven because God is so beautiful in the light, and earth is the factory of saints because God is so beautiful in the darkness.

Don't judge a man by the clothes he wears. God made one and the tailor the other.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find one dollar for the paper. I don't want you should ever stop the paper until the Son of man comes in great glory to make up his Jewels, and then I am ready to give up THE RESTITUTION. And I hope and pray that the editor and also all that take the paper will be blessed with an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of God. Brethren what manner of persons ought we to be in order to inherit this blessed kingdom? Should our minds be placed on the things of this world? Let the Book of all Books answer this all important question. Titus ii. 1. Paul exhorts his own son in this wise, "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine. vii. c. In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you." Brethren let us all try and keep this exhortation in our minds, and always try to do our Master's will, and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

E. O. NELSON.

Editor Restitution:—I am an occasional reader of your paper, and I like it and the doctrine. I take four secular papers, and though my means are very limited, I think I shall subscribe for THE RESTITUTION as soon as my circumstances will reasonably permit. I think it my bounden duty, and although I am not connected with any church organization, I earnestly desire and seek after the truth. I am a poor young man, but I never have cause to regret spending money for good books and papers.

With this note you will find enclosed one dollar. Please send to my address your book called, "God's Plan of Salvation."

I very much desire to read your book on "Baptism," and also the "State of the Dead," but feel too poor to afford them. Please send "God's Plan of Salvation" at once, and oblige,

Yours truly, JOSEPH ALLEN.

Editor Restitution:—I have just returned from Remington, Ind. Had a glorious time. Thirteen were baptized into the faith, and there was a continued increase of interest and congregation. I was compelled to close the [illegible] at high tide on account of sickness in my family. I have never seen people more soundly converted to the faith, and more earnest in the work. We had to overcome every thing that could be done to keep people away from hearing the truth. Church bells were kept busy every night. J. H. HAUGHAWOUT.

Editor Restitution:—I here send a short letter for publication, intended to strengthen the good cause in Western North Carolina, and especially to strengthen Brother Gibbs. Several of the brethren in that mountainous country have written me with much warmth and love, brotherly affection and praise of Brother Elias M. Gibbs,

I was struck with the thoughts of one of them about Brother Gibbs, and about teaching the pure truth. He thought Brother Gibbs had been an able Baptist preacher, and that with the assistance of the brethren, good reading matter, long and careful study, and much practice (if this age continue long enough) he may become an effective and very useful teacher of the truth.

Realizing the fact that to teach the pure truth correctly is a harder task than to preach sectarianism, I labored very hard to teach those Western North Carolina brethren correctly, and I am pleased that they are keeping in memory the truth they have learned. I think all of our brethren out in that country will subscribe for THE RESTITUTION as fast as they get able—if they do get able at all in this life. Most of them are so poor that it is difficult for them to pay postage on the few letters they write, and a number of them write to me oftener than they do to all other persons. I sometimes send them paper, envelopes and stamps. I am too hard pressed now to take any paper at all, or I would have sent money before this time for THE RESTITUTION. I here enclose twenty-six cents. If you publish my letter about Brother E. M. Gibbs, you will please send one copy of the paper with that letter to said Brother Gibbs; one copy to me at this place; one copy to Brother A. F. Walton, Turnpike, Buncombe county, N. C.; also one copy of your paper of Sept. 11 to Brother Walton at Turnpike. I have written Brother Walton that I will try to get you to send him the paper of Sept. 11, as I wish him and others near him to read Brother Wilsons articles on The One Faith, and other good matter in that number of the paper. I have seen it at Doctor N. Fields's. You very kindly sent me several copies of the paper last summer, which I tried to use for good. Mr. Evans, of Osseo, Ind., told me he would send you the money for it for one year. Most of persons here give a deaf ear to the teaching of the truth. Can't do much good here.

Your brother in Christ,

R. H. GRESHAM.

SELECTIONS.

(New York Observer.)

The Bible at Paris.

A correspondent of one of the London papers writes that six hundred thousand portions of the Word of God have been issued from the Kiosk of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand on the Place du Trocadero, since May 1st. These were mostly in French, but an immense number were in German, English, Arabic, Greek, Swedish, Danish, Dutch, Portuguese, Spanish, Italian, Polish, Russian, and Hungarian, and not a few in Chinese and Japanese. The movement has the cordial sympathy of the French authorities, and the Prefecture has granted Mr. Alexander the special privilege to employ colporteurs outside all the entrances of the Exhibition. Several Christian volunteers labor daily inside the building. Parcels of Scriptures have been sent from Holland for distribution among the Dutch visitors. His Highness Prince Galitzin has been deeply impressed with the work at the Kiosk, and has lent his Kiosk at Trouville for Bible distribution. The Bible carriage work in France has so interested Prince Galitzin that he intends having seven Bible carriages in Russia to be employed in traversing every part of the country with the Word of God. To meet the demands which will be made before the close of the Exhibition, another half million Gospel Portions is required. The bulk of French peasants will not arrive till next month (September), after the harvest. To assist those residing in distant provinces who desire to visit the metropolis, the French deputies have just voted a grant of 50,000 francs. It is therefore quite certain that in connection with the Exhibition, and before its close, more than a million copies of various portions of the Bible will be distributed. This will scatter a great amount of the heavenly leaven throughout France and the whole world. It is a joy to know that, in these days of assaults upon the Truth, the Divine Word itself is having such free course.

Tribute to Woman.

The following beautiful tribute to woman was written several years ago, and occurs in a tale of touching interest, entitled, "The Broken Heart,"—its author, Dr. J. F. Stratton:

Oh, the priceless value of the love of a true woman! Gold cannot purchase a gem so precious! Titles and honor confer upon the heart no such serene happiness. In our darkest moments, when disappointment and ingratitude, with corroding care, gather thick around, and even the gaunt form of poverty menaces with his skeleton fingers, it gleams around the soul with an angel's smile. Time cannot mar its brilliancy; distance but strengthens its influence: bolts and bars cannot limit its progress; it follows the prisoner into his dark cell, and sweetens the home morsel that appeases his hunger, and in the silence of midnight it plays around his heart, and in his dreams he folds to his bosom the form of her who loves on still, though the world has turned coldly from him. The couch made by the hand of the loved one is soft to the weary limbs of the sick sufferer, and the potion administered by the same hands loses half its bitterness. The pillow carefully adjusted by her brings repose to the fevered brain, and her kind words of encouragement revive the sinking spirit. It would almost seem that God, compassionating woman's first great frailty, had planted this jewel in her breast, whose heaven like influence should cast into forgetfulness man's remembrance of the fall, by building up in his heart another Eden, where perennial flowers forever bloom and crystal waters gush from exhaustless fountains.

Sandy Foundations.

Hard times test the foundations which rest on sand. Men who stand on slippery places go down swift unto destruction. The fires of adversity consume wood, hay and stubble, while they refine the gold and make it more valuable. The great processes of trial and retribution move steadily on. Often the innocent suffer for the transgressions of the guilty, and learn thus to cease from man and trust wholly in the Lord. The hammer of adversity smites through shams and delusions. Rotten savings banks, fraudulent insurance companies, hollow corporations, and empty, oily-tongued hypocrites and swindlers fall beneath the storm, while honesty, purity, and fidelity stand the strain. Extravagance is checked, great villians are stripped of the glamour which surrounds them, their ill-gotten millions look small as they expire in a felon's cell. Wealth gotten by wrong hits away into the darkness; the price of blood stains its owner with infamy; hidden vileness comes to light, and the curse of God smites those who have long deemed themselves secure. In view of it all, men halt in their career of madness, extravagance and crime, and say, "Verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth." Plain truth wins in the end; honesty and uprightness survive the wreck. He who builds his house upon the rock stands not only through the storms of time, but through tempests that shall wreck the world, yea, more, he has "boldness in the day of judgment.

Christopher Mann of Independence, Mo., has just celebrated his 105th birthday. He has a son only eight years old, and is the father of twenty-eight children.

The wonderful vitality of Loman Griffin, who has lately died in Lodi, O., aged 100, was shown by the fact that he breathed several days after his limbs were lifeless, although he had not eaten for a week.

The most important piece of Roman sculpture ever found in London was lately excavated. It is believed to have formed part of a mausoleum. London was a large city, with a mint and other metropolitan institutions even in Roman days.

The Grand Orient of Free Masons in France has expunged from its ritual all recognition of God, and in consequence the Grand Lodges of Ireland, Scotland and England have severed all relations with the French body. Action by the Grand Lodges of the United States and Canada will be taken soon.

The Paris correspondent of Nature writes that M. Gayot has completed his calculations, and finds that Professor Watson's observations of the Intra-Mercurial planet are in accordance with Dr. Lescarbault's discovery, so long denied by Mr. Leverrier's opponents.

A dispatch from Calcutta quotes the passionate words of the Ameer of Afghanistan, uttered sometime ago before his court, as proof of the hostility to the British which exists in Cabul. "I have seven crores of rupees by me," said the Ameer, "every rupee of which I will hurl at the British Government; and I will roll the border tribes against them like blasts of fire."

On the suppression of the Commune in Paris, 600 boys were among the prisoners taken, and it was proved that large numbers of the murders and incendiaries were committed by them. They were sent to a reformatory at Rouen, and on being carefully inspected by two eminent physicians, it was found that 337 were of very delicate form and stunted growth. They were, however, among the most mischievous, and all the children of drunken mothers.

AN IOWA INN-KEEPER AT JERUSALEM.

A gentleman in this city gives information of a case of religious enthusiasm that is very interesting. Some ten years ago, Mr. Jonathan Brinton, of Washington, Iowa, became possessed of an idea that he was commissioned by the Savior to open an inn near Jerusalem, and so become a pioneer in the work of rebuilding and christianizing the holy city—for it was made known to him in a vision that the ancient glory of Jerusalem was about to return unto her. He was worth about $20,000; he gave $10,000 to his wife and son, who preferred to remain on the farm, hoping that the husband would be relieved of his insane notions by rough experience.]

So the husband went away alone—arrived at Jerusalem in safety, bought several acres of land in the most desirable location he could find two miles east of the city, built his inn, and opened it for the accommodation of tourists in the Holy Land. Two years have elapsed, and whether he has been cured of insanity or not is not known—but it is very certain that he struck a good thing when he built that hotel. His letters home have been of the most cheering character; his health has been good, he sees good times all the while. His pictures of prosperity, his longings for his wife's companionship, have caused Mrs. Brinton to decide to go to her husband. She has sold her property in Washington county and this week leaves, with her son, to join her husband at his inn on the slopes of Judea.

The kingdom of God is your home, therefore think of it; tribulation is your lot, therefore daily expect it.

POETRY.

The Vacant Places.

How much soever, in this life's mutations,
We seek our shattered idols to replace,
Not one in all the myriads of the nations
Can ever fill another's vacant place.

Each has his own, the smallest and most humble,
As well as he revered the wide world through;
With every death some hopes and hopes must crumble,
Which never strive to build themselves anew.

If the lily race of violets should perish
In June another spring-time had its birth,
Could all the costly blooms which forests cherish
Bring back its April beauty to the earth?

Not the most gorgeous flower that nurtures
Could give the olden grace to vale and plain;
Not even Persia's garden, full of roses,
Could ever make the world so fair again.

And so with souls we love, they pass and leave us—
Time teaches patience at a bitter cost;
Yet all the new hours, which the years may give us,
Fill not the heart-place aching for the lost.

New friends may come, with spirits even brave,
And kindle once again the tear-drowned flame;
But yet we sigh, "This love is stronger, fairer,
And better—it may be—but not the same!"

The One Spirit.

BY H. WILSON.

A short time ago an article from my pen, on the Holy Spirit, appeared in THE RESTITUTION. I find that some approve, others disapprove. Maybe I am not properly understood. I know that on a subject like this, confessedly difficult, it requires great plainness of speech. The mystery which seems to envelop it arises more from theological speculations than from Bible doctrine. I regard the sectarian world as much in error with respect to the Holy Spirit and its operations, as they are on the immortality of the soul. As they hold the doctrine, and teach it, it is subversive of the truth of God. It is one of the corner-stones of the apostasy—one of the pillars of the temple of error. I am sorry to find that even some of our brethren are not yet purged from it. They believe in the direct operation of the Spirit, and depend upon it for guidance, for light, for comfort. Is not such a view derogatory to God's Word? It makes it of no effect—a dead letter. Surely they must forget that it was given by his Spirit, and therefore must be living and powerful.

Jesus said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Did his words require the Holy Spirit to apply them to the heart of the hearer? We ought never to forget that the Scriptures have been given to us by the Spirit of God, and that they are amply sufficient to make a sinner wise unto salvation, and are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect thoroughly furnished unto all good works. 2 Tim. iii. 15-17. And yet it is said that it is necessary for the Spirit to go with this divine word, to guide, direct, open up and explain it; to enlighten the mind, and soften the heart, etc.; that we should seek for it, pray for it, be convicted of sin, converted, or born again of it; that the minister must preach under its influence, and that his hearer must have his eyes and ears opened, and the words of the preacher applied to his heart by the same power, or no good will result from his labors. All this, and a great deal more is said, making the Word of God of none effect, destroying man's moral agency and accountability, and casting responsibility upon God for everything.

There are many who claim to have been born of the Spirit—that it dwells in them—that they feel its power in their hearts; or, as one eminent preacher in Adventist ranks forcibly expresses it, "I feel it operating in me, tingling even to the ends of my fingers." All this is is either true or false. Because a man says he has the Spirit and feels it in him, does not prove it. He may feel something else. In apostolic times there could be no dispute as to who had the Spirit, and who had it not. The effects were visible to others, and demonstrated the fact. The Spirit is the same now as it was then, and if believers possess it, the same results will certainly follow. Paul calls it the "same Spirit" —the "one Spirit."

Why should any of our brethren be deceived in this matter? They know that the church does not possess the gifts of the Spirit, as our primitive brethren did, whatever may be their claim as to having the Spirit. They do know, however, that for some reason they have ceased, as Paul said they would. I Cor. xiii. Why should some, like the Mormons, wish to make out that the acceptance of the Spirit is part of the gospel? If there is a promise for us to possess these gifts, of course it is our privilege to have them. Where is that promise? Don't say, "The Father still lives, and can shed forth the Spirit as on Pentecost." He can only do as he has promised. This he will do. Let us take a reasonable and consistent view of this subject. Surely we are capable of properly understanding it. I am as much interested in being correct as any one. But to quote a string of texts in which the word Spirit occurs, and then say, as a good brother has said, that "if we believe not these, neither will we be persuaded though one rose from the dead," does not carry conviction to the mind, but rather the reverse. I believe the texts, but apply them differently.

The phrase, "one Spirit," occurs in Eph. iv. 4, and 1 Cor. xii. 4, 11, 13. This one Spirit is the Holy Spirit which the Apostle Paul imparted to some of the Ephesian brethren by the laying on of his hands. The proof that they received it was manifest to all—"they spake with tongues and prophesied." Acts xix. 6. Timothy also received this gift of God, by the laying on of Paul's hands. 2 Tim. i. 6. Paul himself also received the Spirit in the same manner through Ananias. Acts ix. 17. So did the Samaritans by Peter and John laying their hands on them. Acts viii. 17. This same Spirit was poured out upon the apostles on the day of Pentecost, and upon Cornelius and his household, and those present "heard them speak with tongues." Acts ii. 4; x. 46. Jesus was anointed with the same Spirit, and possessed it without measure. Acts x. 38; John iii. 34. The prophets in ancient times spoke to the fathers as they were moved by it. 2 Pet. i. 21; Heb. i. 1.

The one Spirit is the Spirit of power. By it Jehovah garnished the heavens and evolved the earth and all things therein. Job xxvi. 13; Gen. i. 2; Psa. xxxiii. 6, 9; cxlviii. 5. Boundless space is filled with the proofs of his power—the products of his Spirit. "Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 24. He does this by his Spirit, which is diffused throughout creation, sustaining and preserving it in being. The Psalmist understood this when he said, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell (sheol), behold thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me." Psa. cxxxix. 7-10.

This Spirit or power of God has been concentrated and deposited in chosen vessels for specific purposes. Jesus, the Christ, was especially the noblest and best depository of the Spirit, for it is testified of him—"He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." John iii. 34. Witness the proofs he gave that he possessed the Spirit in its fulness. The wild winds and fierce waves attested his power to subdue them; the feeding of hungry thousands with a few loaves and fishes bore witness that the creative energy which called the universe into existence was resident in him; the taming of demoniacal spirits, the curing of various human ailments and sicknesses, and the raising of dead persons to life, all proved him to be the Son of God with power. He also had the gift of prophecy, and of discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart. The Spirit he had in him brought all things as it were within his grasp, and made them present to his vision. So in a limited measure God's power by his Spirit was manifested through prophets and apostles. They "had this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power might be of God." 2 Cor. iv. 7. But this was the Spirit of power. From the Father and the Son it was poured down upon the apostles, and from the apostles it flowed out to the churches. There is no proof, however, that every individual member possessed it; nor was it necessary that they should. It was distributed in portions to certain persons for the benefit of the whole body. But it was the self-same Spirit that operated in every one. "God hath set some in the church—first, apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that, miracles; then gifts of healings, governments, diversities of tongues." 1 Cor. xii. 28 Why were these placed in the church? Evidently, that it might be edified. When Jesus ascended upon high he gave gifts to men. "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Eph. iv. 8-12. These were official characters, and all endowed with the Holy Spirit, to perform works of power, and act as leaders, instructors, and guides to the infant church, until full age and stature should be attained, by "growing up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

The promise of the Comforter, which is the Holy Spirit, given by Jesus to the apostles, was necessarily confined to them, on account of the specific work it should do for them. The Comforter was to supply the place of Jesus. "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." John xvi. 7. When come, it should teach them all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." John xiv. 26. This cannot apply to any one but those who had been with Jesus. It was to be their guide into all truth, and to show them those things which related to the Christ. John xvi. 14, 15. Their Lord was about to leave them to be his witnesses in the midst of bitter enemies, and he knew they would need assistance. This he promises, and tells what kind of help they should have. Nor were the apostles to commence their work until the Spirit should come upon them. "Wait," said he, "for the promise of the Father." "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endowed with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 49; Acts i. 4. They tarried and waited until Pentecost, and then the promise was fulfilled. Acts ii. The effects following proved that the Spirit had come upon them.

If it could be demonstrated that this baptism of the Spirit was to be repeated over and over again in the church, then there might be some excuse and consistency in pleading for it at the present time. How often have we heard united prayer for such a Pentecostal outpouring of the Spirit! And yet no answer came. And why? Simply because such prayers were not according to God's word—had no promise to rest upon. Some have thought they have received such an answer, and point to periods of religious awakening and revivals of religion. The comparison will not hold good. The spirit which actuated them was not the "one Spirit" which fell upon the apostles, for they neither spoke with tongues nor preached the same gospel which Peter preached on that occasion, nor directed their converts to do the same things for salvation. Acts ii. 37, 38. Instead of directing sinners as Peter did, they tell them to pray for the Spirit to soften their hearts, to convict them of sin, to convert them, and help them to believe and come to Jesus; and a great deal more of such unscriptural jargon.

Peter neither told his hearers to pray for the Spirit, nor to pray for faith, nor to pray for forgiveness. They were not told to pray at all, but to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins. They had something to do. They were called upon to submit to God's plan of righteousness, and then salvation would be theirs. The Holy Spirit through Peter dictated these terms. Why do men now, who profess to be born of the Spirit and to act under its direct influence and guidance, offer sinners a different method of obtaining forgiveness? They are actuated by another spirit, and therefore preach another gospel, which really has no power to save.

But says one, did not Peter promise those who obeyed the command not only remission of sins but the gift of the Holy Spirit also? He did. Remission of sins was obtained in the act of immersion, and the Holy Spirit was received through the laying on of the apostles' hands. See Acts viii. 14-24; xix. 1-7. No other way is revealed by which the Spirit could be obtained, and the promise be fulfilled to the believers. We have no reason to say that it was given direct to anyone, except to the apostles, and to Cornelius and those in his house. All others received it through the imposition of hands. But whether received direct from Jesus by a baptism, or through the mediumship of the apostles, the fact of its reception was patent to all—for all manifested it by either speaking with tongues, prophesying, or other gifts.

The one Spirit is also called the Spirit of glory, the Spirit of holiness, the Spirit of Christ, the Spirit of his Son, the eternal Spirit, the Spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind, the Spirit of adoption, etc. It is also spoken of as an unction from the Holy One, and the anointing received from the Father.

These various names and phrases indicate what is the character of the one Spirit. Though we may not now have the manifestations of the Spirit, or the gifts, as the primitive church had them, yet we can by living and walking according to the Spirit, bear the fruit of the Spirit, which is "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. v. 23; Eph. v. 9. Our lives can be governed and regulated by the Spirit's teaching in the present age equally as well as when the Spirit was giving those teachings through the apostles and those who were under its immediate influence. It was no more an helper or comforter, an instructor or a guide then than it is now. If any were comforted or instructed by the Spirit at that time, it was done through words addressed to the understanding. 1 Cor. xiv. 3. So it is even now. We have the words of the Spirit, full of instruction and comfort, which if believed and followed are all that is necessary for the perfection of our characters. The gifts, if possessed now, could not materially add thereto. If we are poor and blind and naked, the fault is our own. The Spirit has provided for all our wants richly and freely. If we cannot obtain what we need from God's rich storehouse—his Word—direct Spirit-gifts would do us no good. If the word of Christ dwell in us richly, and we let our behavior be as it becomes the gospel, then we shall be living and walking in the Spirit, possess the mind or spirit of Christ, be led by the Spirit, and by thus sowing to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

The Apostle Paul when writing to the Ephesians reminds them that they had been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. This was done when he gave them the Spirit. Acts xix. 6, 7. Eph. i. 13; iv. 30; 2 Cor. i. 22. To seal is to ratify or confirm something. Sometimes a seal serves as a mark, and to insure safety. He says they were sealed unto the day of redemption. The Spirit with which they were sealed is called the earnest. Eph. i. 14; 2 Cor. i. 22; v. 5. Also first fruits. Rom. viii. 23.

The Spirit was given to those primitive believers as an earnest or pledge that the redemption promised will come; also as a first-fruits of that Spirit which will quicken the mortal bodies of the saints, when they shall be born of the Spirit. That sealing was only a foretaste, an earnest, a first-fruits of that fulness of the Spirit which all of the redeemed will possess in the future state. At the present time we receive the same earnest of the Spirit, not direct, but indirect, through the Word of the Lord. And though we may have no manifestations now, yet we believe that the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal. The Lord knoweth them that are his. And "Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from all iniquity." 2 Tim. ii. 19. That the Lord knows his own, is a comforting assurance to all. He says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." Jno. x. 27, 28.

We are exhorted to "try the spirits whether they be of God." The Apostle John says, "We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; but he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." 1 Jno. iv. 1, 6. "Beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ." Jude 19; 2 Peter iii. 1, 2.

A Lonely Pilgrim in a Land of Strangers.

Elias M. Gibbs, a farmer, in poverty as to this world's goods, yet rich in the one true faith and in good works, whose postoffice address is Blue Ridge, Henderson county, North Carolina, is that lonely pilgrim. He has been taught in the two years past, mainly, I think, by the kind and earnest assistance of our very worthy and intelligent brother, Lankford Huggins, at Bright's Creek, Polk county, N. C. It was my privilege, by the grace of God, to be used as one of the means of bringing Deacon Huggins into the clear light of the truth, and I know his capacity and zeal as a teacher, and when he has taught a truth-seeker for two years the things concerning the kingdom of God and concerning the great King, I think the person thus taught should be well prepared to put on Christ in baptism.

Brother E. M. Gibbs had been for some time a Baptist preacher; had been baptized in ignorance of the truth, and therefore such baptism was invalid. About August 11, Elder E M. Anderson, of Edneyville, N. C., assisted Brother Gibbs to obey from the heart that form of doctrine described by Paul in Romans vi., and now he is one of us; and surrounded by enemies of the truth, the report is that his wife and his neighbors generally look on his course in derision. The nearest persons to him who are in the truth, I think are Brother and Sister Huggins, and they are, I think, some twelve miles distant, in a country of high mountains. Brother Gibbs is of excellent report from Brothers Walton and Bartlett, and others at Turopike, N. C., Brothers E. M. Anderson, J. L. Whittaker, and others at Edneyville.

I write this in behalf of Brother Gibbs, because he desires the prayers of faithful brethren all over this country, and he would be glad to receive a large number of good tracts and papers to distribute.

Your brother in Christ.

Our Bangor Meetings.

Editor Restitution:—Our Bangor meetings commenced on Friday, the 20th, and continued for one week, ending this evening; Elder R. Corbaley being our minister. During these meetings he preached nine discourses. Brother Corbaley leaves here to-morrow morning for a place called the Oregon House, where he will hold a series of meetings, comprising two or three discourses. The people here and there are anxious to hear the gospel preached as it is—glad tidings—especially what few members there are here. Our folks enjoyed the conference very much. Thanks to the brethren and sisters for their kindness at that place. May we all meet there again and have another such a time as this. Brother Corbaley has been here twice before and baptized five. The people around here say they never heard the gospel preached so before. The Bible seems to be a new book altogether. I joined the church at our first conference held at Willow Slough, Yolo county. Now, in conclusion, let me say that I would like to take THE RESTITUTION, but times are so hard that I cannot raise the money to pay for it.

May we all inherit the kingdom that will be prepared for us, forever and ever.

The Altar and the Pillar. Isa. xix.

In that day there shall be an altar to the Lord, in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord.

What is an altar? Twelve unt ewn stone upon which to offer sacrifice and oblation. Who build altars and offer sacrifice? Israel and Judea. When? In that day when the land of Judea shall be a terror to the Egyptians; in that day when five cities in Egypt shall speak the language of Canaan, and as those events are future, therefore is the building of the altar, and offering of sacrifice, future.

The pillar by the border thereof bears testimony for itself.

O. T. HOBBS.

The attention of the authorities in England is seriously directed to the subject of infant mortality. The returns of the Register-General have told year after year a shocking story. Putting the thing plain, the horrid fact stands forth that a vast proportion of British born infants are murdered for the sake of the burial money, and infanticide is now as common on the banks of the Severn as it was in days of old on the banks of the Ganges. Patent child food is the chief means by which this slaughter of innocents is carried on.

"Step by step," reads the French proverb, "one goes very far."

POETRY.

His Coming.

L. M. BURGESS.

As the bud proclaims the blossom
So the dawning hour
Heralds the Savior's coming
In his might and power.
In the east the star has risen
And ascending higher
Day by day, to its brighter gleaming,
Tips the world with fire.

Hearts that slept and dreamed are waking,
Burning as with fire,
Longing for his speedy coming
As he draweth nigher.
Sometimes up to heaven gazing
Heavenly music, we,
Tramp of armies, gleaming garments,
Almost think we see.

As we know the hour approaches,
Yearning hearts beat higher,
Trembling with the expectation
And the strong desire.
But how can we meet that moment!
Mortals some will faint
'Neath the wondrous weight of glory
Angels could not paint!

Oh, how can we meet that moment,
Meet those wondrous eyes?
Can we bear to look upon him,
He, our sacrifice?
All my heart is rent with sorrow
Filled with love and pain,
Yet with such triumphant glory
Shouts, he comes again!

Oh, he comes! and with his coming
Sorrow flies away,
And what tongue can cease to praise him
In that glorious day?
Hasten, Lord; our hearts are fainting;
Oh, we thirst for thee;
How long, Lord? The hours are ages
Till thy face we see.

Thy pierced hands—thy side all wounded—
Thy pale lips I see,
Sadly smiling—oh, they smite me
With "all this for thee!"
Come, oh, come, and let thy presence
Heal this broken heart—
Broken by thy sweet compassion—
Come no more to part.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Kingdom of God."

The word of God alone, contains the hope by which mankind are saved. His word is the only beacon that shines above the waves and through the mists of worldly speculation, to point the harbor of peace and safety. It was given by the Divine originator to man, that he might behold and understand his nature and destiny, viewing in its truthful reflections his joy or shame, his honor or dishonor. An allwise God has not veiled His word concerning earth and man in the infinite and mysterious glory of His name and creation. His will is given to the finite and mortal, and though in our insignificance, we fail to comprehend the mighty works of His power; we can by searching know and understand the law given for our guidance and that pertains to our future life or death. If as some contend, His law is too deep for human fathoming, how can we obey what we do not understand? Can a merciful God judge by a law he has rendered incomprehensible? Certainly not: Come let us reason together said the Lord. God who created nothing in vain created this earth for a purpose. Having called it from chaos and poured on it the light of His creation; having made the glory of the firmament of heaven; after separating the earth from the waters, and bidding it to bloom in freshness and beauty and bring forth increase; after pronouncing His Divine approval that all was good: He crowned the work of His might by the creation of man. This man who was made in the image of his Creator, was given dominion over the earth and its inhabitants. He was placed in the Paradise of Eden and surrounded by all that was beautiful and desirable, the presence of God for love and protection, and the birds of the air, the beasts of the forest, and the fish of the deep obedient to His will. Thus God made and beautified the earth for man. In the midst of this Eden stood two trees, the tree of life, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. God gave the command, of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt die—(Margin) Gen. xi. 17. But the tempter came. He described with subtle tongue the pleasant taste of the forbidden fruit. He told them of the greatness they might attain even an equality with God. He deceived them with the words "thou shalt not surely die" notwithstanding God had said in case of disobedience "thou shalt surely die." Man yielded to the seductive hope, but alas, instead of everlasting life he found death, instead of equality with God he was abased, and the very beasts disowned his authority. The sin of disobedience was the cause, death the result of the fall. Driven forth an exile and wanderer on the face of the earth which was cursed for his sake, he was compelled to toil in the sweat of his brow for his daily bread. Subject to all the evils his sin brought, the Almighty fiat above his head "dust thou art unto dust shalt thou return" the father of the human race lived the wreck of what was once glorious. Thus sin entered the world and death by sin.

But it is not the intention of a just and merciful God to thus suffer one man's sin to blight forever the beauty of his handwork; nor to let an innocent offspring suffer and die for the faults of a father without placing in their reach a hope of regaining life, honor, and glory. It is also God's fixed inviolate purpose to remove the curse from the earth, and prepare it in its pristine beauty, as the abode of such of Adam's posterity, who by continuance in obedience inherit immortality. As the Bible is the only revelation of God's purpose to the world, to it we must go in proof of these statements. In order that we may learn we must possess the spirit of teachableness; prejudice must be cast aside, and, Berean like, we must search the Scriptures and see if these things are so. Be assured of one thing, if this counsel be of man it will come to nought, but if it be of God ye cannot overthrow it. The means God uses for removing death from man and the curse from the earth are all centered in the establishment of His kingdom.

The kingdom of God is a common phrase but thousands using it have no idea of its meaning. Of its location the world at large is in profound ignorance. Some say the church is the kingdom or a branch of a celestial kingdom. But mark the difference between this teaching and the teaching of the Scriptures. They plainly declare that the kingdom through which men obtain eternal life, so often spoken of and referred to by prophets and Apostles as the kingdom of God at present exists no where, but its ruins will be builded again, and it will exist in all the glory and excellence of Jehovah's presence on the earth, when Christ shall be made manifest in His kingly beauty at His second appearing, and shall reign on the throne of His father David.

The three great elements of a kingdom are, territory, subjects and king. The territory of the kingdom of God is described and bounded in Gen. xv. 18. It is the land lying between the river of Egypt even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, God commanded Abram to leave his own country, and go into a land he would show him. After showing it, God bade him walk through it and behold its excellence for it was to be his for an everlasting possession. But what right have we to say that the territory promised Abraham is also the territory of God's kingdom? Because God gave Abraham the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and promised that his seed (Christ) should bless the earth. Because Christ is God's anointed King, and the heir to David's throne, which never existed any where but in Abraham's promised inheritance. Because God has promised all faithful believers in the promise He made to Abraham, that they shall reign with Christ on the earth. Rev. v. Because the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem. Isa xxiv. 23. "So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain." Joel iii.

Having proved that the territory given Abraham is also the territory of God's kingdom it may be well to notice the testimony concerning this promised inheritance; testimony that establishes beyond a doubt, not only the earthly location but the everlasting duration of the inheritance. God said expressly, I will give thee this land on which thou art standing for an everlasting possession. This proves conclusively that the earth must endure forever, for if it pass away Abraham will find God untrue and a covenant breaker. But God cannot lie, so Solomon exclaims, one generation passeth away, and another cometh, but the earth abideth forever." Eccles. i. 4.

When Jacob slept on the land promised his fathers he saw the glory of God and angels ascending and descending on a ladder that reached from earth to heaven; and God made with him the covenant he made to Abraham and Isaac. Gen. xxviii. 13. God did not tell Jacob that his seed should inhabit this land for a time and then be carried to heaven, but it was to be theirs for an eternity.

The subjects of the kingdom will be the Jews. Although they have gone astray, and have forgotten God's path, yet he will surely bring them back into their own land under Messiah the Prince. "For he will set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." While the saints have an everlasting heirship in the inheritance, the subjects will be mortal "for the child shall die one hundred years old, and the sinner being a hundred years shall be accursed." The nations existing at Christ's coming will also be subjects to Jehovah's laws.

Micah, in speaking of this, says: "That it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all people shall flow unto it; and many nations shall come and say: come ye, let us go up to the house of the God of Jacob and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." A time of universal peace, such as the world never knew, will hold sway over the earth; "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Micah iv.

The bloody struggles of a carnal age will be no more; no man shall oppose his neighbor, for the whole world will be ruled in justice and equity under the Prince of Peace. Having noticed the subjects of God's kingdom, we come now to the divine testimony that Jesus of Nazareth will be their King. In order that this may be proven conclusively, we must know his fleshly title, and also whether that title is regarded valid by Jehovah, the King under whom all kings have their authority and dominion. In regard to Jesus' fleshly title, let us consider the promise to, and covenant with David: "Now these be the last words of David, David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the Anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said; the spirit of the Lord spake by me and his word was on my tongue. The God of Israel said: The rock of Israel spake to me. He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." Although my house be not so with God yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure, for this is all my salvation and all my desire.

Here, in the first place, David describes the glory and majesty of the ruler over men. He must be just, ruling in the fear of God. David also acknowledges that his house is not worthy of this honor, and admits that it is totally unable to produce an equal to this glorious model. Yet, notwithstanding his unworthiness, God has made an everlasting covenant with him that such honor is destined for his house in the future. In view of the promised excellence, David exclaims: "It is all my salvation and all my desire." 2 Sam. xxiii.

God especially defines the covenant in 2 Sam. vii.: "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom." "He shall build an house for my name, and I will stablish the throne of his kingdom for ever." This testimony cannot refer to Solomon for his throne and kingdom did not endure forever; besides David says expressly: "Thou hast spoken of my house for a great while to come." 2 Sam. vii. 10.

We find, then, that God describes the excellence of the person who is to rule over mankind, and also tells of the everlasting duration of his throne and kingdom. This everlasting power and glory, without further proof, points to Jesus, who alone can fill the qualifications of so honored a position, and if the word of God contained no other light on this subject, we might understand, at once, to whom the covenant applied. But God has revealed in emphatic and plain language, in the words of Peter, and in other parts of his truth, to whom he referred when he declared unto David, "I will establish his throne and kingdom forever." Peter, in addressing the great multitude gathered together on the day of Pentecost, said; "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day; therefore, being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii.

One thought here. Where is David's throne? In heaven? No; for Peter says expressly, David is not ascended into heaven. Acts ii. 34. Then it must be on the earth, for on the earth David reigned, and his throne was in the earthly city, Jerusalem.

Again, in the angels' message to Mary, we have undisputed proof that Christ will possess David's throne. "And the angel said unto her, fear not Mary. Behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 30–36. "Thus is Jesus' fleshly title established beyond all contradiction, and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end; upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice from henceforth even forever." Isa. ix.

We come now to consider, whether Jesus of Nazareth was acknowledged by God as worthy of his title. We are told that, at the baptism of Jesus, God caused the heavens to be opened and his spirit descended and abode with Christ, and a voice declared, "this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Here we have the divine record that Jesus was proclaimed Son of God, and one in whom God was well pleased. God also bore him witness by wonders and miracles, and sustained him through all the temptations that beset him. Throughout the life of Christ we have abundant proof that he was accepted of God as one in whom all fulness dwelt. When Christ was crucified he had written over his head, "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews." If he had been an imposter God would not have countenanced this title by a resurrection from the dead. But Jesus, our Lord, was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead. Rom. i. 3, 4.

Thus was Jesus Christ's claim made sure, for he is both Son of God and of David. His righteousness, long-suffering, and glorious resurrection; his descent, according to the flesh from David, has gained him the grand and everlasting title, Jesus of Nazareth, God's only begotten Son and Anointed King. When Christ, the future King comes to earth again it will be in majesty and great glory. There must be prepared for the reception of so grand a King, not only a kingdom, but a capital that will surpass in beauty all the cities of men. The grandeur of this kingly city cannot be imagined. The brightness of the King's presence will give it light, and from its heights it will overlook and rebuke the nations. What is the name of this wonderful city? O hallowed name, Jerusalem. Yes, Jerusalem, that lies now in ruins, whose gates are possessed by strangers; whose temple is no more; whose courts are profaned; Jerusalem will be glorified and made the throne and dwelling place of the Great King. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed when the Lord shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. He hath chosen it. He hath desired it for his habitation. This saith he is my rest forever; here will I dwell, for I have desired it. I will bless abundantly her provision; I will satisfy her poor with bread; I will also clothe her priests with salvation and her saints shall shout aloud for joy. There will I make the horn of David to bud; I have ordained a lamp for mine Anointed. His enemies will I clothe with shame, but upon himself shall the crown flourish. There can be no doubt that the literal, earthly Jerusalem and the literal Mount Zion are spoken of in these passages. The consistency of the idea that the church is the kingdom of God, and that the names Zion and Jerusalem apply to it, will be seen by submitting church for kingdom in the following passages: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the church." "Thy church come. Except a man be born again he cannot see the church." "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the church." Now, reverse this. Substitute kingdom for church in other passages and the absurdity of confounding the two is made evident. "John to the seven kingdoms in Asia." "Greet the kingdom that is in their house." "Paul sent and called the elders of the kingdom." This is sufficient.

To what strange doctrine men will lead us. They would make us believe that the Apostles' practiced the folly of praying, "thy church come," after it was established. Why do they pray "thy kingdom come?" Why take the name of God in vain, and beseech him to bestow on man something already possessed? O the gross darkness that covers the people because of ignorance and unbelief. Having adduced proof that the kingdom of God will be established on this earth with Jesus the Christ as king over the nations, let us consider the teaching in regard to the essentiality of believing the things concerning it. We find that the Apostles proclaimed the kingdom of God as the means of salvation. "For when they (the people) believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12. Christ said he was sent to preach the kingdom of God. Luke iv. 43. It, then, being the substance of both Christ's and Apostles' preaching, must be of vital importance to seekers after eternal life. But, some may say, must we not believe the gospel for salvation? Most assuredly; for, in believing the gospel, you believe in the things concerning the kingdom. It is called the gospel of the kingdom. Matt. iv. 23.

Now, Paul declares: "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Gal. i. The gospel the Galatians received at the hand of Paul was certainly the gospel of the kingdom that Jesus preached. It follows, then, that all are but so-called ministers of the gospel who are utterly ignorant of the constitution and location of God's kingdom; and in preaching another kingdom bring upon themselves and all who embrace their doctrine the curse pronounced by Paul. In Hebrews ii. 3, we find it written: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation which at first began to be spoken by the Lord." The kingdom of God is this salvation. Dan. ii. 34-44; Psa. lxxii.; Psa. xxii. 27-28; Gal. iii. 8. The only salvation for mankind is through belief in the kingdom of God. If found unworthy of it, man will share in the utter destruction of the kingdoms of the nations when God's kingdom shall break them in pieces, and consume them; and it shall stand forever. Then let him who desires eternal life, eternal honor, eternal glory, "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto him." Matt. vi. 33.

Eternal kingdom, promised rest,
When will thy majesty the earth adorn?
Come, let thy righteousness dispel the gloom
Death casts upon our paths.
O glorious King return, thy people wait
A scattered band, some in the silent grave,
Some toiling 'neath the world's dark frown,
Then haste, O Lord, "Thy kingdom come."

Our Duty No. 7.

But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. James i. 4.

Patience, also, is one of the crowning graces. The Apostle, in the preceding verse, says: "Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience;" and at verse 12 he says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." A crown of glory will be given to those who endure temptations and afflictions patiently.

Anything is a temptation that tries our patience, and it is very frequently tried in the home-circle. Something occurs to make us cross and fretful; these dispositions of mind must be driven away, and a clear, calm brow, composed movements, and kind words and tones, are to take their place. "Count it all joy," says the Apostle, "when ye fall into divers temptations." We can not count things as joy if we are cross and fretful. Perhaps something is difficult to find; but can you not be calm about it? Perhaps something has been broken, but it will not mend it to scold. Perhaps some one needs to be reproved, but you can do it far more effectually, and leave a better impression, by being earnest but calm about it. Perhaps you are tired; yet you can manifest a pleasant disposition. I might enumerate many more ways in which our patience is tried at home, but this is enough to set us to thinking. We are to exhibit patience in all our domestic duties. Paul says to Titus: "But speak thou the things that become sound doctrine,—that the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience; the aged woman likewise, that they be in behavior as becometh believers.. Chapter vi. 1-3.

We are to exhibit patience in our contact with the world. "Be patient towards all men." 1 Thess. v. 14. "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." Gal. v. 22, 23. If we are at work with our fellow-men, we are to let patience have her perfect work even though we know they fail to do their part. In conversation with them we are to exhibit patience. In laboring for others they will exact more than what is right, yet we are to be patient. If we are injured in any way by others, we are to take it all patiently. Peter says: "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it if, when ye buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God." 1 Pet. ii. 19, 20. Paul says he prayed that we might be "strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness." Col. i. 11. In the parable of the sower, our Savior says: "But that (seed) on the good ground are they, which, in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." Luke viii. 15. "And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end; that ye be not slothful, but followers of them who, through faith and patience inherit the promises." Heb. vi. 11, 12.

Patience will have her perfect work when we have so far crucified the "old man" as to look upon all of our trials and troubles with joyfulness. When we have met with a loss of anything that tries us, we are to be joyful that the Lord is testing our patience that we may be perfect. This is the Lord's object in affliction. We may lose our property, but we should "count it all joy." We will be sick or some of our folks, and we will be tried and tempted in a multitude of different ways, but we are to suffer with joyfulness.

We are beginning to live in especially trying times—in times when the poor are being oppressed on the one hand and wealth is hoarded up on the other. James says of them: "Ye (the rich) have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." This same class (the rich) condemned and killed the just, (our Savior) and he did not resist them. "Suffer with long patience (margin) therefore, brethren," says the Apostle, "unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." See James v. 1-8.

Brethren, the Lord is testing a people for the high position of governors in the coming age, to rule the nations; and the test is obedience to his commandments, and self-government according to the rules he has given us. The opportunities for these exalted stations will soon be gone; and when the door is once shut, it will never again be opened. When the Lord comes for his people, will we hear it said: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth?" Rev. iii. 10.

A Blessed Conversion.

Editor Restitution:—Through the providence of God there was a man sent to this neighborhood, whose name is Robert H. Gresham, of Indiana. He began to teach the gospel of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, which I verily thought was heresy, and he an Anti-christ—in the way he taught. So I took down my old Bible—which had been undisturbed for several years—to prove him such; but to my surprise I was convicted, and, as I hope, converted to the whole truth. I became, I trust, a true believer above three years ago. Since that time I have been wonderfully blessed. I subscribed and paid for the World's Crisis one year and a half. I received some tracts from that office, numerous letters, papers and tracts from Brother Gresham, two copies of the blessed old Bible from Sister Susan E. Teeple, one package of tracts from Brother McLauchlan, papers from Brother Thompson, several copies of THE RESTITUTION from John Hoar, RESTITUTION with a bundle of tracts from Brother Magruder, reading matter from Dr. N. Field, and from various other persons not now remembered. I am very poor, but the friends and brethren have furnished me with such matter as Brother Gresham did when he first visited me, and it has taken deep root.

The glorious doctrine of the soon-coming King is being believed by some of our honested-hearted mountain people. Press on the glorious good news of the kingdom, and may this people pray in earnest—"Thy kingdom come." I have read several numbers of THE RESTITUTION sent me, but I have not been able to subscribe for it on account of the poor health of my wife. As she is getting better, I hope to soon be able to do something for the cause.

May God bless those brethren who have furnished me with THE RESTITUTION and other reading matter. Your brother, looking for the Master,

L. HUGGINS.

It is God's unbounded love, rather than his immense magnificence, which makes him ever new to us and his beauty always a fresh surprise and a fresh delight. It is not only, to use the distinction of the psalm, the greatness of his mercy but it is the multitude of his mercies which make our trust and confidence in Him so inexpressibly consoling and our union with him so far more intimate than any other tie of which we can conceive.—Faber.

If I believe that Jesus died,
And, waking, rose to reign above,
Then surely sorrow, sin and pride
Must yield to peace, and hope, and love.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as necessary prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Faithfulness.

BY AUSTIN CURTIS.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. ii. 10.

Faithfulness, or fidelity, is a distinguishing trait of Christian character. We have many illustrious examples recorded in the Bible of unswerving loyalty to the mandates of "the faithful God." Deut. vii. 9. "Moses was faithful in all his house." Num. xii. 7; Heb. iii. 2, 5. So also was David. 1 Sam. xxii. 14. "Faithful Abraham was called the friend of God." Gal. iii. 6, 9; James ii. 21-23. The noble deeds and heroic valor of "the faithful in Christ Jesus" (Eph. i. 1,) of by-gone ages, are presented to us in "the glorious gospel of the blessed God" (1 Tim. i. 11,) for our emulation. The greatest want of the age, is faithful men. We can exclaim, in the language of David: "Help, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men." Psa. xii. 1; Micah vii. 2, 3. "A faithful man who can find?" Prov. xx. 6. The following lines, from the pen of Dr. Holland, "speak volumes of the great pressing want of the day:"

"God give us men! a time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking;
For, while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,—
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting justice sleeps."

Society, in general, presents a complicated scene of corruption and intrigue. It is manifest in the church, as well as in the world. Confidence is betrayed on every hand. Fidelity, with some, is unknown. Although men frequently prove recreant to their trust, "God is faithful." 1. Cor. i. 9; x. 13. With him "is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Mal. iii. 6; James i. 17. "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes." Psa. cxviii. 8, 9; cxlvi. 3-6. We should have implicit confidence in God's "faithful word." Titus i. 9. The banner of "truth" (Jno. xvii. 17,) should be held aloft, and not trailed in the dust. Isa. lxii. 10. Then

"Furl it not, but let it wave,
There's victory to be won.
O where's the noble, and the brave
To do the work 'undone?'

"Upon the firmest rock, secured
From storm and tempest wild
All ages past it has endured,
And cannot be defiled.

"In time of trouble and distress,
It beckons to the shore;
Where anxious souls may calmly rest,
Content for evermore.

"It gently floats upon the breeze,
And wafts a welcome cheer,
That hearts and minds may be at rest
And know the Lord is near.

"It long has been a guide to life
Where peace and love abides;
And always conquers in the strife,
And sets untruth aside.

"Then on that Banner steadfa-t look
And read 'your motto,' there
Your name be written in the 'Book'
And in the Kingdom share.

"Tho' earth assail and stout hearts fail,
Hold fast your Faith on high,
And you shall hail, tho' lips grow pale,
A life that's full of joy."

We must be "faithful over a few things" if we would be made "ruler over many things." Matt. xxv. 23. Only those that "are called, and chosen, and faithful," will dwell with the "King of kings," and share with him, "the victory." Rev. xv. 2; xvii. "A faithful man shall abound with blessings." Prov. xxviii. 20. "O, love the Lord, all ye his saints; for the Lord preserveth the faithful." Psa. xxxi. 23. There are a great many things in which we can manifest our fidelity to God. We should be faithful in the proper use of the time allotted to us, in which to work out our "salvation with fear and trembling." Phil. ii. 12. We should be found at our post, "redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Eph. v. 16; Col. iv. 5. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." Rom. xiii. 11-14. "The time is short." 1 Cor. vii. 29; 1 Pet. iv. 7.

"Time's sun is fast setting,
Its twilight is nigh;
Its evening is falling
In cloud o'er the sky.
Its shadows are stretching
In ominous gloom;
Its midnight approaches—
The midnight of doom."

Take care of the minutes and the hours will take care of themselves. Moments are the gold dust of time. Our present life is but "a little gleam of time between two eternities."

"The leaf that falls in autumn's hour,
The rose that dies upon the stem,
Are emblems of the silent power,
Of time and change o'er us and them."

In the words of Brother Bonar,—

"Time is not for man to trifle!
Life is brief, and sin is here.
Our age is but the falling of a leaf—
A dropping tear.
We have no time to sport away the hours,
All must be earnest in a world like ours.

"Not many lives, but only one have we, one, only one!
How sacred should that one life ever be—
This narrow span!
Day after day filled up with blessed toil,
Hour after hour still bringing in new spoil."

"As good stewards," (1 Pet. iv. 10,) we should faithfully use the "talents" intrusted to our keeping, so that when the absent "Nobleman" returns, (Luke xix. 11-27,) our ears will be saluted with the soul-inspiring words: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Matt. ii. 5; xiv. 21. "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. iv. 2. "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." Luke xii. 41-45. "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon (or riches) of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If, therefore, ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, (or riches,) who will commit to your trust the true riches?" Luke xvi. 9-11. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20; Rom. xiv. 7, 8; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. We should be faithful to each other, as well as to God. "Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." Rom. xiii. 7. "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." Matt. xxii. 15-22. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. vi. 10.

"Up! there's no time for rest to-day!
There's stubborn work to do.
For every willing heart and hand,
The blessed daylight through.
Nor must we loiter, slack, or sleep,
Save in the friendly night,
Which hides, beneath its grateful shade,
The labors of the light!

"Up! there's no chance for rest to-day
Brothers of human kind,
In many a dark and sterile spot,
Are groping, lame and blind.
And, there are burdens to be borne,
And fetters to be broke,
And trees of evil to hew down
With many a toilsome stroke!

"Up! for the world is full of strife,
The earth is sown with sin,
Quick springing, like the noxious tares,
A noble field within,
And, though at first but thy blades,
Oh shower and sunshine born,
The labors needs but rest, and straight
They overtop its corn!

"Then up! nor dream of rest to-day!
The foes are all around,
And some concealed in ambush lie,
And some in plain the ground.
Then let us gird the harness on
To wrestle or to toil,
The laborer reaps the golden grain,
The conqueror wins the spoil!

"Soon, for the day is passing,
And you be dreaming on;
The others have run their race to-day,
And forth to the field are gone;
A place in the rank awaits you,
Each man has some part to play;
The Past and the Future are pleading
In the face of the stern To-day.

"Rise from your dreams of the Future,
Of gaining some Real-ization's gold;
Of a stirring some airy fortress,
Or holding some great hold.
Your Future has deeds of glory,
Of honor (God grant it may be!)
But your arm will never be stronger,
Or the need so great as To-day.

"Rise! is the Past clasping you,
Her sunshine and storm forget;
No cause so unworthy to hold you
As those of a vain regret;
Sad, or bright, she is lifeless forever,
Cast her phantom arms away;
Nor look back, save to learn the lesson
Of the noble strife To-day.

"Rise! for the day is passing!
The low sound that you scarcely hear
Is the enemy marching to battle—
Arise! for the foe is near!
Stay not to sharpen your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last,
When, from dreams of a coming battle,
You may wake to find it past!"

THE SEED OF ABRAHAM.

In the Old Testament this seed is described as the seed of the woman that was to bruise the serpent's head; the seed promised to Abraham, who was to take possession of his enemies and bless all the nations; the seed of David who was to be established forever, and whose throne was to continue as long as the sun. He is called the king's son, who was to judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon the earth. He was to judge the poor of the people, and save the children of the needy, and break in pieces the oppressor. In his days the righteous were to flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth—all nations were to call him blessed. He was the child that was to be born, the son given upon whose shoulders the government was to rest; and of the increase of his government and peace upon the throne of David there was to be no end. He was to be wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was to be upon him, and by his stripes we were to be healed. He was the one like the Son of Man, who was to come in the clouds of heaven, and to whom was to be given dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages might serve him, and whose dominion was not to pass away, and whose kingdom was not to be destroyed. He is the Lord who was to come, and all the saints with him, and whose feet were to stand upon the Mount of Olives, and who was to be made king over all the earth. Thus is the seed of Abraham described in the Old Testament.

This seed is distinct and separate from the nations. It is never called the nations, and the nations are never called the seed. The distinction between the Seed and the nations is recognized throughout the whole Bible, even to the very last chapter.

Who, then is the seed of Abraham?

Christ is the seed. The prophecies and the promises concerning the seed of Abraham in the Old Testament are applied to Christ in the New. In the New Testament Jesus Christ is called the Son of David, the son of Abraham. Christ, then, is both the Son of David and the Son of Abraham. Whatever is true of the Son of David is also true of the Son of Abraham.

The angel said to Mary concerning the child to be born, "whose name was to be called Jesus: he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. Mary sang of him as the seed of Abraham, saying, "He hath helped his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy, as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed forever." Zachariah "also spoke of him as the horn of salvation raised up in the house of his servant David, to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham."

Thus Christ was born to fulfill the promise made to Abraham and David. He died for the same purpose. He was raised from the dead to sit on the throne of his father David, and fulfill the promise made of God to the fathers. Paul said: "Now to Abraham and to his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And seeds, as of many, but as of one. And to thy seed which is Christ."

Then, Christ is the seed both of Abraham and of David. He will sit upon the throne of his father David, and fulfill the promise made to Abraham. He will have power over his enemies, and do all the work Abraham and David were to do.

Who else are the seed?

The saints also are the seed. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ." "Ye are all one with Christ Jesus." "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." "They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of promise are counted for the seed." "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. And if children then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together." "If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him."

Thus the saints are the seed of Abraham as well as Christ. They are joint heirs with him to his inheritance, position and work. They are the branches; Christ is the vine. They are the lively stones in the building of which Christ is the chief corner stone. They are the members of Christ's body, he is the head. They are the harvest, of which christ is the first fruits.

THE QUALIFICATION OF THE SEED.

1. Christ's moral character.

He loved his Father so well that he always did those things that pleased him. He loved his work so well that he said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." He loved the world so well that he gave himself to save it. When the hour of his trial came that he was to lay down his life, he said: "O, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." He made the honor and glory of his Father the object of his life. The Father testified of him, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." The Apostle Paul said of him, "He loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God anointed him with the oil of gladness above his fellows, and established his throne forever." "Who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes we are healed." He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin; therefore he can be touched with the feeling of our infirmity, and succor them that are tempted. His life was a life of trial, of temptations, and of sufferings; but he was faithful in his obedience, and he overcame. He was worthy to be raised from the dead. Thus Christ was qualified morally to occupy the position, and do the work of the seed of Abraham.

2. Christ's physical nature.

Being found worthy of the resurrection he was raised up the third day. "Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly, not to all the people, but to witnesses chosen before of God, even to us who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." He now lives by having life in himself—he lives by the power of an endless life. He can no more return to corruption. Of himself he said, "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forever more." Thus Christ is qualified physically to do all the seed of Abraham was to do.

3. His appointment.

"Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies." "The Lord hath sworn unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." The kingdom where all people, nations, and languages dwell shall be given to him. The government shall rest upon his shoulders; God has appointed unto him this kingdom. All judgment will be committed unto him. All power will be given unto him in heaven and earth. When he comes in his glory he shall sit upon the throne of his glory and have power over all nations.

This testimony shows that Christ will be appointed by his Father to occupy the throne of his father David, and reign over his enemies, and subdue them by executing judgment and justice in the earth.

Thus Christ will be qualified by the appointment of God to do just what the seed of Abraham was to do.

THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE SAINTS.

1. Their moral character.

They were once enemies by wicked works. They were children of wrath even as others, but now they have become reconciled to God. They were honest and teachable; they had ears to hear, and they had heard the gospel—the word of the kingdom—God's plan for saving the world by Jesus Christ. They understood it and believed it with all their hearts. They repented and changed their lives; yielded themselves to God as they had previously yielded to sin, and were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins. In this way they became united to Christ, that they might have a right to his name, become members of his body, and joint heirs to his inheritance. In this way they became citizens of the household of God, and showed their faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, "being planted in the likeness of his death that they might be in the likeness of his resurrection."

And now, being made free from sin they have become servants of God. Therefore, being justified by faith, they have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." They have made God's purpose their purpose, God's plan their plan: they love the things he loves, and hate the things he hates and their sympathies flow out in harmony with his will; they have all received the Spirit of Christ, for without it they are none of his. They have borne the fruits of the Spirit, which are love and joy, and peace, and longsuffering, and goodness, and gentleness, and faith, and meekness, and temperance. They have lived soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; for without this they cannot be his disciples. They have loved Christ more than they have loved father or mother, wife or children, houses or lands, or even their own lives; for without doing this they are not worthy of him. They have put their hand to the plow and have not looked back, for such only are fit for the kingdom of God. They have stood fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel. Every man who has this hope purifies himself even as Christ is pure. They have been tried and tempted in all ways, but they have overcome, and can say with Paul, when they are about to die, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge will give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Thus the saints become morally worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, and to be joined with Christ in his position, and to do the work of the seed of Abraham.

2. Their physical nature.

Being found worthy of the resurrection from the dead, they will be raised up from the dead, they will be raised up so as to die no more. Their mortal bodies will be quickened. Their bodies will be redeemed. Their vile bodies will be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. Their natural bodies will become spiritual, heavenly, immortal, and incorruptible bodies. And in this way they will receive everlasting life in the world to come.

Thus the saints will be physically qualified to be joined with Christ, and do whatever the seed of Abraham was to do.

3. Their appointment.

The Savior said: "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "Because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. To another he said, Be thou over five cities." He said, "He that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne, and shall have power over the nations." Judgment will be given to the saints when the time comes that they possess the kingdom. "To them will be given the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, that all nations may serve and obey him."

Thus the saints will be qualified by the appointment of God and of Christ to do all that the seed of Abraham was to do.

And thus the seed of Abraham—Christ and the saints—will be qualified morally, physically, and by the appointment of God, to take possession of the gate of his enemies, and subdue them by the administration of a righteous government over all nations, and after having destroyed those that curse Abraham, to bless all the nations of the earth according to the oath God sware to Abraham.

Very truly yours.

The Invalide Russe announces a plan for the reorganization of the Russian army, the effect of which will be to add 350,000 combatants to it. "In the course of a few years we shall be able to produce an army of two million combatants," says this authority.

The British Museum has lately acquired a copy of the Latin Vulgate translation of the Bible, "Lugduni Apud Hygonem a porta," 1538, with Holbein's cuts, a volume described by the Athenæum as a most precious rarity, in the original and stamped vellum covers.

The Japanese Government have agreed to grant a loan of $1,500,000 for the purpose of working some of the coal deluis which spread over an immense area in the island of Yezo. "It is now possible," says Mr. Lockyer in the Nineteenth Century, "to record every change which goes on in the sun down to a region so small that one hardly likes to challenge belief by mentioning it; changes under one second of angular magnitude in the centre of the sun's disk can now be faithfully recorded and watched from hour to hour; in other words, changes in cloud regions ten miles square in a body 92,000,000 miles away can now be chronicled."

He can still work; his skin is like parchment, his hair plentiful, but snow-white, and rolled about his head in turban fashion. His eyes are full of fire, he answered every question in the clearest manner, and accounted for his astonishing longevity in these words: 'I have never to my recollection eaten more than once a day; the 1st and 15th of each month I fast rigorously from all food, but drink a quantity of water. I always eat my food cold. I have never committed the least excess in drinking.'"

THE RESTITUTION.

B. J. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 30, 1878.

RENEWED thanks to Bro. H. Heyes for late foreign papers.

A LATE dispatch brings the news that Lord Beaconsfield had had a serious apoplectic fit, and that his condition was precarious indeed.

A SHORT communication will be found in another part of the paper from an old and valued correspondent J. P. Weethee. We hope he will furnish us with some more extended contribution for THE RESTITUTION on the fulfillment of prophecy. We were sorry when he discontinued his expositions, as his previous studies had well qualified him to write on prophetical themes.

QUITE an abatement in the number of cases of yellow fever has been the result of a change in the weather in the south. Heavy frosts have checked the spread of the disease, and the Howard Association is closing up its affairs, refugees are returning home and business is reviving. The number of cases in New Orleans, at last reports, was 12,002 and deaths 3,004. In Memphis the deaths amounted to 2,942. In all other places taken together, the number of deaths would foot up quite large.

IT will be observed that our brethren differ in sentiment in regard to the universality of the resurrection, as well as in their views of the future destiny of the heathen who have died in absolute ignorance of the plan of redemption. We give some space for a temperate statement of some of these topics without any note of dissent or approval. We are not at agreement with all that appears from different correspondents, but it is fair that brethren have a hearing. Some of these questions will never be fully solved in this age. We only see in part; hence can only prophesy in part.

OUR receipts are so meagre just now, that we fear that we shall not be able to give any more papers this year than we did last, which was forty-six numbers. Our paper is later than usual this week, owing to the poor health of the agent and some other reasons. Our condition, financially, is no worse than some other papers advocating the Lord's soon coming. We notice that Messiah's Herald has received something more than a thousand dollars in donations to keep it afloat as a weekly. The Herald of Life, and other papers, only live by receiving extra help. Without more aid we must drop from two to three papers before January to evade further indebtedness. Should any of our subscribers feel unwilling to make a part of the sacrifice in this way, the full number of their papers will be made up. Indeed we endeavor to give the full number sooner or later.

Trine Immersion.

Mr. Thurman makes this singular sweeping assertion:

"Since both God's sacred writers, and all the Greek fathers, in whose own mother-tongue the apostles preached and wrote, without a single exception, all, in each and every case used baptidzo as a frequentative verb, I feel astonished that there should have been but one opinion as to the apostolic mode of baptism."

Now we have carefully examined every occurrence of the word as drawn by Dr. Conant from the classics, the Greek versions of the Old Testament, the New Testament, and the fathers, and have not found a single instance where baptidzo is used as a frequentative in any one of the numerous examples, amounting to about 350 in all, and as Dr. Conant had the works he has cited in the original, and a Thesaurus in addition to all the leading Greek lexicons, giving every place in every author where the word occurs, we suppose we have seen the word in nearly every occurrence in classical literature and in all the important places where it occurs in the fathers; and we have examined every place where it is said to occur in the different Greek versions of the Old Testament, as well as every occurrence in the New Testament, and have not found one instance where it has a frequentative meaning alone and by itself, any more than the English word dip would have in similar circumstances. To baptize a finger in blood in order to write, to baptize hyssop in water in order to sprinkle a person or a number of persons, or to baptize steel or iron in cold water in order to cool or harden it, means no more than the word dip would mean if the same occurrences were described in the English language. If the act be repeated more than once, some numeral or circumstance expressive of repetition always denotes the definite or indefinite number of repetitions.

Let us, however, admit that baptidzo is a frequentative in its own signification "in each and every case without a single exception," and see what must necessarily follow.

Naaman was commanded to baptize himself seven times in Jordan. Now if the word baptize means dipping repeatedly, as claimed, the question would be as to how many dippings would exhaust its meaning. Suppose we admit what trine Immersionists claim in the act of baptism, and say three. Then for Naaman to have baptized himself seven times he must have dipped himself three times for each baptism, making, in all, twenty-one dips. This would be doing no more than is done in carrying out the commission, where simply baptizing into a definite comprehensive name is enjoined as one act, but which is subdivided into a trine dipping by those claiming that the verb is a frequentative.

How would this principle work when a plural form of baptizmata is employed? For instance, in the Apostolic Constitutions, Canon L. says: "If any bishop, or presbyter, shall not perform three immersions—τρία βαπτίσματα—for one initiation, but one immersion—ἓν βάπτισμα—that given into the death of our Lord, let him be deposed." Supposing we treat one baptism here as a frequentative, as Mr. Thurman claims in every instance where the word occurs, then the three baptisms must be a plurality of frequentatives.

But we will not put me this absurd claim any further than to state that the verb baptidzo is employed to express plunging steel into the fire in order to heat it; the heated steel into water in order to temper it; an object into liquid in order to drink it. It is applied to ships sunk in the sea; to tow dipped in oil for burning; to salt thrown into water to dissolve it; to a branch dipped in a liquid in order to sprinkle it about; to a medical preparation—a pessary of cantharides—dipped in breast milk and ointment, to allay irritation; to a sword plunged into an enemy's breast; to a hot poker plunged into a person's eye; and to sliced turnips pickled in brine. It is also used of the soul immersed in the body, and of the perceptive faculty immersed in the depths of the body; of the mind immersed in ignorance; the wicked are immersed in wickedness; and the prodigal is immersed in debt. Indeed, all places where the word occurs go to demonstrate that [illegible] ground-idea, means exactly what the learned German grammarian, Kuhner, claims for this as a derivative from a substantive root, the changing of that substantive sense into an action. The old root, bap, or with a vowel suffixed, bapo, meaning a dip, or submergence, has become, in the derivative, baptidzo, to dip, or to submerge some object. The object then becomes the thing dipped, and may be baptized once, twice, three times, or a hundred times, and this repetition of the bap or dip must be signified by some number or circumstance. As both bapto and baptidzo are derived from a more simple root, and as both words occur in the Septuagint and also in the New Testament, the question may be asked, What is the difference in the ground-meaning of these two verbs? In many instances there is no difference. The Seventy render the Hebrew of tabeal of Job ix. 31, by ebapsas, a form of bapto, while the version of Aquila renders it by baptisei, a form of baptidzo. So by some authors the foundered ship is spoken of as being merged by using a form of bapto, as [illegible] baptisai he naus, the ship is immersed, or sinks, while another author, narrating a similar event, says, [illegible] —lelo de naus baptilsthenai—the ship being immersed, using a form of the verb baptidzo. In many other instances, however, there is this difference: The word bapto is preferred where the dipping is done to secure some ulterior purpose as a result of the dipping. If the object be to color or dye any material, as wool, cloth, or yarn, some form of bapto is employed. If the object be to saturate, smear, or tinge, this verb is also used. Thus we have forms of the verb bapto employed three times in the Greek New Testament. The first is Luke xvi. 24, where the rich man says, "Send Lazarus that he may dip [illegible] —apsato—the tip of his finger in water;" here the dipping was not the ulterior object, but the wetting the finger with water to apply to the parched tongue, in order to cool it. Had the finger been inflamed, and had a physician prescribed a dipping in water to cool the finger, instead of wetting the finger to cool something else, some form of baptidzo would have been employed. The word occurs again, John xiii. 26, where our Lord, to point out who should betray him, says. "He it is to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped—brexo—bapsas—it." Here the object of the dipping was to saturate the piece of the paschal lamb, or morsel of bread, with the [illegible] gravy [illegible] authorities say) prepared for the occasion. The third occurrence of the word is in Rev. xix. 13, where the coming victor is represented as "clothed with a vesture dipped—[illegible]—bebammenon—in blood," and where the idea is of a vesture colored or stained by having been dipped in blood.

For this reason the Hebrew tabeal has been rendered by forms of bapto, as in Ex. xii. 22, which reads: "And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip—baptesthe—it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel," etc. Here the ulterior object is saturating the bunch of hyssop with the blood in order to stain the lintel and posts of the door, and hence a form of bapto is chosen. So in Lev. iv. 6, 17, where the priest is directed "to dip—baptei—his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times," etc. Here the remote object is the dipping was to take of the blood on the finger in order to sprinkle it before the Lord. There is far more reason for claiming a frequentative action in using bapto in these verses than can be shown in any of the hundreds of cases were baptidzo is used, as undoubtedly the priest dipped his finger in the blood seven times, or just as often as he sprinkled it. The same explanation will apply to Lev. xiv. 6, 51, as well as to Num. xix. 18. In Ruth ii. 14, where Ruth is told to "dip—baptei—her morsel in the vinegar," saturation is the object. In Lev. ix. 9, Aaron "dipped—ebapse—his finger in the blood," with the ulterior object of putting it on the horns of the altar. In 1 Sam. xiv. 27, Jonathan "dipped—ebapse—the end of the rod in the honeycomb," with the ulterior design of bedding it with the honey. In 2 Kings v. 14, the dipping itself was the thing enjoined, and hence a form—ebapsato—of baptidzo is employed, but so far from being a frequentative inherently, the number of times—seven—is carefully specified.

Thus, while both the verbs bapto and baptidzo have a common province in the language, as both signify to dip or immerse, still each has a separate province into which the other does not intrude. If anything is to be colored, tinged, stained, saturated, or even wetted by the dipping, then some form of bapto is chosen; but if the idea is to express the [illegible] sunkened, sunk, submerged, plunged into, immersed, or baptism is appropriate. Thus, Isaac first dipped his finger in the basin of blood, but this was that the blood might adhere to his finger in order to sprinkle it before the Lord, and he would dip as often as he sprinkled. Just so in other cases where the ceremony of dipping and sprinkling is mentioned in the law of Moses. Jonathan dipped his rod to take up honey on its end. Ruth dipped her morsel in the vinegar to saturate it and make it more palatable. Lazarus was desired to dip his finger in order to wet it and thus convey a few drops to cool the parched tongue of the rich man. The Savior dipped the sop in the sauce in order to saturate it and make it the more palatable before presenting it to Judas. Cloth, wool and raiment are dipped to color them. Hence, in all these instances some form of bapto is used. On the other hand, when the mind and the nobler faculties are submerged in ignorance and vice; when a tract of land is flooded with water; when a sword is plunged into some part of the body, or a hot iron into the eye; when animals are submerged and drowned by an overflowing river; when iron is dipped into water to cool it, or steel to harden it; when a person is submerged by others to drown him; when anything is sunk into brine to pickle it; when a person is bathed for perspiration; and when a person is immersed into some religious system, then baptidzo, in some of its forms, is the appropriate word. The exceptions to these principles where bapto is used for something sunk or plunged, or where baptidzo is used for something smeared or saturated, are extremely rare.

Our readers will perceive that bapto, when used for coloring anything in a dye, or for dipping, a finger seven times into a basin of blood in order to sprinkle it, or when used for tinging or saturating anything, has more claims to being treated as a frequentative than baptidzo. If there be any more force in baptidzo than in bapto, it is intensive rather than frequentative. Completely whelmed is the idea rather than often dipped.

We hope this article will make the distinction between the two words clear and definite. The effort to prove trine immersion from the assumption that baptidzo is inherently a frequentative and demands a number of dips to make one immersion, is of the weakest, not to say of the silliest, character. The authorities and lexicons, that are quoted to prove [illegible] frequentative [illegible] authorities, any such conclusion. Donnegan defines the word—"to immerse repeatedly into a liquid—to submerge—to soak thoroughly—to drench with wine, etc." All these definitions find their application in the reading of the Greek. When the youth, Aristobulus, was drowned, it was by "often pressing him down, and dipping"—baptizontes—him, that this was accomplished; hence the verb baptidzo is used according to his first definition.

If a ship was sunk it would be submerged according to another definition. If a man were beastly drunk he would be drenched, according to another definition.

Neither Donnegan, Stuart, nor any other man of learning would have us understand that it requires three, seven, or ten dippings to make one repetition, but that there are places where the action of submergence is often repeated, and baptidzo is the verb employed. Surely Donnegan would not have us understand when a man is drenched with wine—[illegible] —hapa pathas baptizomene—that he had got drunk three times to become drenched, or that when a people were immersed in ignorance—agnoia bebaptis menon—that they had been repeatedly submerged. Thoroughly whelmed or imbued would be the idea. The word baptidzo is used where there are repeated submergences, but there are no more submergences, or dips, than baptisms.

We are somewhat prolix, but wish our readers to understand this subject.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution—I write you, that no unfavorable construction be put upon my long silence. I gave Brother N. Bond reasons, which our brother pronounced not valid. I had occupied so much room in THE RESTITUTION, for a year or more, that it seemed to me that I was crowding out others whose writings might be more interesting to the brethren than my own.

In the early spring (March) I was threatened with an attack by the champion debater of the Disciples, a man of twenty-six discussions, and uniformly victorious—Elder J. S. Sweeney, formerly of Chicago, Ill., now of Paris, Ky. I agreed to meet him; but for some cause, not stated to me, he has not come to time. Whether he will meet me at some future day he has not stated.

I have been called to act as a moderator in two discussions; one between an Advent Disciple and an Episcopal Methodist minister; the other, during the whole of last week between a Disciple minister, A. W. Dean, of Nelsonville, Athens county, Ohio, and W. S. Bell, of New Bedford, Mass., a Free Thinker. That you may see the unblushing infidelity of our age, I state the propositions which he undertook to establish:

1. The Bible is entirely of human origin, and is, with its religion, an outgrowth of pre-existent Paganism, and is, when received as inspiration, pernicious in its influence.

2. Jesus did not arise from the dead.

Learning that Mr. Bell was claimed to be a graduate of two eastern universities, and that he was an old debater, I expected great things. He was a pleasant speaker. His voice was agreeable, and his manner deliberate, and, to some, attractive. What he said was principally written, and nearly half of it printed. It was soon apparent that he did not understand the position of his opponent. He had been accustomed to combat New England orthodoxy. When he found that he was obliged to face Moses and the prophets, Jesus and the Apostles, his strength departed. His defeat was most signal, one of the moderators being obliged to bear a large share of the blame of his discomfiture.

Mr. Bell is an infidel lecturer, professedly a believer in the God of nature, but as fidently, at heart, an atheist. He is an open blasphemer of the God of the Bible, not seeming to know that every objection urged against the God of the Scriptures, can, with equal force, be brought against the Author of Nature. Events are pushing us onward to the final catastrophe. How soon we shall meet it does not appear. One thing is certain that the masses of church and state are in blindness as to the events now impending. The handwriting on their walls is seen, but the writing, is to them, in an unknown tongue.

The world appears to be in total ignorance of the near approach of the Savior. Such is the influence of German Rationalism on popular theology that no event named in the Bible could be less anticipated than Christ's personal return. The hope of the gospel is but little understood, less dwelt upon, and still less in the affections of the many that pride is the ruling Christian.

Whatever may be our views relative to the second advent, one thing is essential, that we love his appearing. 2 Tim. iv. 8. It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him (of seeing him at his appearing and being like him) purifieth himself even as he is pure." 1 John iii. 2, 3. A doctrine that does not purify the heart is of little value to the Christian.

The temporary settlement of the "Eastern question" has thrown the leading nations into the position I partly anticipated. Russia, in combination with smaller powers, in the north and east, and England with Turkey in the west and south. Further developments must soon follow.

Two propositions have been presented in THE RESTITUTION which have not yet appeared to me correct. The one is rather new, the other quite old:

1. The germ of sin has not yet been revealed. This is new, and to me, quite singular. It has, to my mind many serious defects.

2. The Turkish Empire is the mystic Euphrates of Rev. xvi. 12. This interpretation, by expositors generally, seems to be assumed rather than proven. I hope that some able brother will be so kind as to show that that interpretation is consistent with the laws of symbols. This task I have not yet seen undertaken in THE RESTITUTION. I make the request from a sincere desire to have removed from my own mind objections too difficult for me to remove.

The call for a convention in New York relative to the second coming of Christ, is a new feature in this age. I should certainly be delighted to attend its sittings. Yours, etc.,

J. P. WEETHEE.

Editor Restitution:—You have not heard from me for some time, but I have been busy in the general work. Visited the brethren in Illinois and Michigan since last wrote you. Attended the annual conference at Antioch, Illinois, and the annual meeting of Michigan. Had good meetings and witnessed the progress of truth in both states. There was a goodly number of old and tried friends at both these annual gatherings, and a number of young people started for the home of the good. Five at Antioch, Ill., and nine at Woodland, Mich., were buried. At the place last named a little band

POETRY.

"A Little While."

John xvii. 23-24; Romans viii. 17. 2. Philippians iii. 8-21; Revelation xxiii. 4-5; 1 Thessalonians v. 23-24, 28.

"A little while" of mingled joy and sorrow,
A few more years to wander here below,
To wait the dawning of that golden morrow,
When mortal shall be clothed with immortality.

"A little while" for watching souls to pray,
For lost we sorely lament;
A little while for hurling unbelievers,
By telling others of a Savior's coming.

"A little while," and we shall dwell forever
Beside our bright, ever-lasting home,
Where time, or space, or death no more can sever
Our tried-weary hearts—and pain come to rest forever.

"It is but a little while;" the way is dreary,
The night is dark, but we are nearing home;
Oh! for the rest of home, for we are weary,
And long to inherit what the Lord has promised!

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Testimony of Jesus."

B. WILSON.

A respected sister writes to me as follows: "Explain Rev. xii. 17 and xix. 10. What is the testimony of Jesus? Is it the spirit of power to prophesy? If so, who is this remnant seed? and when fulfilled?"

Without presuming for one moment that I can explain the above texts, or answer the questions proposed, any better than my dear brother, I venture to offer, through the columns of THE RESTITUTION, the following remarks:

1. The Testimony of Jesus. This testimony I understand to be "the record that God gave of his Son." 1 John v. 10, 11. This was given to the Apostles to publish, guard, and keep. The "word of reconciliation" was committed unto them; hence they were "ambassadors for Christ," as though God did beseech by them. 2 Cor. v. 19, 20. Paul said that he was made a minister of the gospel, to fulfill the word of God, Col. i. 24-29, and that he was set for the defence of the gospel. Phil. i. 17. That gospel was the testimony concerning Jesus, which Paul was sent to publish. When, soon after his conversion he went to Jerusalem, and "spoke boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians, and they went about to slay him," Jesus spoke to him in a vision, saying: "Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem; for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me." Acts ix. 29; xxii. 18. The ministry which he received of the Lord Jesus, was to "testify the gospel of the grace of God," and he did this when he preached the kingdom of God, and taught those things which concern our Lord Jesus Christ. Acts xx. 24, 25; xxviii. 31. He was not ashamed of this gospel, but from Jerusalem round about unto Illyricum, he fully preached it, and shunned not to declare unto all the counsel of God. Rom. i. 16; xv. 19; Acts xx. 27. To the Corinthians he wrote: "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech, or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." 1 Cor. ii. 1, 2. He delivered this testimony in weakness, but it was attended with the power of the Spirit.

In 1 Cor. i. 6, he calls this the testimony of (concerning) Christ which was confirmed in (or, among) them. He exhorted Timothy, "Be not thou ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel, according to the power of God." 2 Tim. i. 8. Here "the testimony" and "the gospel" are synonymous. Paul was "a prisoner of Jesus Christ," "an ambassador in bonds" for preaching the gospel. Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 19, 20. This testimony is styled "the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers," and "the hope of Israel." (Acts xxvi. 6; xxviii. 20,) as to be declared to King Agrippa, and the chief men among the Jews at Rome, when he stood before them bound with a chain for his defence of the gospel.

The Apostles were all commissioned to proclaim the good news of the kingdom, and to be witnesses for Jesus unto the uttermost part of the earth Acts i. 8; Luke xxiv. 47, 48. They held the same testimony—"the word of the faith"—"the word of the truth of the gospel." Rom. x. 8; Col. i. 5. This word they preached everywhere, and called it "our testimony." 2 Thess. i. 10. It was identical with "the word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ," and which was published throughout all Judea, beginning from Galilee. Acts x. 36, 37; Matt. iv. 23; Mark i. 14, 15; Luke iv. 14 21, 43, 44; viii. 1; ix. 1-6. This was "his testimony"—"the testimony of Jesus." John the Baptist said of him, "What he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony. He that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true. For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God." John iii. 32-34

Now, let us look at Rev. xix. 10 and xii. 17. I do not understand that the angel who spoke to the Apostle John about "the testimony of Jesus," meant something else than that word of salvation which Jesus and his Apostles preached. Mark what the angel said: "I am thy fellow-servant, and (fellow-servants) of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; worship God; for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." John's brethren possessed this testimony, and together with him were suffering on its account. Hence he wrote, "I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the Isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." Rev. i. 9.

We also read that suffering for that testimony was not confined to those primitive times. Under the fifth seal, John in vision saw the souls or persons of them "that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held." Rev. vi. 9. This testimony or faith which they held, undoubtedly, was the same as that for which John suffered punishment, and of which he bore record. Rev. i. 2. "The remnant of the woman's seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ," (Rev. xii. 17,) refers to a class of believers who shall live in the days of the voice of the seventh angel. They are also persecuted for their adherence to the same testimony for which the saints have always suffered. In Rev. xiv. 12, it is further corroborated and elucidated. "Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." The class of persons referred to in this text is the same as that in Rev. xii. 17, and therefore, "the faith of Jesus," and the testimony of Jesus Christ, for which they suffered are one and the same.

2. Is the Testimony of Jesus the spirit of power to prophesy? From what I have already written the reader will perceive that I do not think it to be so. The spirit of power was given to confirm the testimony. The Apostles, to whom was given the word of the Lord, after they had waited and received power by the Holy Spirit coming upon them, "went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Mark xvi. 20. "God also bearing witness, both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will." Heb. ii. 4.

I presume the query was proposed because some think that this was the meaning of the angel when he said,—"the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." But as I have shown what this testimony is, I will only add, that the faith, the gospel, or word of truth, is the burden or spirit of the prophetic word; for Peter writes about it thus: "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time the spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven." 1 Pet. i. 10-12.

3. Who is the remnant seed? I have already intimated that I think the remnant seed here referred to, is a class of believers who will live under the blast of the seventh trumpet. During the sounding of this trumpet, the mystery of God will be finished, as he has declared to his servants the prophets. Rev. xi. 7. It begins with the first resurrection, and ends with the kingdoms of this world becoming the kingdom of our Lord, and of his anointed. 1 Cor. xv. 52; 1 Thess. iv. 16; Rev. xi. 15-18. The resurrection and translation of the saints is symbolized by the birth of the man-child, and its being caught up to God, and his throne. Rev. xii. 5. The woman signifies the church as a whole, even "the exalted Jerusalem, which is the mother of us all." Gal. iv. 26. When the saints are caught away, the church will be in a desolate, forlorn state, well represented by the woman fleeing into the wilderness, where she is supported for three years and six months. When the dragon finds that she has escaped his persecuting power, he directs his rage against "the remnant of her seed, who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."

These I understand to be those who heed the proclamation of the everlasting Gospel by the angel flying in mid-heaven Rev. xiv. 6, 7. The dragon, through the beast, makes war upon them, and overcomes them, for he causes as many as will not worship the image of the beast to be killed. Rev. xiii. 7, 15; xiv. 12, 13. It is probable that a large portion of this remnant seed will be Jews. They will be converted at this time, and suffer persecution with the rest of those who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. Isaiah says to them, "Hear the word of the Lord, ye who tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." Isa. lxvi. 5. They will say, "in the way of thy judgment, O Lord, have we waited for thee; the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee." And when the Lord shall come and reveal himself to them they will say, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. xxv. 9; xxvi. 8.

Those of the remnant seed who suffer martyrdom will be blessed with those who live and reign with Christ for a thousand years, Rev. xx. 4-6: while the rest will join in the grand anthem of praise which will roll up to the heavens, like the voice of mighty thunderings—"Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Rev. xix. 6.

4. When fulfilled? I presume this is predicated upon the second and third, relating to the spirit of power to prophesy, and the remnant seed. Of course, this query is already answered, in replying to the others. I am of the opinion, however, that the spirit of power will be manifested again upon the earth, to confirm the word, antagonize the power and reign of the man of sin. There has been a long interval, from apostolic times down to the present, without the miraculous agency operating in and for the church. The church has been left to walk by faith, rather than by sight, and thus obtain the greatest blessing. Jesus said to doubting Thomas, "because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." So it may be said of those who receive the Gospel on the testimony alone, without the confirming signs, wonders, miracles and gifts of the Holy Spirit. There is a time coming, however, when it is probable spirit-power will again attend the ministry of the word. It almost seems necessary that it should be so, when we read that antichrist is to be revealed according to the energy of the adversary with all power and signs, and lying wonders; and that he will deceive those that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles. 2 Thess. ii. 9, 10; Rev. xiii. 13, 14; xvi. 14; xix. 20. The two witnesses have power to work miracles during the time they prophesy or deliver their testimony. Rev. xi. 5-7. They prophesy 1260 days, the time of the reign of the wild beast, or antichrist. Dan. vii. 25; xii. 7; Rev. xiii. 5. I do not regard the two witnesses as only two and no more, but rather as that class of believers who will then keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. The angel also flying through mid-heaven represents those who will then be authorized and qualified (as I think) by the spirit, to proclaim the Gospel to all nations.

I will drop the subject right here. I have said more than I intended, and I fear not so much to the point as my worthy brother expected.

Doctrines of the Bible.

In my study of the Bible I have never been able to find "doctrines" applied to the truth of God, but always doctrine, according to the doctrine of God our Savior, &c. We find the word doctrine forty-five times in the Bible and always in regard to the revealed truth to man, but we find doctrines of men and devils. We consider the doctrine of God as embracing the whole plan of God as revealed in the Bible. A tree embraces roots, trunk and branches. So with the doctrine of God; the roots reach back into chaos, where God began to make earth; for quite a length of time there was the trunk but not many branches; but when Jesus came preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God then the branches became thicker, but all the same doctrine: 'tis true there are different subjects but all a part of the same doctrine. The highest branch of this one doctrine, reaches to the end of the book of Revelations. "Surely I come quickly!" Even so, come Lord Jesus, is my earnest prayer.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I learn from the editor of Our Rest that you are publishing THE RESTITUTION. From the title I conclude the sentiments of the paper Scriptural. Please send me a copy. I am eighty-two years of age; have been preaching fifty-nine years. Some three years since I rewrote a work on the Millennium. I want to see whether it coincides with the sentiments of your paper.

By changing my place of residence I have been a member of three branches of Methodists. For many years I have been studying, writing, and looking for, while hasting unto the coming of the day of God. I believe in the return of literal Judah and Israel to Palestine: the conversion of many of them, and thousands of the Gentile world; many, because incorrigible and rebellious, will be cut off. Isa. lv. 12. The same may be said of Judah and Israel. But at length the knowledge of the glory of God will fill the earth. "The work of righteousness will be peace, and the effect quietness and assurance forever."

I am taking the Crisis, printed in Boston. It is free to preachers, or I could not have the privilege of its perusal, for want of means. I have preached too long without sufficient remuneration.

I cannot, or dare not, send you one of my pamphlets on the thousand years of Christ's reign until I peruse your paper; I fear discrepancy. The Crisis contains many good things, but I believe with the apostle, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain; and to depart and be with Christ is far better." I believe the thousand years' reign of Christ is in this earth. Whatever change it may undergo, it remains until the reign of Christ is consummated. I do not think the Millennium is in heaven, nor in the new earth; nor the resurrection of the wicked dead, the judgment, nor the loosing of Satan in the new earth. When all these things are accomplished, and not till then, may we look for the new earth, the unchanging state.

When will Christ come? When the army of Gog shall be in seige at Jerusalem. Where will he come? On the Mount of Olives. Zech. xiv.

Respectfully yours,

Editor Restitution:—I have never written you before, but as my own heart is so full of joy, I could not refrain from telling you the good news. Five more dear children have been added to the family of God, having obeyed that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints. And one of the number was our dear daughter Ellie, who put on Christ by being buried in baptism, to rise and walk in newness of life. Dear friends, we had a refreshing time. After going down to the water, we returned to Brother Guittean's, where we partook of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We all felt it was good to be there. Our hearts were full to overflowing, and I could but exclaim, Praise the Lord for his goodness and mercy that has brought these dear brethren and sisters to the knowledge of the truth. My dear husband seemed filled with the spirit of knowledge and wisdom of God, while he walked in and out of the water with each dear believer, was a beautiful sight to behold—one that will not soon be forgotten.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters: thou shalt find it after many days." We have found it even so, for the word had been proclaimed to some of these years ago, and one said he tried hard to disprove the things set forth; but the more he searched, the more proof he found that it was the only true way—God's way—the one faith, one hope, one baptism. Oh, that all we love would come to a knowledge of the gospel of the kingdom of God! Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase. May all those who have obeyed, continue in well doing faithful unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Editor Restitution:—I am on my way home after an absence of nearly six weeks. Shall fill another appointment on the way in Clinton county. I held the first meeting in Clinton county, the next in Blackford county. Had good meetings, with one addition. From there to Brother Priser's neighborhood. Had a good meeting. From there to Millwood; had meeting six days, with good attention. I find the people quite anxious to hear the word. I still feel like contending for the faith till the Lord comes, or till death may come, and I fall under its power.

Vulgar Language.

There is as much connection between the words and the thoughts as there is between the thoughts and the actions. The latter are not only the expression of the former, but they have a power to react upon the soul, and leave the stain of corruption there. A young man who allows himself to use one vulgar or profane word has not only shown that there is a foul spot upon his mind, but by the utterance of that word he extends that spot and inflames it, till, by indulgence, it will pollute and ruin the soul. Be careful of your words and of your thoughts.

If you can control the tongue that no improper words are pronounced by it, you will soon be able also to control the mind and save it from corruption. You extinguished the fire by smothering it, or by preventing bad thoughts from bursting into language. Never utter a word anywhere which you would be ashamed to speak in the presence of the most refined female or the most religious man. Try this practice a little while, and you will soon have command of yourself.

To think kindly of each other is good; to speak kindly to each other is better; but to act kindly one towards another is best of all.

DIED.

SMITH.—Died of inflammation of the stomach, Oriel Smith, aged forty-four years.

Dear mother is without a daughter unexpectedly to her husband, G. W. Smith, and her children not knowing of her being dangerously sick; so there were present at her death only two of the smallest of her children. Oriel died in the faith of the speedy coming of Christ to change the living and raise the dead. She was a consistent member of the church of God for the last six years. About six years ago she was immersed into Christ by the writer. Shespent the most of her days outside of any church, as the doctrines of the different churches were too horrible for her to believe. She always desired that God was love, instead of burning up all unbelievers, or hereties them always yet never burning them up. Oh sweet Heaven brother. Died a consistent member of the church of God at South Liberty, except a few years that she lived near Emporia, Lyon Co., Kansas, with her second, husband, G. W. Smith. Brother Smith got tired of living so far away from a church, so he sold out at Emporia and moved three miles west of Osage mission, where we—the church of God—hold our Fourth of July meeting. There we saw sister Smith at the last Fourth of July that we will meet her in this age in mortality. She left a husband and six children to mourn and a number of brethren and sisters and numerous friends that make no profession at all. She was highly esteemed by all. Do we need not mourn as those that have no hope. A funeral discourse was delivered by the writer from 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14, to a goodly number, though the congregation was not near so large as it would have been had it not rained so heavy all morning. She is not dead but sleepeth. So Jesus slept. God edying am passed through the grave, and loosed the bed.

Rest, dear sister, till from his throne,
The morning breaks and pierce the shade.

Errata in Last No.

In the notice of Elder D. V. Taylor's article on "The Coming Throne," and Vol. II., "he proceeds to constitute the plans (not places) of every nation another Israel." Col. iii. 4, should without exception be "Christ and the land," (not Jesus). In the next paragraph "the exile of a few" (not Jew).

Notice.

All persons suffering from chronic disorders of whatever character, or who have friends so suffering, except it be such as are beyond contradiction entirely hopeless, may perhaps be put in a way to be relieved or cured, if they will write me forthwith. I am associated for the time being with a Christian physician, a physician of great skill in the treatment of various diseases which are often deemed incurable. I will correspond freely with any or all who write, giving information or suggestion in regard to the best course to be pursued. Those who have known me through THE RESTITUTION or otherwise, will credit my sincerity and truthfulness.

POETRY.

"Stand Up for Jesus."

H. L. HASTINGS.

Dying words of Dudley A. Tyng, to his father, Dr. S. H. Tyng.

"Stand up for Jesus!" Lo! while shadows gather,
And o'er my pathway hangs death's deepening gloom,
Now from my dying lips, O dearest father,
Hear these my words, close by the silent tomb—
"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus," 'mid earth's rude commotion,
Perilling comfort, joy and worldly ease—
Stand like the storm-washed Pharos by the ocean
Guiding the mariner to realms of peace.
"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus," though his foes surround thee,
And seek to dim the lustre of his name;
Oh! let his light and love beam all around thee,
A pure, a radiant, and a quenchless flame.
"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus." Lo! from Pisgah's summit
I gaze afar, though with a dying glance;
I see Mount Zion and the hosts upon it,
And Jesus, smiling, bids me to advance.
"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus." Now in death's dark river,
My weary head is sinking 'neath the wave;
But Christ stands by me—he shall ecom deliver,
God shall redeem me from the silent grave.
"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus." Lo! the night is breaking,
And on the sky dawns the eternal day,—
Oh! then shall I, from death's brief slumber waking,
Behold thy face and ne'er be torn away.
"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus." Let the worldling pity
The cross we bear, the weary path we tread;
Soon shall we meet in yon celestial city,
And stand with Christ with crowns upon each head.
"Stand up for Jesus."

COMMUNICATIONS.

Babylon and Jerusalem.

BY P. ALLING.

In the 9th chapter of Genesis we have the record of the covenant "God made with Noah and all flesh," confirmed by the bow which he set in the clouds, that he would no more destroy all flesh by a flood of water. In chapter 11th we have the record of the descendants of Noah coming from the east to the land of Shinar, where they established themselves as a nation, and builded a city to make unto themselves a name, that they might not be scattered abroad over the earth. In that city they resolved to build a tower that should reach unto heaven. To accomplish which work, they said, "let us make brick and burn them thoroughly." As they proceeded in their work, "God said, let us go to," as they have thus began, nothing will restrain them—let us confound their language—and scatter them abroad on the face of all the earth, "and they left off building and were scattered abroad over all the earth, and the city was called Babel." Margin—"confusion."

Thus, the very thing they designed to escape, was brought upon them with the frustration of their wicked purposes. But the other object, "a name," they obtained, viz.: Babel, or confusion. Now, as the earth was peopled with this confusion of tongues, why may not this original name of Babel be appropriately applied in its generic sense, to all nations of earth, from that time onward to times yet future, when God shall turn to them a pure language, "that they may all call on the name of the Lord to serve him with one consent?" Zeph. iii. 9.

In other portions of this record we have brought to view another class of the descendants of Noah through whom the promised seed, Christ came. In the early history of this class, Abraham, the father of the faithful, was called very soon after the confusion of tongues, as its representative head, with whom God made this covenant. "In thee and in thy seed shall all of the nations of the earth be blessed; yea, all the families of the earth." This line was filled out by Moses and the law; by Samuel, David and the prophets to the first advent of Christ. This line of Noah's descendants, like the other, had its city and its temple, chosen of God, for his habitation, which shadowed forth his glory yet to be revealed. These descendants had but one language, viz.: The Hebrew, and were the smallest of all the people of the earth. They were the only ones upon earth from Abraham's day till the conversion of Cornelius from the Gentiles in about A. D. 42, that enjoyed a knowledge of God sufficient for salvation; all the rest were given over to idolatry. They were "without God and without hope"—shut up in unbelief." These two cities were representatives of the two classes, or two seeds, viz.: The seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, and were world-wide in their sphere. They were always antagonisms, but Jerusalem was the weaker one, and in it Christ was crucified by the seed of the serpent, and thus "the heel of the seed of the woman was bruised." But, thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the time is at hand for the tables to be turned, and the head of the serpent will begin to be bruised but not crushed, till he is destroyed at the end of the one thousand years. Rev. xx.

From this view of the world, a multitude of side thoughts are suggested; a few only of which can, at present, be noticed:

1. The apostasy of the world began at the point where God's command of the "Low in the clouds" began to be disregarded, and was consummated in their impious works of building a tower for their safety, and to make for themselves a name, much as did the Apocalyptic apostasy of the church of Christ, which also obtained for herself a name—like that of its predecessor, "Babylon, the great, the mother of harlots and the abominations of earth."

2. Those "thoroughly burnt brick" used in the building of the city and tower, are they not the same as are now being exhumed from those ancient ruins?

3. In the scattering that then occurred over all the earth, did not the aborigines of America reach these shores?

4. When God turns to the people "a pure language and they serve him with one consent," who are to be included in that promised blessing? Is it to be confined to the immortalized saints, the Bride the Lamb's wife? Are they not to be associate rulers with Christ of the world to come and were previously healed? Is this prophecy conditioned? If it is, then why is not the preceding verse also conditioned? That verse reads thus: "Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day I rise up to the prey, for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms to pour upon them mine indignation, even all of my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy." This gathering accords with Mal. xxv. 31, 32, which must also be conditioned, as also every prediction of the Bible relative to a future gathering.

If Zeph. iii. 7, 8 and Mal. xxv., are to be literally fulfilled, it follows to a certainty that the promised blessing of a pure language will be enjoyed, after that, by these very nations and kingdoms that have been shut out from God's plan of mercy and of love, since the day he confounded their language and scattered them abroad upon the face of all the earth. The nations and kingdoms that assembled are to be destroyed; hence they are not included in this grace. The promise must apply to another class, or proves a failure. Then, why not believe that the covenant God made with Abraham, the progenitor of the true seed, may be then or after that fulfilled? Surely the scattering and the confusion was no broader than is the promise to "all the nations, all the families of the earth." When the shutting out began, there also began this covenant, which is but a renewal of the original promise, "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head."

The conditions of the Adamic law to our federal head was, obey and live, or disobey and die. This was clearly expressed, and Adam and Eve understood it. So, in like manner, must all of their descendants in some period of their lives, individually, have a like opportunity of forming characters for themselves, after they have heard of God's saving grace, by obeying or disobeying his law. If they do not have this opportunity, the evil will be greater than the cure; or, in the language of our Universalist friends: "The plaster is too small for the wound," consequently, in this, the serpent triumphs! The cure, or the promise, does not comprehend an unconditional, eternal life to the race, but it does embrace and secures to all, as good an opportunity as they had in the beginning, but no more. As Christ tasted death for every man, and as all that die in Adam are to be made alive in Christ in the resurrection, then, if never before, their "due time" will have come to hear, and to accept or to reject for themselves.

The nations that have lived in the present dispensation since the gospel went to the Gentiles, especially those who have been made drunk with the wine of the fornication of the great Babylonish harlot, who are "given over to believe a lie that they might be damned because they love not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness;" no such day of grace will be extended to them because they have resisted both the spirit and the word of God, consequently their probationary season ends with their present life. In confirmation of these various points I call the attention of the reader to Paul's notable discourse at Athens in Acts xvii, in which we have this language: "That God hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth;" that they should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him and find him. "For we are also his offspring—of the times of this ignorance God winked at, (i. e., prior to his day); but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent, because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he raised him from the dead."

Now, as the spirit was to convict the world of sin, of righteousness and of a judgment to come, it does appear to me that the command to all men to repent, must be heeded by all men, else they will be found neglectors of this great salvation; and having refused "to hear this people, must be cut off from amongst the people." But the other class that have been kept in unavoidable ignorance since their dispersion with the unbelieving Jews since they were cut off and blinded, have both been concluded in unbelief; (or all shut up together—margin,) in unbelief that he (God) might have mercy upon all. Rom. xi.

Sleep a Type of Death.

J. H. COX.

Through the type we behold the anti-type. Therefore, if we understand the condition of man in the sleep state, we will then understand the condition of man in the death state, which is so little understood by the religious world, the erroneous seeds being sown broadcast through the earth (by the theologians) that in the death state man is conscious, and is happy or miserable.

Now, what is the condition of man when in a sound sleep? Is he conscious? Has he knowledge, wisdom and understanding? Certainly not. For the thieves may break into his house and he knows it not except he is awakened out of his sleep. Yea, part of the city in which he lives may be burned down, and he knows nothing of it until his slumbers are past, and sometimes it is with difficulty that such are aroused out of sleep to prevent their perishing in the flames.

So Adam, while in a deep sleep, knew not what was being done when God took from him a rib of which a helpmeet was made and brought unto him, and he called her woman. And when Eutychus had fallen into a deep sleep he must have been in an unconscious state, or he would not have fallen down from the third loft.

Our own experience teaches us that all knowledge, wisdom and understanding, have all passed away while we are in a deep sleep. We lay us down at night, and for six hours or more we sleep away the time with a careless indifference about business or family affairs. When we awake, our memory returns to us with all the cares of life as on the former day. Our diligence in business and our family affections are unchanged, save that we are able to pursue them in a more energetic manner by having rested in sleep.

Therefore, I ask why should consciousness in the death state be so strongly advocated; for if sleep is a type of death there certainly must be a great similarity. So as there is no consciousness in the sleep state, there is, therefore, no consciousness in the death state.

But the popular religious world says it is not the body of man that is conscious when dead, but it is his soul, his immortal soul, which leaves the body at death and is in a conscious existence with God or with the devil, for ever and ever, for the soul being part of God cannot die. But here is a great difficulty presented, for this would be dividing God into many parts, and a portion of these parts is received to himself in glory and the other portion is banished from him to dwell with the devil and his angels.

Then we are told that God made man of earth and spirit, material and immaterial. The material part is that which was made of the earth (dust), and that is the part that eats, drinks, sleeps and dies, but the immaterial part neither eats, drinks, sleeps nor dies. Thus we see a doctrine strange to the Bible is taught; for that which is immaterial is nothing, therefore, it is reasonable to conceive the idea that that which is immaterial cannot be conscious, whether we speak of it in connection with the body or apart from it.

But what do we learn from this record? "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7. From this Scripture we see that man made of the earth, became a living soul by God's breathing the breath of life into his nostrils, not that an immortal soul was placed in him, or that the breath of life was an immortal soul. It was the power of action, or the spirit, and when this breath leaves the body the power of action stops, and "the dust returneth to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) returneth unto God who gave it." Ecc. xii. 7.

"All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils, (margin the breath which God gave me,) my lips shall not speak wickedness nor my tongue utter deceit." Job xxvii. 3, 4.

"Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils." Isa. ii. 22.

The wise man says, when speaking of man and beast, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; as dieth the one so dieth the other. Yea, they have all one breath, so that man hath no preeminence above a beast, for all is vanity. All go to one place, all are of the dust, and all return to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit (breath) of man that goeth upward, and the spirit (breath) of the beast that goeth downward to the earth.' Ecc. iii. 19-21. The Douay Bible reads: "Who knoweth if the spirit of the children of Adam ascend upward, and if the spirit of beasts descend downard to the earth."

(Thus it stands as a question. Who among the orthodox can answer it.)

The Psalmist says: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psalms cxvi, 3-4.

"The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more reward, for the memory of them is forgotten, also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." Ecc. ix. 5, 6, 10.

How often are sleep and death used in the Holy Scriptures as synonymous terms? For example: "So David slept with his fathers and was buried in the city of David." 1 Kings ii. 10. Shall we understand by this expression that he (David) was only taking a natural sleep, or was he dead. Peter says: "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." Acts ii. 29. Paul says: "For David after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers and saw corruption." Acts xiii. 35. "And Solomon slept with his fathers and was buried in the city of David his father." 1 Kings xi. 43. Jesus also used the words (sleep and death) interchangeably. He said to his disciples, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." John xi. 11. "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." v. 14. Martha's evidence is, "Lord by this time he stinketh, for he hath been dead four days." v. 39.

Have we any evidence of consciousness in the death state of any of these? It is accepted by the religious world that David went to heaven at death and is still there. But what is the language of Peter? "For David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts ii. 34. Solomon's language is, "The dead know not anything." Ecc. ix. 5. Was Lazarus conscious while in the death state? If he knew anything during the four days he lay dead, would he not have reported after he came to life? But the record is silent, therefore, we must conclude that he knew not anything.

Thus we see the type plainly shows the anti-type. As there is no consciousness, knowledge, wisdom or understanding in the sleep state, so there is no consciousness, knowledge, wisdom or understanding in the death state; and as the sleep of night appears short when it is past, so the sleep of death will appear short when the morning of the resurrection comes, (without which death will be an eternal sleep,) and they who sleep in Jesus shall come forth in his glorious image. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others that have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort (exhort, margin) one another with these words." I Thess. iv. 13-18.

SELECTIONS.

The Longevity of Brain Workers.

It is generally supposed that Americans wear out faster than other races; but the record of brain workers does not prove this, even when compared with the serene old age of Wordsworth at 79, or of Walter Savage Landor, who lived to within seven years of a century. It does not even require any particular department of brain work to show the rule good for its devotees on both sides of the water.

In poetry, for instance, with Bryant just dead at 84, Dana still living at 91, and Longfellow and Whittier vigorous at 71, and Holmes as sparkling as ever at 68, we can look complacently upon the condition of things elsewere in this respect. Tennyson at 65, and Browning at 66, give no better promise for the winter of life than their American compeers.

Of the prose writers, who yet are poets in a large sense, Carlisle at 85, Victor Hugo at 70, and Emerson at 75, speak well for literary longevity; the historian Bancroft is 78; Palfrey is 82, while Froude is 60, and Kinglake 76. The wit of Sidney Smith left him with his life only at 74; Tom Moore did not die till 73; Samuel Rogers, who said he did not know what health was till he was 50, attained the great age of 92. But Fontenelle, who was said to have as good a heart as could be made out of brains, lived to be 100. Hoyle, the author of the treatise on whist, played the game of life till 97. Both Goethe and Wieland reached 80, Voltaire 84, and Hobbes 91. Sam Johnson was 77 when he died, Milton 66. Ben Jonson 63, and Campbell 67; Bacon attained 65, and Scott, with all his exhausting anxieties and labors, 61. Prescott lived to be 63, Everett, 71. Wendell Phillips is 67.

Nor do the literary and scientific women make a bad showing in regard to longevity; though Jane Austin died at 42, Miss Milford reached 69, Miss Barbauld and Miss Edgeworth 32, Madame d'Arblay and Hannah Moore 88, Mrs. Marcet 89, Miss Berry 90, Mrs. Somerville 92, and Mrs. Caroline Herschel 98, while Mrs. Sigourney and Mrs. Sedgwick lived respectively to 74 and 78.

There seems to be something in scientific pursuits favorable to the longevity of their distinguished votaries. Humboldt did not die until he was 90, Newton reached 83, Faraday 88, Silliman 85, Harvey's blood circulated till he was 80, Cuvier died at 63, and Agassiz at 67, while Joseph Henry lately passed away at 81. The medical profession is said to have a comparatively low average of longevity, owing to anxieties, labors and responsibilities which are aside from their special brain work, and yet their leaders make a good showing in this respect. Galen's reputed 140 years of life, and Hippocrates's 104 will have to be taken on trust like the story that the Swedish Dr. Jenaitz lived to be 104 by means of an elixir of his own compounding. Yet Louis reached 85, as did also Sir Henry Holland. Brodie's life did not go out till 79. Abernethy was 67 when he died, and Sydenham 65.

Artists are said not to be long lived, though something else than brainwork is doubtless responsible for their shortcomings in this respect. But Titian reaching the great age of 99, the stormy features of Michael Angelo instinct with life at 90, Sir Christopher Wren not taking his last rest within his masterpiece till 91, Landseer "King till 77, and Thorwaldsen to 73, are conspicuous examples of longevity, which make the lives of Reynolds at 69, Canova at 65, Allston at 64, Rembens at 63 and Rembrandt 62, seem short.

Dr. Johnson's remark, "I do not envy the clergyman's life as an easy life, nor do I envy the clergyman who makes it an easy life," might lead us not to expect great longevity among the faithful. But the great French preachers Bousset and Massillon, lived to be, respectively, 77 and 79. Robert Smith lived to 83, Paley died at 60, and Dean Stanley is 68. For this country, with Orville Dewey still alive at 84, Mark Hopkins at 70, and Edward A. Park at 70, the "cloth" of the best quality seems to wear well.

Engineers are said to be short lived from the strain of anxious responsibility upon their brains, yet James Watt reached 83, the elder Brenel 81, Telford 77, and George Stephenson 67.

But the most numerous examples of longevity among brain workers are afforded by great lawyers and statesmen. In regard to the former class, Clarendon, in his autobiography, attributes their length of years to the exercise they give themselves by their circuits as well as to their other acts of temperance and sobriety. But Clarendon wrote before the days of railroads and hotels.

Public life seems to have agreed with Talleyrand and Metternich, who reached respectively 84 and 80, as well as with Guizot, who lived to 87, and Thiers, who died at 80. But Palmerston at 81, and Gortschakoff at 70, do not make as good a showing in point of longevity as John Adams at 91, Josiah Quincy at 92, and Thomas Jefferson at 83. John, Quincy Adams lived to 81, Lewis Cass to 84, Clay 75, Benton 76, and Webster 70. Earl Beaconsfield is 73, Gladstone 67, Earl Stanhope 73. Bismarck, and Moltke 78. The great lawyers and judges of England have been wonderfully long-lived. Lord Stowell at 91, Eldon at 87, Mansfield and Brougham at 89, Lyndhurst at 92, and St. Leonards at 94, are notable examples; but with Horace Binney reaching 97, Chief Justice Taney 87, and John Marshall 80, we have no reason to be discouraged at the chances of legal longevity in this country.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

To a man full of questions make no answer.

What men are deficient of in reason they usually make up in rage.

Genius finds its own road, and carries its own lamp.

At eve hold not thy hand;
To doubt and fear give thou no heed,

Slander is a coward's revenge, dissimulation his defense.

The darkest dreams of life have had beautiful wakenings.

The lips of the righteous feed many; but fools die for want of wisdom.

It is the agent and not the instrument to which responsibility attaches.

Some men, by repeating what others have said, fancy that they are growing wise.

You may sound the depth of yonder sea
And count the sands that under it lie;
You may measure the heights of heaven above,
But thou mayst not fathom a mother's love.

Without the virtue of humility one can neither be honest in poverty nor contented in abundance.

Men should not think too much of themselves, and yet a man should be careful not to forget himself.

Most of us pass our lives in regretting the past, complaining of the present, and indulging false hopes of the future.

The chief properties of wisdom are to be mindful of things past, careful of things present, provident of things to come.

In prosperity we can honor God by the full consecration of our substance; in adversity by cheerful submission to his dispensations.

As a storm following storm, and wave succeeding wave, give additional hardness to the shell that incloses the pearl, so do the storms and waves of life add force to the character of man.

When I see a boy or girl who likes to gaze upon the illustrations of crime and vileness that are sent out in every direction, I know that the foul frog of uncleanliness has entered that soul, and ruin and desolation are not far away.

The rich and the poor, the king and the beggar, must alike lie down in the grave at last. All other distinctions fade into insignificance at the gate of the tomb, and princely dust perishes as soon as pauper's clay. That only is the true glory of man which outlives death, and outlasts the grave.

No single moment in any life accurately represents the motive and worth of that life; yet who that judges others takes more than the act of a moment to judge by.

Who will care?
When the spring-time's glad smile lingers
On the meadows far and wide,
And she drops from rosy fingers,
Bloom and leaf on every side;
Who will come, with tender yearning,
To the graves of those they miss?
Who will sigh for our returning;
To their presence and their kiss—
Who will care?

There is no such thing as caste or aristocracy among the angels. They are as willing to watch in a lonely grave as to sing in the open sky. They do not feel humiliated in stepping to the lowest round of the ladder that rests in the dark wilderness, nor elated when they soar about the eternal throne. They shout the same exultant strains when a new world is made and when a lonely wanderer in this repents and turns to God.—Clark's Workday Christianity.

Thy Mother.

Young man, thy mother is thy best earthly friend. The world may forget you—thy mother never; the world may willfully do you many wrongs—thy mother never; the world may persecute while living, and when dead plant the ivy and night-shade of slander upon your grassless grave—but thy mother will love and cherish you while living, and, if she survive you, will weep for you when dead such tears as none but a mother knows how to weep. Love thy mother.

A document lately came to light at Stratford-on-Avon, bearing the name of Shakspeare's father, whose cross was appended thereto, as he could not write his name.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." Rules advocated, as a means to that end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King, who will restore Patriarchal rulers as judges, as in the days of old, and the resurrection and the dead, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the eternal judgment, and no final disposition of the wicked except the second death. Christ, and him crucified, the only through Christ, and only in this world. Unbelievers in Bible inspiration, and those who reject the Scriptures, are informed that we do not write to the purpose of their conversion, but for the benefit of those who believe the Bible to be the inspired word of God, essential for final salvation.

The Holy Spirit.

J. C. KIMBEL.

As our esteemed Brother Wilson, in an article headed "The One Spirit," which appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Oct. 23, has made some reference to an article of mine in the number for Sept. 4, headed "The Holy Spirit," allow me space to set myself right, and to point out to our beloved brethren the fact that he has misrepresented me, if not all, that I claimed. [illegible] that the promise of the Holy Spirit, Acts ii. 38, 39, the Holy Spirit itself. This is just what I claimed, and, if so, and the Lord our God has called both me and him, then the Holy Spirit is pledged to us if we comply with the conditions. But I did not claim that its bestowal was to dispense with the word. In a later article, our brother admits that there has been an apostasy, for he speaks of its corner stone. This I believe and teach, and that it was the "one body" that had the "one Spirit," as it existed in Paul's day, that fell away. It is admitted that this "one Spirit" was the Holy Spirit, and I claim that this "one Spirit" was promised to all whom the Lord should call. If the "one Spirit" that was in the "one body" was promised to all the called, and it is not in the church, or churches, of to-day,—why is it thus? Our brother answers, there has been an apostasy. This is what I believe and teach. We agree too, that the claim that men make of having the "one Spirit" in them is not proof of its being a fact.

Our brother seems to think that we can have the fruits of the Spirit and not have the Spirit itself. Could we have the fruit of the tree without the tree itself? The Spirit, in the early church, produced all the fruits enumerated; and is it not because of the absence of the Spirit those other fruits to-day? If the church could bring forth the fruits of the Spirit and not have the Spirit, why was it given to others besides the apostles? for if the words of the Spirit are all we need, did the disciples need more than we do? If the infant church, when struggling for its existence, needed the helper, the Holy Spirit, and that church apostatized, would not the infant church need the same aid now? The case stands thus: The church fell; became the mother of harlots; and shall we labor to reform the old fallen body, or shall we go to work to build on the one foundation that she abandoned, and claim all the promises that were made to the bride? Please answer a brother seeking for truth, for I intend to purchase the truth if possible. But I can not agree that Paul gave those Ephesian brethren, or any one else, the Holy Spirit by which they were sealed to the day of redemption. If the gift had been vested in the apostles, and was by them to be bestowed on whomsoever they would, and as they are now [illegible] our condition is worse than I had supposed, and is all darkness. It is not so. But to the record: If [illegible] prayer for the [illegible] might receive the Holy Spirit." Acts viii. 15; "Then they laid hands upon them, and they received the Holy Spirit," verse 17; "Simon had thought that the gift of God might be purchased with money." Verse 20. Why did they pray for it that there might come the Spirit, if it was deposited in the church, and they were the givers? But the gift was God's to bestow, and he had made its promise, and they sought ask. But we turn to Paul's case, to which our beloved brother refers; Paul asks them "Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed?" The answer is, "Unto what then were ye baptized?" Answer: "Unto John's baptism." He then tells them, they are baptized, and when Paul had laid his hands upon them, then the Holy Spirit came on them. Now if God gave the gift to these many cases, is it not fair to infer that he did so in this, and thus give to him the glory? But our brother admits an exception in the bestowment of this gift, without any imposition of hands, in the case of the apostles themselves, and this is admitting all I claim.

Now, if the "one body" that had the "one spirit" fell, and many bodies having many spirits have arisen, I can still say that the Father yet lives, and can send forth the gift again in days of old, unless the promise has expired by limitation; and, if so, we are left out. The promise is to you and your children, and to all them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." What promise? Answer: "You shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Yes, brethren, when we come to the inspired standard of the faith the gift is sure. But if I am in an error, who is to be able to set me right than our brother, who has so nobly set [illegible] that part of the faith which pertains to future inheritance and all hope? Here let me refer to three points as made by Jesus [illegible]

1. "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

2. "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"

Now, if the promise of the Holy Spirit was limited to the apostles and their converts, is not the promise of the kingdom also? and if the promise of the Holy Spirit was limited to the apostles and some others, was not the authority to preach the gospel limited to it likewise? For Jesus said, "Lo, I am with you all the days to the end of the age." But it is intimated that all did not receive the Spirit even in the days of the apostles. What then, does Paul mean by these words: "But to each one is given the manifestation of the Spirit for to benefit—to profit." 1 Cor. xii. 7, Diaglott interlinear.

Now, brethren, has the "full stature of a man in Christ" been attained in the past? has the unit man been fully developed? If so, are we not left out? If not so, mark the unit of Eph. iv. 13, for that is the limitation that Paul makes. But I will close this article by saying that there has been no apostasy, that the church, to the best of my information, lost the truth, item after item, till the whole was lost, and that when she gets back on the old platform "of the apostles and prophets, the Anointed Jesus being the chief corner stone," she will have made herself ready for the marriage. And if I am correct in my conclusion that she lost the Holy Spirit through her fall, she is not ready till she has returned to the old landmarks, and obtained the Holy Spirit. I am aware that Paul said "that prophecy would fail, that tongues would cease, and that knowledge would vanish away." But he said also that the apostasy would come. He said also that when that which is perfect is come, that then that which is in part, or comparative, would be done away. I do not believe that the "perfect state" of which he speaks have come yet, or that "the full measure of the stature of a perfect man in Christ," has yet been filled out; for this one new man, this one "unit body" that has the "one Spirit," is the "Lord's body," the "Lord's house," "God's temple" in which his spirit dwells. And now, brethren, if I have wandered out of the way, ye that are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Many thanks to Brothers Chaplin, Wilson, Winchester, and all others, for instructions [illegible] May [illegible] be [illegible] our unity [illegible]

one who agonizes to find the strait gate and narrow path that leads to life. Amen.

To the New Readers of The Restitution.

WHAT MUST WE DO TO BE SAVED?

To answer the question correctly for each to answer it for all under similar circumstances, or under the same dispensation.

The terms of salvation must be the same to all. What one must do in order to be saved, everyone must do. What one may neglect to do, everyone may neglect to do. If it were not so, it would be a fruitless task to attempt to answer this important question.

But, as the Bible is not yea and nay, we may hope by consulting its teaching to arrive at a correct conclusion as to what we must do to be saved.

The Bible does not say to one that he must repent or perish, and to another that he can be saved without repentance. It does not say to one that without faith it is impossible to please God, and to another that it does not make any particular difference whether he believes God or not. It does not say to one that he must believe the gospel or he cannot be saved, and to another that it is not essential to his salvation that he believe the gospel. It does not say to one that he must be buried with Christ by baptism, or be planted in the likeness of his death in order to be in the likeness of his resurrection, and to another that it is not necessary to be thus baptized unless it is convenient.

The Bible does not say to one that if he preach any other gospel than that which Paul preached he shall be cursed, and to another that he may preach another gospel without being cursed, if he is only sincere. It does not say to one that he can love his father or mother, wife or children, houses or lands, more than me, and yet be worthy of me and be saved, and to another that he may love father or mother, wife or children, houses or lands, more than me, and yet be worthy of me and be saved. It does not say to one that he must hold out faithful to the end in order to be saved, and to another that he can be saved without such a condition. It does not say to one that if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his, and to another that he may be Christ's if his theory is correct, though he have not the spirit of Christ.

Paul said, "God is true, and our word toward you was not yea and nay." Then the Word cannot affirm the contradictions to which I have referred.

Now, if the Word agrees with itself, and if we are honest in our question, and anxious to know and obey the truth in reference to it, may we not hope to learn just what we ought to do to be saved?

Then let us put our question first to the Savior, Lord, what must we do to be saved? He said to his apostles, as if in answer to this very question, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

This passage includes the whole process by which we can be saved. The world is entirely ignorant upon the subject. This instruction tells us how this ignorant world can be saved:

1. The gospel must be preached to it.

2. This gospel must be believed.

3. The believer must be baptized.

If these three things are done—that is, if we hear the gospel, and believe it, and are baptized—we shall be saved.

Whatever the gospel is, that is what must be preached; whatever it is to believe the gospel, that must be done; and whatever is meant by baptism, that form of doctrine must be obeyed. These are the things that must be done in order to salvation. If we hear the gospel and do not believe it, we cannot be saved, whether we are baptized or not. This is the plan of salvation which was to be preached to every creature. It is the rule by which every one must be saved if he is saved at all. The line is well marked between those who will be saved and those who will be damned.

Now, are we honest and anxious in our question? Are we willing to be instructed? Are we disposed to obey? Will we do it?

Is the rule a plain one? Is it [illegible] one of duty? Is there any exception to the rule? Then our question is fully answered. We must first learn what the gospel is, then believe it, and then be baptized.

We will [illegible] Peter said we must do to be saved. He is one of the apostles who had been commanded to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He, was the other apostles, had been told to preach repentance and remission of sins in the name of Christ, beginning at Jerusalem. He was to tarry in the city of Jerusalem until he was endowed with power from on high. And when the day of Pentecost was fully come the apostles were all of one accord in one place. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven. And the multitude came together and were amazed when they heard the apostles speak in their own tongue the wonderful works of God. And Peter stood up, and preached the gospel to them; and they heard it and believed it, and were pricked in their hearts, and said, Men and and brethren, what shall we do? The very question we are considering. And Peter said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

He did not say, as Christ had said, the gospel must be preached, or that it must be believed; for the gospel had already been preached, and it had been believed, and because these things had already been done, they were pricked in their hearts, and asked, What shall we do?

After we have heard the gospel and believed it, we must every one of us repent, change our life, abandon our sins, and then be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Repentance will introduce us into the body of Christ, and secure the remission of our sins. Repentance and baptism in the name of Christ for the remission of sins is the process by which the believer puts on Christ and becomes a member of his body, and a joint heir with him to his position and work.

As the instruction of the Bible is not yea and nay, and as we have found a plain, positive and definite answer to our question, there can be nothing against it.

Christ did say that the gospel must be preached in all the world, to every creature; that men must believe it and be baptized in order to be saved. This includes the whole process from the beginning. After the people had heard the gospel as preached by Peter, and had believed it, he did say to those who asked, "What shall we do?" "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." This includes what must be done after we have heard the gospel and believed it. Is not this answer the same for all? Is there any exception to this rule? Will anything less than this do? Does the Bible anywhere say that we can be saved without hearing the gospel, or without believing it, or without being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins? Does it say there is any other way than this, by which we can be saved? Then why may we not all be agreed in this matter? Why not be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment? The Bible does teach what we have said, but does it teach anything against it?

Now, if we can understand what is meant by the preaching of the gospel, and what the gospel is, and what it is to believe it, and what is meant by being baptized, we shall know what we must do to be saved.

Investigation, to be of any value, needs to be prosecuted in a temper and with tastes suitable to the subject in hand. The study of the fine arts would be useless to a man devoid of artistic taste. Mathematics will open only to a mind severe and given to logical method. The Bible will forever remain a sealed book to all but pure and serious men. Sin is a veil that hides from the mind of the reader the deeper and more spiritual parts of the record. Of all books, this needs most to be read through the heart. Written, as it were, in sympathetic ink, the warmth of the heart brings the whole out in lines of living light.

BREVITIES.

Ceylon, the land of spices and coffee, has now proved itself a wonderful place for growing fine teas, samples of which find great favor in London.

The Vatican has entrusted to the Algerian Catholic Mission the creation of two stations in Central Africa—one on Lake Tanganyika, the other on Lakes Victoria and Albert Nyanza.

The revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament have just got to the end of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians on their second revision. At their last meeting, which was the eighty-fourth session, there were present the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, who presided, the deans of Rochester, Lincoln and Litchfield, the master of the temple, Archdeacons Lee and Palmer, Principals Angus and Newth, Dr. Hort, and Prebendaries Humphry and Scrivener—twelve members in all—with Mr. Troutbeck, the secretary.

The British consul at Jeddah states that in the season of 1877-8 there were 42,718 pilgrims landed at that port, on the way to Mecca, being an increase of nearly 3,000 over the preceding year; but this was more than counterbalanced by a falling off in the number at Yembo and Leet. The Haj having fallen on a Friday the Mohammedan Sabbath, it was expected that the assemblage at Mecca would have eclipsed that of preceding years, but it was not so. The concourse at Mecca on the great feast day was estimated to have exceeded 180,000 souls.

Tradition has long pointed out a certain field about a mile from Wedmore church, in England, as the site of the old palace of King Alfred and the West Saxon kings. This field is called the Court Garden, and there have been many stories of the treasure hidden there. And now the rector, Mr. Sydenham Hervey, has dug up in this place the remains of the palace where, 1,000 years ago, the great peace was signed with the Danes. The walls are massive, the mortar of an ancient character, and the whole appearance of the building speaks its great age. A large quantity of pottery has been found, some of Roman and some of English character. Some of the walls are buried at a depth beneath the surface of the land of six to ten feet; others, which are on rock, are but thinly covered with earth.

Every male Afghan beyond the years of childhood possesses warlike weapons of some sort. The ameer, therefore, can bring an army ranging from two to three hundred thousand fighting men into the battlefield of his nation of four or five millions of people. It would, in fact, not be an army, but an armed nation with which England has to contend. It is, therefore, easy for a London paper, with no barbarian hordes that we are about to measure swords, but with a regularly organized army, fairly equipped with weapons, and composed of men of notorious courage, splendid physique, and perfect knowledge of the difficult country which will be the theatre of war, a country the most difficult in the world, and some portions of it quite inaccessible except to a goat or a native.

Eight hundred priests and over twenty bishops joined in the grand Gregorian requiem over the remains of Cardinal Cullen in the Cathedral, Dublin, recently. The daylight was shut out from the church, the pillars and columns were hung with rich black velvet, festooned with white material. The bishops and clergymen, one after the other, passed around the oaken coffin on the catafalque, and each pronounced the church's absolution on the soul of the deceased. The funeral proper took place at night by request of the deceased Cardinal. At eight o'clock on a starlight night he was buried behind the altar of Holy Cross church at Clonliffe, a few miles outside of Dublin, and quite near to the scene of Brian Boru's battle with the Danes. The absence of Archbishop Macllale from that funeral ceremony was remarked.

Speaking at a great meeting of Roman Catholic clergy and laity in Liverpool, recently, on behalf of St. Joseph's Foreign Missionary Society, Cardinal Manning said that the missionaries were intended to cope with heathenism beyond the bounds of Christendom, but within the bounds of the British empire. And here came a new obligation. Some would ask, what had they to do with the British empire? But they had all helped to rear up that mighty fabric, the mightiest in the world. When God raised up a mighty empire he did it for a purpose. The old Roman empire did its work, and it was crushed, crumbled, and utterly destroyed. The great Catholic empire of Spain had passed away like a shadow, and the greatest empire the world had ever seen for extent was the British empire, which they had helped to build up. They had what Spain never had. They possessed at this time an eighteenth portion, at least, of the habitable globe, and had over 240,000,000 of fellow subjects; and these 24,000,000 of men, with their 150 princes and chieftains—these realms and kingdoms and principalities—were all gathered under the sovereignty of the British empire. Was this without a divine purpose? Was it to pass away as a shadow like Spain? Upon them it depended to give answer under God, if they were to be faithful to their duty. If they partook of the greatness of that empire, they partook of its duties. If they partook of its powers, they would partake of its doom. Empires were raised to be the servants of God, and if they would not fulfill this duty God would crush them.

London Times: The Society of Biblical Archæology opened its new session on Tuesday, at its rooms, 9 Conduit street, Regent street, W., the president, Dr. Birch, in the chair. Thirty candidates for admission to membership were nominated by the council. Mr. Cust reported his having attended the international congress of Orientalists lately held at Florence as the society's delegate. Much interest was felt in the reading of a paper by Mr. Theophilus G. Pinches, the late Mr. George Smith's successor as Dr. Birch's assistant in the department of Oriental antiquities at the British museum. It was on "The Bronze Gates of Shalmaneser-III," lately discovered, by Mr. Hormuzd Rassam at Balawat during his recent archæological expedition to Assyria resuming that interrupted by Mr. George Smith's melancholy death. The locality and the monuments were fully described in The Times shortly after the arrival of the antiquities to the British museum in the beginning of August. The bronzes, which in the article referred to were simply designated as "trophies," have since been recognized as belonging to two pairs of gates. The merit of the identification belongs to Mr. Ready, the skilled artificer attached to the British museum department, to whose province it belonged to cleanse the bronze fragments, to piece them together, and to nail them with the original nails upon wood of the same thickness as had been used for the purpose when this unique monument was first set up about twenty-eight centuries ago. He then began to see that the larger set of bronze plates formed the coverings of a pair of enormous folding doors, rectangularly shaped. Each leaf was about twenty-two feet long and six feet broad. They had evidently turned on pivots which had actually reached the museum, although the sockets in which they moved had unfortunately been left behind. At the top they were supported by strong rings fixed in masonry. The body of the door was of wood three inches in thickness, as measured by the nails used by the Assyrians to nail the plates of bronze on the wood. For these nails were clinched just 1-16 of an inch, which is the thickness of the plates themselves, over and above three inches from their heads. Around the door, between its posts, is what is technically termed its "style." This style was also edged with bronze, the vertical inscription furnishing the text, to which the designs in repousse work on the horizontal plates, representing Shalmaneser's battles, sieges, triumphal processions, the cruelties inflicted on his foes, and his worship of the gods, supplied the illustrative scenes. The "style" inscription leaves no doubt as to the monarch whose history is recorded.

There is a world of significance in the remark of a little Irish girl when rehearsing to her Protestant schoolmates the great things the priest could do. "Why," said she, "if he wished, he could turn a man to stone!" The other children laughed, and said, "we don't believe it." "Well," was her reply—"if I was you I wouldn't believe it, but I've got to."

THE RESTITUTION.

N. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 11, 1878.

MANUSCRIPTS accumulate far beyond the capacity of our paper for immediate insertion. Will try to do the best we can.

THE RAINBOW for November has come to hand. As usual its contents are of an extremely interesting character. Hope to transfer an article or two to our paper soon. Can Dr. Leaske send us the September and October numbers which have not come to hand?

THE affairs of this world are hastening to the grand crisis. We are on the eve of the great predicted changes in Palestine in fulfillment of the last wonderful events prior to the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. Israel's restoration and the rapture of the church are events of the very near future.

WE give place to notices of some of the papers that we receive, as a return, for making known their general features and terms. We receive, as exchanges, the World's Crisis, Messiah's Herald, Bible Banner, Bible Examiner, and The Christian, published by Brother H. L. Hastings, for all of which we have, in brief, a good word to say to our subscribers. Our Rest, published by Brother T. Wilson, Chicago, is a paper in which we take great interest, as it so particularly illustrates the teachings of the Great Pyramid.

IN another column will be found a notice of the New York Observer for 1879. During our editorial management of THE RESTITUTION, for the two years past, we have been in receipt of this truly excellent journal, and we have found it uniformly instructive and interesting. From week to week it contains a great amount of useful and entertaining matter suitable for the members of any family, while, at the same time, its pages are never blemished with anything inconsistent with the purest morality. It is outspoken against every form of iniquity, and fearless in its championship of civil and religious liberty as against all the encroachments of Romanism and Jesuitical machinations. It is a very large-sized double sheet, each number containing fifty-six columns of reading matter, at $3.15 per volume, postpaid.

WE are rejoiced to announce that The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times is now published in New York as well as in London. For the last twelve years this valuable millennarian paper has been before the English public, by whom it has been so highly appreciated that its circulation for some time past has amounted to 115,000 copies per week. It contains sermons each week from noted English and American preachers. Its primary value and importance to us is the prophetical articles that its pages contain from time to time on the Eastern crisis, the second advent of Christ, and kindred topics connected with the fulfillment of prophecy. It is not the organ of any sect or class, nor does it advocate the interests of any denomination or party. It is sent for $1.50 per annum. Address Jos. Spurgeon, 63 Bible House, New York City. We thank him for the kind proffer of exchanging with THE RESTITUTION, and for the truly interesting numbers already received, from which we have transferred one article to the present number of our paper.

The Fifth Universal Empire.

D. WILSON.

The design of government is to render to the governed the blessings of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This end is not always reached. In the majority of cases governments have been oppressive. Kings have ruled for their own aggrandizement, at the expense of the people. This is not according to the will of the Deity. He desires the happiness of mankind. He hates injustice and oppression, and will break in pieces the oppressor. "All the wicked will he destroy." God is the friend of the poor and needy, and such as be upright in heart. All who aspire to govern ought to be like him in this respect. "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." 2 Sam. xxiii. 3. Man, ever since the fall, has been unfit to govern his fellow-man. He cannot govern himself, and therefore is unfit to govern others. The experience of all ages has proved the truth of this. God from the beginning has known this, and has purposed to select and train some of the race to fill the offices of kings and priests, so that through them he might bless the nations.

God once had a kingdom on earth, of which he himself was king. He chose the seed of Jacob, his servant, to be his people. He gave them his laws and made a covenant with them. He purposed to train them for royalty and the priesthood. Hear what he said to them, when encamped at the foot of Sinai: "Now, therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine, and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Exodus xix. 5, 6. This great and glorious privilege was contingent upon their obedience. When Moses told them these words, "all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do." Then three days afterwards the Lord proclaimed the ten commandments in the hearing of the people, from the top of Sinai, in the midst of phenomena of terrible grandeur. Then when the people entreated that they might hear the voice of the Lord no more, he gave them all the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments which they were to observe and do in the land, through Moses his servant. This was according to their own request. They said, "Speak thou with us and we will hear; but let not God speak with us lest we die." Ex. xx. 19.

Moses thus became their mediator, lawgiver and king, under Jehovah. He had been their redeemer from Egyptian bondage, and now had become their leader through the wilderness to the promised land. The people, however, were rebellious. They soon forgot their vows and their God. Their hearts turned back to Egypt. They were so prone to evil that God would not allow them to enter into his rest. Only Caleb and Joshua out of six hundred thousand men who left Egypt, were permitted that privilege. The children of that generation went in with Joshua. Then they were governed by judges for four hundred and fifty years, until the days of Samuel, when the people desired a king. They said to Samuel, "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." 1 Sam. viii. 5. Samuel was grieved at this request, and prayed about it to the Lord. Then the Lord answered him, saying, "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." Their request was granted, after Samuel had told them what a king would exact of them. 1 Sam. viii. 10-15. Saul then was chosen and anointed king over them by appointment of the Lord. Thus he became the Lord's anointed.

Although the people desired a king, they could only have one according to the law. Deut. xvii. 14-20. He was to be one whom the Lord should choose, one of their own nation, not a stranger. He was not to multiply unto himself neither horses nor wives, nor riches, but learn to fear the Lord, keep his law and statutes, and do them. They were not to be lifted up in heart above their brethren, nor turn aside from the commandment, so that they might prolong their days in the kingdom. The Lord reserved the right to set upon the throne or to cast down whom he would. The kingdom and throne belonged to him. And although the people had kings like all the nations to go in and out before them, yet only by permission of the Lord their God. These kings were only to rule in subjection to his authority. Hence we find that when Saul, the first king, ventured to disobey the commandment of his God he lost his favor, and the kingdom. 1 Sam. xv. Because he dared to reject the word of the Lord, the Lord rejected him from being king over Israel. Samuel said to Saul, "The Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and given it to a neighbor of thine, that is better than thou." That neighbor was David the son of Jesse, to whom Samuel was sent in order to anoint him with oil, to be king in place of Saul. This anointing took place some years before the death of Saul, and before David came to the throne and kingdom. Those were days of trial and training, for Saul persecuted David, and sought his life. But when David was placed upon the throne he obeyed the commandments of the Lord, and did all his will. For this he was rewarded. Jehovah made a covenant with him, that the throne and kingdom of Israel should be established to him and his seed forever. This had respect to the immediate descendants of David, in the first place, but embraced One in the distant future who should be just, ruling in the fear of God. 1 Sam. vii. 12-17; xxiii. 1-5; Psa. lxxxix.

The house of David did not follow the example of their father, nor keep the commandments of their God. Many of them became idolators, and caused the people to err. They served themselves, forgot their God, and oppressed the people. The Lord remonstrated with them and the people, through his prophets, and endeavored to bring them to obedience, but they would not hearken. Then when the iniquity of the nation had come to the full, he overturned the kingdom and cast down the throne, and sent the nation into captivity. This came to pass in the days of Zedekiah, the last prince who sat on the throne of David. Ezek. xxi. 25-27. The kingdom was to be no more, until the rightful heir should come, and then it should be given to him.

Jehovah now turns from the house of Israel to the Gentiles—from the house of David to the kings of the nations. All are to have a fair trial, in order to prove whether they are fit to govern their fellow-men. Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, is chosen to be his servant and to do his will. By the prophet Jeremiah we learn that the Lord gave the lands of the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre and Zidon, "into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, my servant: and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come, and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him." Jer. xxvii. 6, 7. Daniel also said to him—"Thou, O king, art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven, hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." Dan. ii. 37, 38.

Gentile rule authoritatively begins with Nebuchadnezzar; so also the times of the Gentiles. During this period the children of Israel were to be without a king or a prince, and subject to Gentile domination. The kingdoms of this world, or of the Gentiles, were to be in the ascendant, while the kingdom, throne and city of David should be trodden under foot. This has been plainly revealed to us through the prophets of Israel. The great future of Gentile dominion was also shown to Nebuchadnezzar in a dream, as interpreted by Daniel. Also, further made known to Daniel in a vision. Both the dream and vision set forth that four great empires should successively exist, until succeeded by another to be set up by the God of heaven, which should never be destroyed. This would be the fifth in order, and this last. The kingdoms of men give place for the re-establishment of the kingdom of God.

Without giving in detail Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the metallic image, and Daniel's vision of the great beasts, suffice it to say that according to the interpretation given, both dream and vision give a prophetic view of four great empires which should span the interim between the overthrow and restoration of the kingdom of Israel. Those empires are Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. Daniel said to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou art the head of gold." This definitely settles the fact that the first universal empire was the Babylonian.

This soon passed away and was succeeded by another—the Medo-Persian.

When Daniel was called upon to interpret the handwriting upon the wall of the king's palace, he said to Belshazzar, "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians..... In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain. And Darius the Median took the kingdom." Dan. v. 25-31. Then Cyrus the Persian followed. Thus the second empire was Medo-Persia, represented in the image by the breast and arms of silver.

Then Persia was subdued by Alexander the Great, and for a short time Greece, "the third kingdom of brass," had rule over all the earth. This is symbolized in Dan. viii. 5-8, by a he-goat, with a great horn between his eyes; and in xi. 3, Alexander is called "a mighty king," "who shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his own will." Many details are given in chapters viii. and xi. respecting this third empire, Greece, which are not found in the dream and vision of chapters ii. and vii., to which the reader is referred.

Then Greece was conquered by the fourth kingdom, strong as iron, and represented by that metal in the image. This was Rome. For a long time it wielded a strong sceptre, well symbolized by the legs of iron. Then the iron was mixed with clay, as in the feet and toes of the image, representing the divided state of the Roman empire—partly strong and partly broken.

These four empires—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome—fill up the symbol, or answer to the metals of the image. The clay which is introduced into the feet and toes, does not destroy the iron elements; it only divides and weakens. Nor does it represent another kingdom supplanting the Roman, but in connection with the iron forms the feet of the image. Nebuchadnezzar saw the image complete. He then saw something strike the feet of the image—a stone—which broke them to pieces. This was distinct from the image, and yet it symbolized a kingdom. Daniel says, "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." This kingdom is of divine and heavenly origin. The stone which smites the feet is not in hands, (margin—not of human origin, or under human control, and after it has completely destroyed the fourth or Roman empire in its partly strong and partly brittle state, it becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth. This is the fifth empire. Not of men, but from God.

Of the same import is Daniel's vision of the four beasts. The lion with the eagle's wings, representing Babylon: the bear, Medo-Persian: the leopard, Greece; the fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, exceedingly strong, with great iron teeth, having ten horns—this represented Rome. "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces." This undoubtedly describes the Roman empire in the zenith of its power. Then the ten horns, which are ten kings, accord with the toes of the image.

But a new power is seen to arise among the horns, which is not represented in the toes of the image—a little horn—remarkable for its blasphemy, arrogance, and persecuting spirit. It continues to persecute the saints for "a time, times, and the dividing of time," until the judgement shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end. This little horn is the representative of the Roman or fourth kingdom at the time when it exercises its power. It comes up among the ten horns on the head of the fourth beast, and consequently belongs to the Roman empire. When its dominion is taken away, that empire ends; and that which destroys it is the kingdom of the Son of man—a kingdom which shall not be destroyed. It follows on after the fourth, occupies its territory, even the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, and is the fifth and last universal empire.

The kingdom of God in Israel, as ruled in former times by the house of David, was overturned on account of the sins of its rulers; and it was to be no more until he should come whose right it is—or the heir according to the promise made to David. This implies a restoration of the kingdom. We have seen that during this interregnum rulership has been in the hands of the Gentiles. They also have proved themselves unworthy to hold the reins of government. The nations groan under their heavy yoke. We are now in the last days of Gentile rule. The world needs and earnestly desires a better government. Human governments are a failure—even a divine kingdom, when administered by wicked men, did not succeed.

The next thing in order, and soon to be accomplished, is the re-establishment of the throne and kingdom of David. The true heir to the throne came eighteen centuries ago, but he was put to death by his deluded countrymen, because they did not like his doctrine. He told them the kingdom had come near, and called upon them to repent, and believe the good news. He told them what kind of characters should possess the kingdom. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Matt. v. 3. "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Verse 10. "Except your righteousness exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Verse 20. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these (earthly) things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. vii. 21. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." Mark x. 14, 15. "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." Mark x. 23-25. Such were some of the teachings of Jesus with respect to the character of those to whom the kingdom would be given.

The nation of Israel were not willing to accept the king and his kingdom on these terms. This was not agreeable to their fleshly nature. They expected that they would obtain the kingdom without such cost and trouble. To sacrifice present ease, wealth, and honor, and be persecuted for righteousness's sake, was too humiliating for them. Hence they rejected and killed their Messiah. But God raised him from the dead, and placed him at his own right hand, "until he make his enemies a footstool for his feet," and "until the times of the restitution of all things." Acts ii. 32-36; iii. 20, 21.

Jesus and his apostles preached the gospel of the kingdom, calling upon those who heard them to repent, and become qualified for a participation in the blessings of the kingdom. The gospel, or the kingdom, was preached in order to prepare a people for the Lord. Since the nation of Israel refused the distinguished honor offered them, at the foot of Sinai, by breaking their covenant, of becoming a peculiar treasure, and a kingdom of priests; and also refused the second offer of the kingdom, through the Messiah and his ambassadors; the word or gospel of the kingdom has been sent to all nations, so that whosoever will may come, and become heirs of the promised kingdom. The invitation of the gospel is to share with the Messiah in the life, glory, riches, honor and blessedness of his righteous and beneficent reign over the house of Jacob and all nations. But he must have proper characters. The future empire is to be administered in righteousness, and those who are privileged to share in the government must be righteous. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?" 1 Cor. vi. 9. Those who are called out by the gospel are a chosen generation a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, "kings and priests unto God,"—"kings and priests, who shall reign on the earth," and "with Christ for a thousand years." 1 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. i. 6; v. 10; xx. 4-6. "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved (as the preceding four kingdoms), let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." Heb. xii. 28.

Judas and the Supper.

A writer of an article in THE RESTITUTION of November 13th, speaking of the first memorial Supper, says: By a careful comparison of the four records we conclude that even the unfaithful Judas, the betrayer, was not there. The conclusion that Judas was not at the memorial seems to be drawn from the fact of his going out as recorded by John xiii. 30. But his going out after eating the passover is no evidence that he might not have returned in time and ate the memorial supper. The object of his going out, evidently, was to inform the high priests where Jesus might be found. For Matthew says that Judas Iscariot went unto the chief priests and said unto them: What will ye give me and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver, and from that time he sought opportunity to betray him. And now as the enemies of Jesus were on the alert to apprehend him, it would take Judas but a moment to carry the information to them of Jesus' whereabouts.

If what is recorded by John were all the information we could get to determine whether Judas was at the Supper, we might halt between two opinions, not knowing which were correct. Luke is less definite than John on that matter. But Matthew and Mark are more efficient. They say that Jesus sat down with the twelve, Matt. xxvi. 20; Mark xiv. 17, and a little further along, according to Matthew's record, Jesus says: "Drink ye all of it," which we understand is equivalent to saying, "all of you drink of it," and Mark says "they all drank of it (the cup)."

I am led to the conclusion that Judas went out between the eating of the passover and the new institution in memory of Jesus, for John makes it so. I am also led to the conclusion that Judas was one of the number who ate and drank at the new institution, because Mark and Matthew say they all drank of it. All, must refer to the previous number spoken of, unless something had occurred to change that number. The apostles might have all gone out one by one and have returned between the two institutions. The r going out, if they returned in season to be at the ordinance, would not change the number previously spoken of. Whether any but Judas did go out between the two institutions, we are not informed.

The going out of Judas was nothing remarkable to be recorded, but the object and the enmity of the crime for which he went out to do, doubtless, is why it is recorded of him that he went out. Before I can reasonably conclude that Judas was not one of the all who ate and drank at the Lord's table, I must have proof that he did not return after he went out. To infer that he did not return to partake of the emblems with the eleven, is to mar the records of both Matthew and Mark, and does no better agree with the record by John. Taking the united testimony of the four evangelists, it seems to me there is no more room to doubt that Judas was one of the number who partook of the emblems, than there is room to doubt that Peter, James or John, or any other of the apostles were of the number.

"The Turkish Empire."

Is it the mystic Euphrates? Rev. xvi. 12. To my feeble apprehension this has long been an assumption. Though plausible in some aspects of the general subject yet it seems to lack a "thus saith the Lord." Many years ago, on examination, I found "the River Euphrates—the great River Euphrates"—a geographical or historical term, Gen. ii. 14; xv. 18; Deut. i. 7; 2 Sam. viii. 3; Jer. xiii. 4; li. 63, in all, this term occurs eighteen times. The prophetic girdle and the book did not go to the Turkish empire over 1000 years before its existence. Hence, "the Euphrates" was not a mystic term through all time prior to that of St. John in Rev. ix. 14 and xvi. 12. And if it be a figure of speech—a mystic term here—it is made so by a very general analogy with the aid of "private interpretation" so far as "the word of the faith" seems to justify.

What May the Difference?

We read of "the word of wisdom" and of "the spirit of wisdom." Of truth and "the spirit of truth." Of life and "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." Of faith and "the spirit of faith." Of grace and "the spirit of grace." May not the antitheals aid to a perception of the import of such language? We read of "a name to live" while dead! Of trees without fruit, of wells without water, and of faith without works illustrative of Christian life. Then "the spirit of wisdom, of truth, and of life," etc., may express the reality, the power and fruits appropriate to faith in the word. It seems obvious that the possession of this "spirit of wisdom, truth and grace" will not cut and carve up, or cast aside "the word of wisdom and of grace and of life," to serve the idol self, or set up the idolatry of any sect, or promote any partisan purpose. No, no; its prayer is: "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth" on all points.

India's Army.

The Mohammedans of India, whom Shere Ali and his Russian backers propose to stir up to revolt against the English, are indeed a formidable power. The number of them in Hindostan is 41,000,000—about the population of the German empire—and they embrace not only the wealthiest and most highly civilized, but also the bravest and most warlike of the native population. It is barely two centuries since Aurungzebe, from his throne in Delhi, surveyed an empire richer and more magnificent than that of any other conqueror since Cæsar. The possessions of the Great Mogul, embracing Bengal, the Deccan, and the northwest provinces, have since changed hands more than once, but the splendid palaces, the stately temples, and the graceful mosques of Agra, Delhi, and Lucknow still attest the grandeur of Moslem rule in India. It is to the power and position once held by the Mogul dynasty that the Afghan Ameer evidently aspires. He relies largely upon the recollections of the Sepoy mutiny and the terrible reprisals which followed to aid him, forgetful of the fact that the policy of the English since the mutiny has bound the native princes to their conquerors. The most courageous portions of the Queen's Indian forces are Mohammedans, and the armies now gathering before the Khyber Pass are, in the main, followers of the Arabian Prophet. The warmest friends and admirers of the Prince of Wales during his recent visit were Moslem rulers like the Maharajah of Gwalior and the Begum of Bhopal. During the Anglo-Russian imbroglio they were among the first to offer their armies and their treasures for Queen Victoria's service, and amid the Afghan troubles they have, for the most part, exhibited a similar spirit. Shere Ali is reckoning without his host if he imagines that his 7,000,000 Afghans are more potent than the 40,000,000 of Moslems beyond the Indus.

POETRY.

Cumnan.

W. L. CROCKETT.

O! promised abode, though dark shadows rest
Over thy vales where the sunlight was streaming;
Soon, soon comes the day when thou shalt be blessed,
In garments of beauty thy fields shall be dressed,
And from thee Christ's glory be streaming.

Though thy vineyards are waste and thy people are gone,
And in far distant climes are repining;
There breaks o'er thy mountains a glorious morn,
When the law of Jehovah shall Zion adorn,
When the Day-star of peace shall be shining.

In thy wild mid desert shall blossom the rose,
And the rock with bright verdure be smiling;
Thy sons shall find in thee eternal repose;
No blight shall hang over thee, no cares oppose,
No stranger thy temple defiling.

The city that weeps now shall joyfully sing,
Heaven's light her darkness is rending;
Their tribute unto her all nations shall bring
And bow at the feet of her glorious King,
No more with each other contending.

Thy enemies are mine, for Jehovah has sworn
To save for her sake thee, oh, never;
The griefs of thy people, the bonds they have worn,
The curse of their blindness, the burdens they've borne,
Before Messiah shall vanish forever.

SELECTIONS.

Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.

Prophetic Signs in the East.

REV. HORATIUS BONAR, D. D.

Israel and Jerusalem the Solution of The Eastern problem—Lord Beaconsfield, a Jew, the Guiding Spirit in Recent Eastern affairs—Yet he has Acted by means of Gentile and not Jewish resources—The Bag-and-Baggage-policy—The British Protectorate A Boon to Palestine—Russia's Designs On Jerusalem—In Ezekiel xxxviii Britain predicted to Checkmate Russia—England's responsibility toward Palestine.

It is to the East that God is now turning the eyes of his church. It is in connection with the East that his people are now asking the question, "Watchman, what of the night?" and it is in answer to this that the watchman's voice is heard saying, "The morning cometh"—adding the solemn words of warning, lest men should too eagerly anticipate the dawn and forget the darkness that still lies between, "But also the night;" for though the announcement of coming dawn should cheer us with the brilliant prospect of the brightest day that ever dawned upon the earth, yet we are not to lose sight of the judgments that lie between us, and that glorious consummation.

And the watchman does not discourage the question; rather he commends it, and bids us ask it again, until he can tell us "It is done: the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ." For thus he speaks: "If ye will inquire, inquire ye; return, come."

In the events of the last two years we hear the prophetic voice bidding us look Eastward. Not as if the West were no more to occupy our attention, but the long-neglected East is now emerging from its obscurity; and God is now, in his own way, about to settle the "Eastern Question," and to bring Jerusalem "into remembrance." And this before both the church and the world, for he is speaking to both.

The statesmen of earth have been trying to settle this question so as to preserve the balance of power in Europe and in the Mediterranean, according to their own ideas of Eastern or Western supremacy. God now steps in, and presents his own solution of it, introducing a new element, to which earthly potentates have hitherto paid no regard—Israel and Jerusalem; for in them lies the final settlement of the great problem which they have been working at so long in vain.

One of the most remarkable features of the case is, that the arrangement of Eastern affairs should have been in the hands of a Jew—Lord Beaconsfield. I do not touch the politics of the question. It is time that these were set aside, and that Eastern affairs were no longer judged or misjudged by imperial ambition or English partisanship. For nearly two years the noise of angry and one-sided politics has drowned the voice of prophecy, and Christian men have shrunk from speaking out, lest they should be set down as mere political debaters; the canvassers for a party in the state, instead of the expositors of the divine Word.

But now, when the ritualistic admirers of the Greek Church have said their say; when the defenders of Turkish weakness and misrule have cooled down; when the "Liberal" supporters of the greatest despotism which the world contains are beginning to admit that Russian professions of benevolence and religious zeal look rather suspicious, if not thoroughly insincere, we can speak out more boldly, and hope for an impartial hearing.

A Jew, then, in the person of the Prime Minister of England, has been the moving, guiding, controlling power throughout these conferences and complications. The quietness of strength and calmness of wisdom displayed by him in the midst of so much excitement, and in the face of so much opposition, have been very remarkable. Whether he has done all that he might have done, or has done it in the best way, is not for us to say. It is enough for us to see that he has done it, and that he has done it so well. Whether he has done it in the best way, or has done all that he might have done, is not for us, just now, to say. The question is the fact that in the providence of God he should have been at the helm of England when these difficulties came up, and that he should have been made use of to settle them. The question is ultimately a Jewish one, and a Jew has been called in to solve it, as only a Jew could do.

It is a Jew that is now Premier of the greatest monarchy which the world ever saw, and that practically commands its fleets and armies. It is a Jew that is virtually at the head, not only of the ten kingdoms of the Roman earth, but of the whole four monarchies of Daniel. It is a Jew that, when the great northern power was pouring down its squadrons upon Europe, Asia, and Syria ready to occupy not Constantinople only, but Jerusalem, interposed and bridled back the unruly hosts without the shedding of one drop of blood.

But the instruments through which this Jew has done this Eastern work have not been Jewish. They have been altogether Gentile. It is through Gentile resources that he has carried his plans to a successful consummation; taking the highest place in Gentile cabinets, moulding Gentile statesmen, wielding Gentile armies and navies, and employing Gentile gold and silver.

He has arrested the aggressor; he has secured peace; he has obtained the protectorate of Asia Minor, and specially of Palestine. These regions now lie at the feet of England, and the moral influence alone of what has been done will operate with prodigious power for the overthrow of Mohammedan misrule.

The cry was raised a year ago, "Send the Turks out of Europe!" If so, where would you send them? The Turks do more harm in Asia than they do in Europe, and any one who has traveled in Syria and lived in Jerusalem would be inclined to raise a counter cry, "Send them out of Asia! expel them from Jerusalem!" But would either cry be of any avail? or is there either justice or humanity in the proposal? It is no doubt Turkish misgovernment that keeps Palestine degraded and barren; but some other relief must be thought of than the mere expulsion of the oppressor. Nor is there any thing more likely to accomplish the resuscitation of the land and the restoration of good government than a British protectorate.

They who know the East know the spell which the British name exercises there; and they can tell that British rule, imperfect as it may be, is yet identified, in the oriental mind, with honesty, strength, firmness, and a benevolent will. Speaking not prophetically, but simply according to human calculation, the way is open for the resuscitation of Syria and the restoration of the waste places of Palestine. There will be protection, not of a selfish race or an ambitious nation, but of one which sincerely seeks the welfare of the people which it professes to protect.

For years Russia has been seeking to dominate in Jerusalem. She sends her swarms of pilgrims annually thither; and within the last twenty years she has built outside the Jaffa gate what is nominally a hospice, but what is really a fort. "The Russian hospice," says Mr. Conder in his recent work, "commands the whole town, and is thought by many to be in a position designedly of military strength" (vol. i., p. 27). She has been making preparations for occupying Palestine as soon as her opportunity occurs. Once and again she has been checked in her attempt; the last check has been by the hands of a Jew. Her time is not yet come, and till that time does come, the hooks are to be put into her jaw (Ezekiel xxxviii. 4) to restrain her. When it does come, she will be permitted to pour down like a flood upon the land of unwalled villages, and having thus far achieved the ambitious plan of ages, and carried out the great national idea, she will perish on the mountains of Israel (Ezekiel xxxix. 4).

The 38th and 39th chapters of Ezekiel ought to be studied in connection with the Eastern Question. The subject is too large for present exposition. One thing only we would notice now: the checks given to this great northern invader are predicted to come from some European power, a power which has a twofold character: first, maritime; and, second, mercantile. It is "the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof," that arrest the assailant's progress with the words of resolute interposition, "Art thou come to take a spoil?" Ezek. xxxviii. 13.

It is "the ships of Tarshish" (Isaiah lx. 9) that are to wait on Jehovah, and be ready to transport his Israel home, in the day when their era of scattering and exile shall have ended. At Cyprus the ships of Tarshish are now at anchor, waiting to do their errand for Israel. How soon they may be required, we say not. But one step has been taken for the deliverance of the forsaken land and the wandering tribes.

Turkey has for ages been the oppressor of the East, and his religion the curse of Palestine; and there is something profoundly solemn in seeing that it is to this vile empire that God has given power to tread down his holy city Jerusalem. Luke xxi. 24. To be trodden under the foot of the Gentiles is sad enough, whether these be Babylonians, Greeks, or Romans; but to be trodden down by Turkey is the very depth of degradation and shame. Such has been God's purpose regarding that people that crucified the Lord of glory, and that city where he was nailed to the tree. It is the bitterest cup of woe that was ever given to a nation to drink.

But the times of the Gentiles are fast running to a close; and then Israel comes into remembrance. Babylon falls, and Jerusalem rises. Babylon's river is dried up, and the blessed river of Jerusalem begins to swell and flow. Ezek. xlvii. 6-12.

No calamity could have been greater to Syria than a Russian possession or protectorate. American and British missionaries enjoy the fullest liberty under Turkish rule. Under Russian dominion this would have been at an end. It is well known to many of us, that just before the outbreak of the war our missionaries wrote home expressing their dread at the possibility of Russian success and a Russian possession of Asia Minor. They knew that they would be expelled, and their work scattered to the winds. They understood, in this respect at least, the difference between Turkish misrule and Russian tyranny. They knew that there could be always influence brought to bear at Constantinople more than at St. Petersburg.

Hope for Palestine, save as a Russian province like Poland or Siberia, would have been at an end. The heel of the Gentile would only have been more effectually planted on Jerusalem. The influence already too greatly exercised in Syria by Russia would have been utterly disastrous. The hatred of the Greek Church to the Jew is quite as ferocious as that of the Turk, and Israel would soon have had to place in Palestine. We wonder so many evangelical men should have taken the part of the Greek Church, and allowed themselves to be the dupes of ritualism. They might have known better, and at least stood aloof from the zeal of Russian partisanship, and abstained from praises of Muscovite benevolence. The Rhodope Commission has no doubt opened the eyes of many; but why were they not from the first suspicious of the friendly congratulations of ritualism?

But apart from all this, let the Christian now turn his eye to Palestine. It is to England that every eye in Palestine will now be turned; and this will be the question added, What are you going to do for us? Is the connection between England and Syria to be a barren one; or is England to rise up to her responsibilities and do something worthy of her name and power?

That England has undertaken responsibilities is a simple fact; and it is a position from which no brave man need shrink. This is the age of responsibilities, personal and national, and it is cowardly to turn away from them. Her responsibilities are before her, whether she understand them or not; and the fact that a nation and a powerful government has undertaken responsibilities should not be a matter for reproach or alarm. Only let her go forward to redeem them, by acting boldly as a nation that loves the truth, honors justice, prizes the Bible, and recognizes the position which God has marked out for Israel in the latter days.

That the time of Israel's trouble has come to an end, we do not believe. There are days of evil in store for that unbelieving nation, sadder, it may be, than any heretofore. For the fourteenth chapter of Zechariah remains yet to be fulfilled, and the events predicted there are likely not only to startle the world, but to disarrange many a scheme of human calculation, political and religious.

Still, the events of the present day are calling the attention of men to the East, and especially to Israel. The predictions of God's Word will ere long unfold themselves, perhaps more rapidly than we think; the ten tribes, still, like Judah, under the curse of scattering and unbelief, will be brought into view in some way that we know not; and, it may be in various sections and at different times, the whole nation will reappear and claim their ancient heritage.

Meanwhile we rejoice that it is given to England to keep the Jew and to deliver his land. Hitherto for many a century, the foot of the Gentile has been upon Jerusalem to tread her down; now the hand of the Gentile comes forward to lift up her head. Already we seem to realize the words of prophetic peace:

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isa. xl. 2.

Let political partisanship wrangle over the Eastern Question, and the Turkish convention, and the Syrian protectorate; but let the Christian rejoice that we are swiftly approaching the redemption of Israel, and the second advent of Christ, even though the latter-day glory will have to be introduced with darkness and terror and war.

The Russian Mission at Cabul.

M. Vambery has communicated to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung some interesting details concerning the Russian Mission to Afghanistan, some of which he has gleaned from private information, and some from Russian official sources:—"The Mission set out from Tashkend on the 13th of July that is, on the very day on which the Berlin Treaty was signed, and proceeded with a very slight interruption through the Khanate of Bokhara, by Balk and Bamian, and so to Cabul. The members of the Mission were Major-General Stolietoff, Colonel Razgamoff, Councillor Malevinski, Assessor Benderski, and Ensigns Nazitroff-Beg and Zeman-Beg; the two last, as their names indicate, are Muhommedans. The Mission was lodged in the Bala-Hissar (or citadel) close to the residence of the Ameer, and was treated with the utmost hospitality, food being sent from the kitchen of the Ameer himself, and all the customary marks of favor, such as presents of saddle horses, weapons, &c., being lavished on them. I am also informed that in addition to grand military reviews, public amusements were also got up in their honor. The Russians took part in several hunting parties, and became as much the favorites of the townspeople of Cabul as of the Ameer. They also made several excursions from the capital; among other places to Istalif and Jellalabad. After a stay of nearly five weeks at Cabul, Major-General Stolietoff set out on his return to Tashkend, accompanied by an Afghan Embassy. He left behind him at Cabul the other members of his own Mission, a circumstance which accounts for the strict reserve in which the Newab Ghulam Hussein Khan was forced to remain, and also for his statement that the Russians were there at the date of his departure. It would seem that he was kept separate from all the Court and people, and always surrounded by persons specially charged by the Ameer to watch him, and was able to pick up very little information. The envoys of the Ameer were received with the greatest distinction at Tashkend by General Kaufmann, having been taken in carriages to their audience. The Afghans seem to have made a most favorable impression on the Russians. What gratified them especially was the absence of that slavish subservicney which they are accustomed to find in all Asiatics. The Afghans presented themselves in strict military fashion: most of them wore English uniforms much mixed, of course, with Afghan peculiarities, such as turbans, felt caps, red pointed shoes, &c."

EASTERN ITEMS.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—A Lahore correspondent says General Roberts will probably winter on the heights east of Peiwar Pass. His victory detaches 20,000 non-orthodox Mussulmen from the ameer's authority. According to private information, these Mussulmen are already sending levies into the British camp. It is reported that the Khoord Cabul tribes are only kept from deserting the ameer by the presence of troops. Two Europeans were seen among the defenders of Peiwar. An Afghan general has presented himself at Peiwar.

Sir Charles Dilke will ask the government on Monday to state the contents of the letter that Lord Lytton on the 2d of December announced that Major Cavagnari had received from the ameer of Afghanistan. It is rumored that the ameer therein expressed a wish to make a submission.

Constantinople dispatch: Austria has consented to make the convention relative to Novi Bazar applicable to Bosnia. The Porte, however, declines the Austrian demand to make the eventual evacuation dependent on Turkey's paying the cost of occupation. Layard, British ambassador, has received information contradicting the reports of massacres in the Milnik district.

DIED.

STEWART—Nov. 3, 1878, of pulmonary consumption, Alvin Peter Stewart, only child of Alvin W. and Susan Stewart, aged four years, nine months and five days.

He was a very affectionate child, and during his short but happy life, he was doted on by indulgent parents; nor was he ever forgotten to enjoy their shadows with his fond love. Oh happy thought! Although the grave may hold our dear little Patsy for a while, we have the blissful assurance that he is not lost but only rests till the bright morning of the resurrection, when, if we are faithful, we shall meet our loved one with all the redeemed, and forever dwell together in the Paradise of God, where there shall be no more death and the inhabitants shall not say I am sick.

Oh happy day that hasten'd on
When I shall see the glorious prince of peace,
Turn all the saints from east and west to me
In robes and immortality,
O joy, joy day! Oh happy day!
I'll stay with Christ and watch, and pray.

LLOYD—At the residence of brother J. E. Sallee, near, St. Paul, Ind., on Oct. 31st, 1878, Sister Elizabeth Llewellyn, aged 83 years, 9 months and two days.

Bro. Lloyd was born in Wales, March 14, 1795, came to Ireland in this country in 1832, and settled on a farm in Connecticut. For years past he was a strong believer in the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. When he left the meeting to be held at our place Dec. 1, 1878, and the meeting that I expected to have following, he decided and came west to his children. He came to our place Sept. 4, and I enjoyed much of his company, enjoying the meeting very much, when he went south thirty miles to Dresden, to brother Simon Phelps' where he remained one week, during which time he was taken sick, but on Wednesday Sept. 25th, joined me on my way to Missouri. On our arrival at Dr. Callaway's, in Ravanna, Mo., Sept. 26, he retired to his bed from which he never recovered, but grew weaker day by day till about 6 o'clock, Thursday morning, Oct. 3, he breathed the last time. On Friday morning, about twenty-six hours after his decease his companion from Teheran, Ill., arrived, and in the afternoon of the same day we placed him in the silent tomb to rest till Jesus comes. From my association while with brother Lloyd, he was a man of candor, devotion, and faithfulness, ever relying upon the promises of the Savior for support. O. M. MYERS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the literal restitution of all things, as published both ancient and modern, by all the Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates a immediate and literal establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and all associated saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the conversion of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the literal destruction of the wicked; righteous, and the final casting out of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a beauty full of the Gospel, repentance, and Faith—the strength of these to the formation of character, and a life acceptable for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS

The Diminishing of Israel the Riches of the Gentiles.

The purpose of God to take out of the Gentiles a people for his name is a glorious truth that was never manifested to the sons of men until the present age of the world's history. Though they (the Gentiles) were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, yet it was not manifested unto them until the sound of the glorious Gospel of Christ fell upon their ears in the house of Cornelius, more than eighteen centuries ago. The time was then come for the fulfilment of that prophecy of Isaiah lxv. 1: "I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not." This calling of the Gentiles is called by the apostle Paul, the "mystery of Christ, which, in other ages, was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, which mystery is, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel." Eph. iii. 4-6. These people taken out of the Gentiles, enter very largely into the composition of what is called by the apostle, "the Church of Christ, which is also called his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." Eph. i. 22, 23. Christ began to build his church out of Israelitish members. From the day of Pentecost until Cornelius, not a single Gentile was added to the church; we read of three thousand being added to the church in one day, and of God adding to the church daily such as shall be saved; but no mention is made of Gentiles until Cornelius is named. Here is where the diminishing of Israel began. Instead of building the church entirely out of Israelites, God chose to use Gentile material, (so to speak,) hence the diminution of Israelitish material. If the Gentiles were not to be built in the church or temple, then for every Gentile in the temple an Israelite would have been taken, for the temple must be built, and God has been pleased to build it out of both Jews and Gentiles. This diminution of Israel made room for the Gentiles and is called their riches. To understand the character of the riches we must understand the high position of the church in the future. The individuals who compose the church are to be made partakers of immortality by being raised from the dead and changed at the coming of Him who is "the first begotten of the dead, the prince of the kings of the earth." Rev. i. 5. They are to bear the image of the Heavenly Man "the last Adam—the Lord from heaven." 1 Cor. xv. 49. Their vile bodies shall be fashioned like unto the glorious body of Him before whom the beloved John fell at his feet as dead when he appeared to him in vision on the Isle of Patmos. Phil. iii. 21; Rev. i. 14-17.

They are also said to be joint heirs with Christ. Rom. viii. 17. What is Christ heir to? "Heir of all things." Heb. i. 2. So then, "he that overcometh shall inherit all things." Rev. xxi. 7. Christ is heir of all things—the church are joint heirs with him. High position! Heirs of all things, heirs of the world. Rom. iv. 1, 2. When the kingdom of God is restored to Israel it is given to the Church; it is given to the church to reign over; and in proof of this read the following in Jer. xxxiii. 25, 26: "Thus saith the Lord: if my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them." Here it is revealed that it is in harmony with all Bible truths that the seed of Jacob is going to return from captivity and be ruled by rulers called the seed of David. "The elder shall serve the younger" will then have its antitypical fulfillment in the kingdom of God. Christ and his many brethren who are joint heirs will be rulers. They will constitute the commonwealth of Israel, the new government that will be established in Jerusalem, and Gog shall rest upon the shoulder of David's Royal Heir. Isa. ix. 7. They shall be "kings and priests unto God, and shall reign on the earth." In view of the high position of the church in the coming age, is it any wonder the apostle should call it a "high calling?" Phil. iii. 14. And how true are the words, the diminishing of Israel is the "riches of the Gentiles." The unsearchable riches of Christ are offered unto the Gentiles, and whosoever believeth the glad tidings of the coming kingdom of God, and is immersed for the remission of sins, and presses toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, shall be accounted worthy to obtain the world to come and the resurrection from among the dead, and shall be presented faultless before the presence of God's glory with exceeding joy.

An Open Letter to Col. Robert Ingersoll—No. 2.

You next ask: "Does the Bible give women any rights?"

To the above question, and the sarcastic comments which you connected therewith, concerning the freedom of the wife, we have only to quote the language of Paul in Eph. v. 25: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." If the husband exhibits toward the wife that degree of affection that he is willing to lay down his life for the companion of his bosom as Christ did for the church, we believe the wife will not justly feel the yoke of bondage to rest very heavily upon her. Neither will she have reason to complain of the life of suffering she has to live.

You ask; "Does the sacred Book of morality inculcate concubinage?"

Read Numbers xxxi. and Deut. xxi. "They are not fit for me to read."

Perhaps you had a motive for not reading them. There is not a single intimation in either of those passages teaching concubinage, or that the children of Israel should hold their captives for any such purpose as you name. The Israelites were commanded to preserve none other of their captives but those who were pure. This you will find in the verses 17 and 18 of the chapter of Numbers you quoted. If those captives were to be preserved for the purpose you name, why preserve only those who were pure? Was it that they might become impure? No. God ever looks upon purity and innocence as a virtue; hence the command to preserve only the pure and innocent.

The next passage quoted states the purpose for which they were to be preserved. Num xxi. 11, 12. They were to be retained as servants, or as wives. If as wives, previous formalities were to be observed. The law of God forbids fornication and adultery. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Ex. xx. 14.

You say: "The Bible teaches witchcraft, and that the dead can be raised by the power of sorcery....I refer to the witch of Endor as proof."

But we deny that the Bible teaches any such thing. The language of another is so to the point that we give it entire. This narrative to which you refer is found in 1 Sam. xxviii. 1: Let us consider the circumstances of the case. First, God had refused to answer Saul by vision, dream, or prophet. But God at first refuse to answer Saul by prophets, and then change his mind and answer by a witch? Second, By consulting the woman with a familiar spirit he transgressed the law of God, and rendered himself obnoxious to the death penalty. It was death for either king or prophet to consult a person with a familiar spirit. Lev. xx. 6. Third, Saul lost his life as a punishment for consulting the witch of Endor. "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit to enquire of it." 1 Chron. x. 13 Would God endorse his transgression of his law by granting Saul's request and then punish him with death for an act to which he was a party? What evidence is there in seeing gods ascending out of the earth to convince the witch that Saul was before her? She knew from the first who he was. Her pretended ignorance was a part of her preconcerted plan. "And the king said unto her, Be not afraid, for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth. And he said unto her, What form is he of?" There is no congruity between the woman's statement and Saul's question. The woman being satisfied that Saul was prepared for a description and personification of Samuel, proceeded. From her description Saul perceived that it was Samuel. There is no evidence that Saul saw anything. It was in the night when he heard the woman's description. He accepted it and prostrated himself upon the ground. The prediction that Saul should be with the prophet Samuel the next day was not true; therefore whoever made the prediction was undoubtedly a false prophet. Read the succeeding day's march of David and his men in the two succeeding chapters before the decisive battle between the Philistines and Israel in which Saul was killed, and you will see that it must have been four or five days, at least, subsequent to consulting the witch of Endor that Saul was killed." So much for this objection to the Bible.

You state that "you never have experienced those gifts which the Bible says a believer shall receive, the casting out of devils, the speaking in new tongues, etc."

Doubtless you refer to the language of Mark xvi. 17, 18. There may be two reasons for your not experiencing those gifts. First, those were gifts bestowed upon believers. Second, those gifts were not intended to reach beyond the days of the apostles, and with them it was true. Acts ii. 1.

Your next statement is, "The Bible teaches that a man may enslave his brother. In other words, it teaches slavery."

But you give no passage as proof. What saith the Word? Lev. xxv. 46, is doubtless one of the passages to which you refer. Although this passage speaks of servants from heathen nations serving the children of Judea forever, yet this "forever" contract never reached beyond the fifty years jubilee period. Joel iii. 8, is another passage often quoted to prove the Bible teaches slavery. But if you read the first eight verses you will see it is a judgment of God upon the enemies of his people because they had sold the children of Judah into bondage. They must undergo the same punishment they had meted out to God's people. Does the Bible really teach slavery? "He that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death." Exodus xxi. 16. This is the penalty pronounced by God, which was to be inflicted on those who bartered in human flesh. Although the bitter cry of fathers, mothers and children rises to the God of heaven, saying, "How long, oh, Lord!" and the death sentence in heaven is against the destroyers of human peace for thus acting in open violation of God's law, yet you will dare teach to the world the thought that the Bible teaches slavery, when God has declared therein that those who thus act shall surely be put to death.

"Now we come to the New Testament with its glad tidings of great joy to all people. It is good to get at the facts. Hear what it says of servants: 'Contentment is great gain, especially for slaves.'"

That is not the language of the apostle. But "Godliness with contentment is great gain." 1 Tim. vi. 6. He is here speaking of believers, and not of servants or slaves.

You say, "Abraham was commanded to offer up his son Isaac as a sacrifice, and he pretended he was about to obey; and the boy, being only twenty years of age, was never consulted."

What proof have you that this record of Abraham's faith and fidelity to God was all a pretended farce?

You refer to the account in Judges xi. which speaks of Jeptha's daughter, and ask, "Can a merciful God consent to such a sacrifice?" There is no evidence in the whole account or the vow he made and executed that God directed or approved of it in any way. Was God responsible for Jeptha's rash vow which was a violation of God's law? Deut. xii. 30, 31.

You next speak of the book of Job, saying: "Read the book of Job. His children were destroyed in the end to show how much he gained," etc. That is simply an assertion without proof. Although Job was tried, persecuted, and suffered loss of property and children, he murmured not at God, but exclaimed: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken (permitted to be taken away)! Blessed be the name of the Lord!" If Job, amid all his sorrows, saw no reason for complaint against the God of earth, why need you, away down in the nineteenth century, hundreds of years thereafter, murmur at the afflictions of Job? We think this very far fetched.

A Question Answered—Weekly Communion.

A. R. MACKENZIE.

An intelligent sister in Eastern Virginia writes to request of me a Scriptural solution of certain doubts and difficulties in her mind "as to whether it was intended that the Lord's Supper should be observed weekly, and on the First Day of the week? and whether or not, our Lord partook of it after he arose from the dead?"

She adds, "Any light on the subject will be thankfully received, and, I trust, rightfully applied." As others may share her doubts, it may be well to consider the subject, with your leave, in the columns of THE RESTITUTION.

1. As to the first enquiry,—the First Day weekly communion,—we get some light from the Bible lesson that, as a matter-of-fact, our Lord and his apostles, taught, both by precept and example. In the commission given to the twelve, after he arose from the dead, they were commanded to "teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them (the baptized) to observe (i. e., practice) all things whatsoever, I have commanded you." Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Hence, it is plain the apostles had the Master's authority to teach those they baptized to observe—to keep and obey—the "all things he had commanded them." Among these things, the Supper was one, for he had said to them, "Do this in remembrance of me," and "take, eat; this is my body," etc. Accordingly we read that subsequently they taught their first converts, on Pentecost, in such a way that it is written of them they "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship and in breaking of bread," etc. Acts ii. 42.

Now, so far, the teaching is all by command—by precept. But they likewise taught by example, for Paul taught his Corinthian brethren, 1 Cor. x. 6, 11, that certain acts done by the ancient people of God "were our examples," and "are written for our admonition," etc. And, again, in Philippians iv. 9: "Those things which you have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do," etc.; and, again: "Be ye followers of me, as I am of Christ."

With this testimony before us, who can doubt that apostolic example is as binding on the disciples of Jesus as apostolic precept? and that each is as obligating as if expressly commanded by the Master himself, for did he not say to, and of them, "Whosoever heareth you, heareth me?" "Is true, we may add, that if they, in anything, are found to differ in their teachings—which some shallow reasoners allege, but cannot prove—we must, by their own admonitions to us in 1 Tim. vi. 3, always adhere to "the wholesome words of our Lord and to the doctrine, which is according to godliness;" and this precept is not without reason, for the apostles were fallible in their judgment and conduct (as in the contention about circumcision, Acts xv.), but Jesus, our Lord, never erred. Beyond the plain command, "Do this in remembrance of me," our Lord did not instruct his disciples as to the Supper. The time, place and manner of observing it were left to the direction of the apostles, after "they were endued with power from on high," and it is to their teaching and practice, to their precept and example, that we are referred for our imitation and guidance. Without telling us in words how often and when, the feast should be "observed," we are left to find out by recurring to their practice and the example of the churches set in order and superintended by them. From the Sacred Record, we learn, as in Acts ii., that they "continued steadfastly" to attend to this divine ordinance; hence, that it was not an occasional or infrequent occurrence, as it is now with the prevailing religious societies.

In 1 Cor. xi., St. Paul declares particularly, the manner and design of the institution; and Luke, in Acts xx., records the historical fact that the disciples at Troas "came together to break bread on the First Day of the week," and in 1 Cor. xvi. 2, we read the statement that the church at Corinth was to attend to the collection for the saints as he had already "given order to the churches of Galatia on the First Day of the week." Remembering that the day of Pentecost (the fiftieth day after the expiring of seven precious Sabbaths) was also the First Day of the week when the first Jewish converts first broke bread, we have the example of all these churches at Jerusalem, at Troas, in Corinth and in Galatia, to justify and oblige us to meet together on the First (not any first) Day to "keep the ordinances," breaking bread, included, as they were delivered to those who had authority to direct and prescribe our duty in the premises. Hence, we should follow the example and pattern after the manner of these inspired models. And we may add that, considering the great design and object of the institution, viz.: "In remembrance of me," in the touching and tender language of our beloved Master, and St. Paul's further exhortation "to shew the Lord's death till he come," can we not discern and realize the value of this great honor and privilege that has been accorded to us? The First Day of the week commemorates his resurrection. How fit and appropriate on that day to remember also his "great love to us in laying down his life for us." Surely, as his friends and followers, we need no other stimulus to this blissful duty than the faith, hope and love which impels us to its grateful discharge.

2. Whether our Lord partook of the Supper after he arose from the dead is a point as to which the Holy Scriptures are silent, as far as I know and understand. That he met with his apostles and "ate and drank with them after he rose from the dead," is expressly stated by Luke and John and Peter. Acts x. 41.

It is probable, however, from the Sacred Narrative, that this eating and drinking was at an ordinary meal, "bread and broiled fish, and an honeycomb" being mentioned as the articles of food used. Luke xxiv.; John xxi.

One thing, however, is mentioned in these narratives, and with apparent significance, and that is, that it was generally, if not always, on the First Day of the week that he appeared, alive and in person, to his disciples in the forty days' interval between his triumphant resurrection and his ascension to his Father's right hand in heaven.

This fact is entitled to much consideration in determining the day of the week most fit for "the assembling of ourselves together" to keep the ordinances, "steadfastly," as they are enumerated in Acts ii. 42-47, conspicuous among which is the "breaking of bread."

Finally, I venture to suggest as a corollary to the previous reasoning that, as the Lord appeared on this day to his brethren (above five hundred of them at once, as we read in 1 Cor. xv. 6,) when he comes again—"a second time unto salvation"—it will be on the First Day of the week; and it is neither wise nor safe, therefore, to "forsake the assembling of ourselves together" on that day, if we can attend, lest our fate should be that of the "foolish virgins" in Matt. xxv.

The Christian aim is to be perfect. "Be ye therefore perfect." Now distinguish this from mere worldly morality. It is not conformity to a creed that is here required, but aspiration after a state or condition. It is not the demand that we perform a certain number of duties, but that we yield obedience to a certain spiritual law.

It was Dean Swift who said that "it was easy to see what the Lord thought of money, judging by those to whom he gave it." We all know that this is not true as a proposition, yet there are times when we are forced to recall it with a keen sense of its force and meaning. We quote it mentally, and we are naturally a little comforted thereby, when we see arrogance and ignorance, coarseness and prejudice, delicately clad and luxuriously fed, while the finest and noblest natures are too often overwhelmed with petty cares or suffering under numberless privations.

While the English steamer Warrior was off an island in the West Indies, but out of sight of land, a human cry was heard, and the carpenter said he had seen a man struggling in the water. The engines were at once stopped and a boat put off. After a long pull in the direction noted the cry was again heard, and half an hour later a man was discovered and picked up. He proved to be a native of Jamaica named Alexander Hughes, and said he had been three days in the water clinging to a clothes chest. He was one of the crew and passengers of The Little Minnie, which capsized at sea and sank while on her way to Colon. The accident occurred sixty miles from where the man was picked up. He was the only survivor.

POETRY.

To You, Rebecca.

L. M. BURGESS.

If we love the Lord, Rebecca,
What should grieve us?
Ev'ry sorrowing thought
Ought to leave us.
What if sorrows come?
'Tis but a day
'Till beneath His smile
They 'll away.

When His gentle eye, Rebecca,
Ours shall meet,
As in joy we lie
At His feet;
Oh, how faint and far
Will be the cares
That now so weighty are,
They all our prayers.

All will be forgot, Rebecca,
'Neath His smile;
Heaven will shine for us
All the while.
All we've pall at home
For His sake,
Lest His law of love
We should break.

All the multitude, Rebecca,
Of desires
That have filled our souls
With their fires;
All the angry words
We have hushed,
All ungentle thoughts
We have crushed,

All we for His sake, Rebecca,
Have tried to be,
Even though we fail,
He can see!
And I'll abide,
Never leave us,—
If we have Him then,
What should grieve us?

Be it yours then, dear Rebecca,
Be it mine,
That within our hearts
E'er may shine
His abundant love
And His grace,
Blessing us for e'er, Rebecca,
With His peace.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Benevolence vs. Covetousness.

A. CURTIS.

"God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. ix. 7.

Mutual helpfulness is a law of our being. None of us liveth to himself. Rom. xiv. 7. We cannot dissociate ourselves from the needs of humanity. When we recognize the glorious truth of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, (Mal. ii. 10; Acts xvii. 23-29,) our hands will be outstretched in mutual assistance. We will then strive to ameliorate the condition of suffering humanity. The law of mutual dependence should teach us to aid each other in time of need. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Gal. vi. 2. In no other way can we fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Mark xii. 28-31; Rom. xiii. 8-10; Gal. v. 13, 14; James ii. 8. For an answer to the query, "Who is my neighbor?" see Luke x. 25-37.

Generosity, or benevolence, is limited only by individual circumstances and opportunities. It is frequently the case that the benefactions of the charitably disposed flow in a prescribed channel. This is an unwarrantable course to pursue. As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith. Gal. vi. 10; 1 Thess. v. 15. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. James iv. 17. But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 1 John iii. 17. We should honor the Lord with our substance. Prov. iii. 9, 10.

"It is well to insist," says Brother Platt, (in his little work, the "Christian Law of Giving,") "upon the reasonable distinction between legal proprietorship and moral ownership. The man may be the legal proprietor of all that he has in possession, but God is its owner; hence, any demand that he lays upon man's substance is a debt to him, and man can rightfully claim only the use of such portion as may be exempt from his requirements. And even the use of that must be in conformity with the obligations of stewardship which he has laid down." The timely and judicious exercise of the faculty of benevolence, will prove a safeguard against covetousness, which is idolatry. Col. iii. 5. 6. Covetousness is classed as a kindred spirit with evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, ... wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness. W[illegible]. 20-23. Are [illegible] perpetrators of these enormities worthy of death? Rom. i. 29-32; vi. 23. They certainly are unworthy of everlasting life; for that blessed boon is to be sought for, and obtained, by patient continuance in well doing. Acts xiii. 46; Rom. ii. 6, 7.

"Covetousness," together with its vile associates, will exclude many individuals from the future kingdom of honor and blessedness. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Eph. v. 3-5.

Do not suppose that gain is godliness, for it is not. But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. Flee these things. 1 Tim. vi. 5-11. Covet God instead of gold! Remember the poor. Gal. ii. 10; Psa. xli. 1-3; Mark xiv. 7. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker; but he that honoreth him hath mercy on the poor. Prov. xiv. 21, 31; xvii. 5. He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again. Prov. xix. 17; xxviii. 27. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away. Matt. v. 42; Luke vi. 30-38. Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. Luke vi. 38; Mal. iii. 10. Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days. Eccl. xi. 1. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. Prov. xi. 24-28.

The prayer of Agur should be had in remembrance: "Two things have I required of thee; deny me them not before I die; remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me; lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain." Prov. xxx. 7-9.

"Give me the common things of life.
The good and fit of common fare.
The tranquil, middle ground that lies
Between the high and low estates."

Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Eph. iv. 28. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Acts xx. 33-35. We should not trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. 1 Tim. vi. 17. He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want. Prov. xxii. 16.

"If we knew the cares and crosses,
Crowding round our neighbor's way;
If we knew the little losses,
Sorely grievous day by day;
Would we then so often chide him,
For his lack of thrift and gain;
Leaving on his heart a shadow,
Leaving on our lives a stain?"

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. ix. 7. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. James ii. 1-4, 8, 9, 15-26. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me, is the language of the Judge of quick and dead. Matt. xxv. 31-40; Acts x. 42; xvii. 31; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 2. Will a man rob God? Mal. iii. 8-10

In the language of Brother Platt: "These are statutes designed to control Christian life, and in conformity with which that life is an unspeakable blessing to the world, but in antagonism with which that life is spurious, or at least faulty and imperfect." We should not close our ears against the cries of the needy, nor divorce from our minds the duty of practicing benevolence toward them. The meal-barrel and the oil-cruse of the widow woman of Zarephath, (1 Kings xvii. 8-16,) are mute witnesses to the truthfulness of God's word, Give, and it shall be given unto you. Luke vi. 38; Prov. xix. 17.

Penuriousness and generosity cannot long dwell together. Genuine benevolence will, as effectually displace covetousness as water will air. "When the desire for money becomes absorbing, whether in prince or beggar, it is that covetousness that God abhors, and its natural and only antidote is giving, giving, giving—depleting the plethoric desire till its imperiousness is subdued and its clamors are hushed."

"Covetousness is generally marked by two or three peculiar and dangerous features:

"1. It commences long before it is suspected, and usually in the guise of some laudable ambition; for example, to provide for one's own household, to acquire the means that will enable one to be more benevolent, or in some other really commendable way.

"2. Insensibility to its existence increases in the ratio of augmented danger; that is, the more commanding it becomes, the less consciousness of obedience its victim has.

"3. It so perverts the conscience that its victims often, perhaps usually, think themselves right in their course.

"So, that it is difficult to find one whom the world and the church brands as covetous, who does not justify himself in all his penuriousness, honestly believing that he is only doing his duty to himself, yet—'There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.'" Prov. xvi. 25.

"What, then, is this fearful covetousness that must be antagonized? In Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and English alike, it signifies eager, longing desire. Yet its condemnation is not in the fact that it is desire, nor yet in its strength, for we are commanded to 'covet earnestly the best gifts.' On the other hand, it is not in desiring temporal things, for the parable of the talents teaches us that increase of substance is even commanded; but it is in giving to interests of secondary importance the strength of desire that belongs only to spiritual things!"

Beware of covetousness! Luke xii. 13-21; Matt. xiii. 22.

"Is thy cruse of comfort failing?
Rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine
It shall serve thee and thy brother.
Love divine will fill thy storehouse,
Or thy handful still renew;
Scanty fare for one will often
Make a royal feast for two.

"For the heart grows rich in giving;
All its wealth is living grain;
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered fill with gold the plain.
Is thy burden hard and heavy?
Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden,
God will bear both it and thee.

"Numb and weary on the mountains,
Wouldst thou sleep amidst the snow?
Chafe that frozen form beside thee,
And together both shall glow.
Art thou stricken in life's battle?
Many wounded round thee mean;
Lavish on their wounds thy balsams,
And thy balm shall heal thine own.

"Is the heart a well left empty?
None but God its void can fill,
Nothing but a ceaseless fountain
Can its ceaseless longings still.
Is the heart reliving power?
Self-entwined, its strength shake low;
It can only live in loving,
And by serving love will grow."

Fidelity, O.

Our Duty.

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service, Rom. xii. 1.

God is making up a royal priesthood after the order of Melchisedec for the coming ages, and especially the age to come, to which we are invited; and as sacrifices have always been offered by this class of people; and as Jesus our example and great High Priest offered himself, will we be able to participate in those exalted priestly positions without we, ourselves, "offer somewhat" here? I think not.

In the earlier ages of the world sacrifices were offered in the form of certain animals; but the true child of God made personal sacrifices that won for him God's favor and constituted him one of the elect according to the foreknowledge of God. (Heb. xi.) And so in these latter times God foreknows his people by the sacrifices they are willing to make.

There are many sacrifices the child of God is required to make. There are the pleasures of this life—as Moses, "who chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season,"—we are required to forego. As comprehending the same, though rather somewhat more, we have this language: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." Included in these would be such things as party-going, worldly pleasure-seeking of any sort, and any form of extravagant living. I will not attempt to enumerate the many ways in which sacrifices are to be made; we will see them without this.

Our sacrifices will all be rewarded, but the greater they are the more abundantly will we receive. If we were to work and should be oppressed, and yet to promote the cause of Christ, we should continue and use the means, or a portion of them, to that end, sacrificing our own pleasure and comfort; God would abundantly reward us. I believe this would be our duty. We need to make great sacrifices with our property and money. Now, above all other times, we seem to need the means of comfort and increase in knowledge our Millenarian papers afford, and their support depends on the willing contributions of their subscribers. Who will do it? I have scarcely a doubt but that the most of the subscribers to THE RESTITUTION could afford to take two or more copies, (I judge from my own circumstances,) but they will not; therefore it will be meagerly supported by a few who will sacrifice money and comfort for the Master's cause. The time of reward is nigh and if we want the reward offered, we must make the sacrifices. Will the door be closed against us if we are found wanting?

S. H. REEVE.

An Inquirer.

Will some of our learned brethren be so kind as to answer the following questions through THE RESTITUTION?

Who constitutes the church, the bride?

Is it the saints who will be living when the Master comes? or, is it believers of all ages?

If it is the saints of all ages, including the living at the advent of the Savior, is there a different state of holiness, or preparedness necessary in order to be changed to immortality without having died, than having died, to be raised in the likeness of our risen Head?

If the same state of fitness is required now, and ever has been, can we consistantly claim that the same manifestations of Spirit power, as those granted to the Apostles is necessary in these last days in order to make the Bride ready? Or in other words: If we are ready to fall asleep in the Lord, are we not ready to be changed to immortality if the Lord should come?

Are the terms of salvation, faith in and obedience to the Gospel? If not, an anxious inquirer would like to know what they are.

ANXIOUS INQUIRER.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Upon my return from Pennsylvania I was laid aside from labor for some eight weeks by sickness. But I am now able to travel and preach the kingdom of God, and teach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding me—things which I conceive to be essential for people to hear, believe and do in order to develop the character, which exists in embryo, into the likeness of our elder brother, Jesus, the Lifegiver of the body, the congregation of the Lord, of whom he is the head.

I reached my own pleasant home today. Have been absent six Sundays. Spent three Sundays with the congregation in Pleasant Street. Had a free time in discoursing upon advanced truths, to the comfort and enlightenment of the brethren and friends of truth.

Spent one Sunday and the Sabbath in St. Catharine's, very pleasantly and I trust profitably, though we had a few hours of sharp discussion on the inspiration of the prophecy of Daniel.

Spent a few days with the brethren in Norwich. Gave a number of sermons. Had excellent meetings. Ate the memorial supper. Had the honor of immersing Brother Wm. L. Stubbs, one of the editors and proprietors of the Listowel Standard. He is a well informed brother, and on some of the the leading truths is in advance of those of riper growth. He occasionally gives public lectures to the acceptance of the well informed disciples of Jesus. He is worthy of the confidence of all whom he may visit.

Spent a few days with the church at Sweaburg. By request I gave three discourses founded upon Pilate's question, "What is truth?" As usual, a good turnout; a good and joyful time in presenting truth and listening to it.

In these two last places some have decided to be immersed into the saving name of Jesus Christ, upon my return.

Fraternally yours,

SELECTIONS.

The Mazarine Bible.

At a meeting of the Connecticut Historical Society in Hartford, the chief interest gathered about the exhibition of the rarest and most valuable books in the world. Dr. Trumbull brought out the Mazarine Bible, belonging to the collection of the late George Brinley. This is one of the only two copies in America, and there are only six in the world. It was printed in 1455. Two years ago, two copies were sold at auction in London in the same sale, and one printed upon paper brought $14,000, gold; the other, on vellum, brought $20,000, gold. Usually a vellum copy of any work brings four or five times as much as a paper one; but the history of the Mazarine Bible raises the value of the paper copies relatively to those on vellum. Gutenberg printed the first copies in 1455, and those were on paper; in 1460, Faust got possession of the types, and his edition was partly on vellum. These consequently, are not so completely "original."

The Brinley copy is on paper—one of the genuine Gutenberg prints, and is a marvel of the printer's work. Its equal could not be made to-day. The ink, though four hundred years old, and more, is as distinct as ink could be, and the paper is still white and clear. The "register" is perfect, and the appearance of the page surpasses that of the best modern books. The work is printed in Latin, with a number of curious contract symbols in the text, used to space the lines evenly. Three different ways of the letter "S"—broad, moderate wide, and narrow—are examples of the care taken in this respect. This volume was probably bound about a hundred years after printing, and must have been hidden away for centuries in some monastery. The Mazarine Bible was the first book printed with movable type.

The Oldest Obelisk.

Next after the greatest, it may be in order to notice the oldest of the existing obelisks. This is the one close to the modern village of Matareeah, or the site of Heliopolis, in the land of Goshen, near Cairo. A singular perpendicular line of hieroglyphics ornaments each side and records its erection by Osirtasen I., or probably about B. C. 3,000. The inscription, with one slight exception, is the same on all sides. A myriad of wasps' nests now completely obscures the carvings on two of the surfaces. Authorities differ regarding its height, but 68 feet 2 inches is given as the latest measurement by Mariette Bey. Nearly six feet of the length is buried in the accumulation of soil deposited by the Nile; and the stone, even at the surface of the ground, presents sad evidences of the destruction caused by repeated visits of the water. The opposite sides only are equal, the measurements at the base being 6 feet 1 inch and 6 feet 3 inches. Pocock gives 6 feet and 6 feet 4 inches as his finding in the same connection. The southern side of the shaft is the best preserved, while the western is in the worst condition on account of having been sealed to a height of about 15 feet. This obelisk is supposed to have stood at the entrance to the great Temple of the Sun, where Moses studied theology. Remnants of the temenos or inclosure of this sanctuary still remain.

EASTERN ITEMS.

A correspondent at Kuram says an Afghan soldier in the British service was hanged for firing to warn his countrymen of the advance on Peiwar Pass. Eighteen others were sentenced to terms of from seven to fourteen years' penal servitude for desertion.

A correspondent at Kuram says a proclamation of the Ameer of Afghanistan has been discovered, dated November 11. It shows he had declared a holy war against the British.

A fire which broke out Christmas at Hong Kong raged all day yesterday. The loss is very great.

Yakoob Khan, son of the Ameer of Afghanistan, has come into Jellalabad. This is regarded as equivalent to submission to the British.

A dispatch from Cape Town, dated the 10th, says it is stated on good authority that Sir Bartle Frere's communication to the Zulu King demands the disbandment of the Zulu army, the cession of St. Lucia Bay, and the reception of a British Resident. The message had not reached the King at the date of the telegram. War is considered imminent.

A telegram from Tiflis says the Ameer of Afghanistan has arrived at Tashkend.

Arms are being generally distributed throughout Eastern Roumelia, to be used in resisting the execution of the Treaty of Berlin.

The Chinese Envoy has arrived to adjust the difficulties between China and Russia.

Commander-in-Chief Soutzo and Secretary General of the Interior Zunopoulos have been appointed Commissioners to negotiate relative to the Turco-Grecian frontier.

The resolutions in favor of quarantining all vessels now coming into this port from Hong Kong, offered yesterday at a meeting of the Board of Health, are more timely than is generally understood. There is very little doubt, from the tone and language of our latest newspaper files from Japan, that Asiatic cholera exists in an epidemic form at Hong Kong and some other cities of China, and is causing an alarm at Yokohama and Tokio. It will be kept a secret as long as possible, for the reason that as soon as it shall be known, commercial intercourse and local business will suffer. Cholera infection is as dangerous to this city as yellow fever to New Orleans.

BREVITIES.

Not for many years has snow fallen so copiously as during the close of last month on the higher Alps. The passes across Mounts St. Gothard, Bernard and Simplon were closed to travel, and the mails had to be sent by the Mount Cenis tunnel.

An important Nihilist conspiracy has been discovered at St. Petersburg. The Governor of the province of Jenesei had been warned some time past that a rising was to take place. The exiles of Siberia and the gold diggers of Krasnoe were to take possession of the houses in the town and set fire to them. Numerous arrests have been made.

Capt. Roudaire has once more started for the Shotel Jerid, in Algiers, and will report to the French Government on the practicability of filling that depression in the Algerian Sahara with water from the Mediterranean. He is accompanied by Dr. Andre, who will examine into the natural history of the country.

Many interesting finds continue to be made in the lacustrine stations laid bare by the shrinkage of Lake Neuchatel. Among the latest are a complete bronze axe mould and a human skull. Rings, pins, buckles, hatchets, flint implements, and the bones of animals are in great abundance. Human bones, however, are very rarely found from which it is supposed that the tombs of the lake dwellers have not yet been discovered.

There is a strong suspicion in certain circles in England that the Afghanistan war is only the entering wedge towards the opening up of a new and startling policy of British territorial acquisition in the Orient, which will include Palestine and its restoration to the Jews under an English protectorate. This conjecture is based upon the fact that Earl Beaconsfield, the head of the present British Cabinet, is of Jewish proclivities, and in strong sympathy with the undying ambition of the Jewish race for the recovery of the land of their ancient habitation.

When Mr. Henry Drummond, an eccentric but able English member of parliament, and a light of the Irvingite faith, was in Rome, some thirty years ago, he had occasion to refer to the highest authority among the Jesuits on the subject of the Real Presence. The Jesuit told him he must believe that there was no bread present after consecration. Mr. Drummond asked whether if the bread were chemically analyzed the ashes would contain animal and not vegetable products. The father replied that "if such an act of profanation were committed, the holy presence would be withdrawn and the elements would be as they were before."

The Cologne Gazette says that a committee of experts having examined the document known as Luther's will, which is in possession of the Protestant church in Pesth, has declared it authentic. The document found its way, with a number of manuscripts of the learned theologian, John Benedict Carpzoino, to Hungary, and came into the hands of a private collector, a rich proprietor named Jankovics, from whom the Archduchess Maria Dorothea obtained it for 400 golden guilders. She presented it to the Protestant church in Pesth, in whose archives it has since lain, nobody being positively certain that it was authentic. It is henceforth to be deposited in a special case in National Museum at Pesth.

The people of Afghanistan are not given to trade nor to manufacturing. They leave to the Persians, the Arabs and the English all such occupations. They live a free, easy, unsettled life. It is most truly a pastoral country. The inhabitants were divided into tribes and subdivisions; some live in the valleys and others on the plains, and others guard the mountain passes and demand toll from the trading caravans. In appearance they are savages, arming themselves with any weapon, dressing in any clothes, roving from place to place. The cities are usually found settled by the side of some high mountain with a vast and open plain stretching out before them. The houses are generally of mud, low, flat-roofed and plain. Cabul is the city of most importance. It rests nearly at the foot of Baba peak, 8,000 feet above the sea level. From here one may look upon the high, deserted, cold peaks of the Koosh range, while southward extends an open and fertile plain. The Cabul river is picturesquely crossed by three bridges, the one leading westward to Khyber Pass being strictly guarded. The houses of the city are of sun-baked bricks, low and devoid of beauty. There are mosques and bazars, and a citadel in the eastern part contains the Governor's palace. The climate is severe in winter, from October to March, but in summer is delightful.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Lord's restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates a return to the old, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the possession of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the literal destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a beauty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion by a person qualified for the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Diminishing of Israel the Riches of the Gentiles.

The purpose of God to take out of the Gentiles a people for his name is a glorious truth that was never manifested to the sons of men until the present age of the world's history. Though they (the Gentiles) were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, yet it was not manifested unto them until the sound of the glorious Gospel of Christ fell upon their ears in the house of Cornelius, more than eighteen centuries ago. The time was then come for the fulfilment of that prophecy of Isaiah lxv. 1: "I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not." This calling of the Gentiles is called by the apostle Paul, the "mystery of Christ, which, in other ages, was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by by the Spirit, which mystery is, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel." Eph. iii. 4-6. These people taken out of the Gentiles, enter very largely into the composition of what is called by the apostle, "the Church of Christ, which is also called his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." Eph. i. 22, 23. Christ began to build his church out of Israelitish members. From the day of Pentecost until Cornelius, not a single Gentile was added to the church; we read of three thousand being added to the church in one day, and of God adding to the church daily such as shall be saved; but no mention is made of Gentiles until Cornelius is named. Here is where the diminishing of Israel began. Instead of building the church entirely out of Israelites, God chose to use Gentile material, (so to speak,) hence the diminution of Israelitish material. If the Gentiles were not to be built in the church or temple, then for every Gentile in the temple an Israelite would have been taken, for the temple must be built, and God has been pleased to build it out of both Jews and Gentiles. This diminution of Israel made room for the Gentiles and is called their riches. To understand the character of the riches we must understand the high position of the church in the future. The individuals who compose the church are to be made partakers of immortality by being raised from the dead and changed at the coming of Him who is "the first begotten of the dead, the prince of the kings of the earth." Rev. i. 5. They are to bear the image of the Heavenly Man "the last Adam—the Lord from heaven." 1 Cor. xv. 49. Their vile bodies shall be fashioned like unto the glorious body of Him before whom the beloved John fell at his feet as dead when he appeared to him in vision on the Isle of Patmos. Phil. iii. 21; Rev. i. 14-17.

They are also said to be joint heirs with Christ. Rom. viii. 17. What is Christ heir to? "Heir of all things." Heb. i. 2. So then, "he that overcometh shall inherit all things." Rev. xxi. 7. Christ is heir of all things—the church are joint heirs with him. High position! Heirs of all things, heirs of the world. Rom. iv. 1, 2. When the kingdom of God is restored to Israel it is given to the Church; it is given to the church to reign over, and in proof of this read the following in Jer. xxxiii. 25, 26: "Thus saith the Lord: if my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them." Here it is revealed (and it is in harmony with all Bible truths) that the seed of Jacob is going to return from captivity and be ruled by their called the seed of David. "The elder shall serve the younger" will then have its antitypical fulfilment in the kingdom of God. Christ and his many brethren who are joint heirs will be rulers. They will constitute the commonwealth of Israel, the new government that will be established in Jerusalem, and that shall rest upon the shoulder of David's Royal Heir. Isa. ix. 7. They shall be "kings and priests unto God, and shall reign on the earth." In view of the high position of the church in the coming age, is it any wonder the apostle should call it a "high calling"? Phil. iii. 14. And how true are the words, the diminishing of Israel is the "riches of the Gentiles." The unsearchable riches of Christ are offered unto the Gentiles, and whosoever believeth the glad tidings of the coming kingdom of God, and is immersed for the remission of sins, and presses toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, shall be accounted worthy to obtain the world to come and the resurrection from among the dead, and shall be presented faultless before the presence of God's glory with exceeding joy.

An Open Letter to Col. Robert Ingersoll—No. 2.

You next ask: "Does the Bible give women any rights?"

To the above question, and the sarcastic comments which you connected therewith, concerning the freedom of the wife, we have only to quote the language of Paul in Eph. v. 25: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." If the husband exhibits toward the wife that degree of affection that he is willing to lay down his life for the companion of his bosom as Christ did for the church, we believe the wife will not justly feel the yoke of bondage to rest very heavily upon her. Neither will she have reason to complain of the life of suffering she has to live.

You ask; "Does the sacred Book of morality inculcate concubinage?"

Read Numbers xxxi. and Deut. xxi.

"They are not fit for me to read."

Perhaps you had a motive for not reading them. There is not a single intimation in either of those passages teaching concubinage, or that the children of Israel should hold their captives for any such purpose as you name. The Israelites were commanded to preserve none other of their captives but those who were pure. This you will find in the verses 17 and 18 of the chapter of Numbers you quoted. If those captives were to be preserved for the purpose you name, why preserve only those who were pure? Was it that they might become impure? No. God ever looks upon purity and innocence as a virtue; hence the command to preserve only the pure and innocent.

The next passage quoted states the purpose for which they were to be preserved. Num xxi. 11, 12. They were to be retained as servants, or as wives. If as wives, previous formalities were to be observed. The law of God forbids fornication and adultery. "Thou shalt not commit adultery," Ex. xx. 14.

You say: "The Bible teaches witchcraft, and that the dead can be raised by the power of sorcery....I refer to the witch of Endor as proof."

But we deny that the Bible teaches any such thing. The language of another is so to the point that we give it entire. This narrative to which you refer is found in 1 Sam. xxviii. 1: Let us consider the circumstances of the case. First, God had refused to answer Saul by vision, dream, or prophet. Did God at first refuse to answer Saul by prophets and then change his mind and answer by a witch? Second, By consulting the woman with a familiar spirit he transgressed the law of God, and rendered himself obnoxious to the death penalty. It was death for either king or prophet to consult a person with a familiar spirit. Lev. xx. 6. Third, Saul lost his life as a punishment for consulting the witch of Endor. "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit to enquire of it." 1 Chron. x. 13. Would God endorse this transgression of his law by granting Saul's request and then punish him with death for an act to which he was a party? What evidence is there in seeing gods ascending out of the earth to convince the witch that Saul was before her? She knew from the first who he was. Her pretended ignorance was a part of her preconcerted plan. "And the king said unto her, Be not afraid, for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth. And he said unto her, What form is he of?" There is no congruity between the woman's statement and Saul's question. The woman being satisfied that Saul was prepared for a description and personification of Samuel, proceeded. From her description Saul perceived that it was Samuel. There is no evidence that Saul saw anything. It was in the night when he heard the woman's description. He accepted it and prostrated himself upon the ground. The prediction that Saul should be with the prophet Samuel the next day was not true; therefore whoever made the prediction was undoubtedly a false prophet. Read the succeeding day's march of David and his men in the two succeeding chapters before the decisive battle between the Philistines and Israel in which Saul was killed, and you will see that it must have been four or five days, at least, subsequent to consulting the witch of Endor that Saul was killed." So much for this objection to the Bible.

You state that "you never have experienced those gifts which the Bible says a believer shall receive, the casting out of devils, the speaking in new tongues, etc."

Doubtless you refer to the language of Mark xvi. 17, 18. There may be two reasons for your not experiencing those gifts. First, those were gifts bestowed upon believers. Second, those gifts were not intended to reach beyond the days of the apostles, and with them it was true. Acts ii. 1.

Your next statement is, "The Bible teaches that a man may enslave his brother. In other words, it teaches slavery."

But you give no passage as proof. What saith the Word? Lev. xxv. 46, is doubtless one of the passages to which you refer. Although this passage speaks of servants from heathen nations serving the children of Judea forever, yet this "forever" context never reached beyond the fifty years jubilee period. Joel iii. 8, is another passage often quoted to prove the Bible teaches slavery. But if you read the first eight verses you will see it is a judgment of God upon the enemies of his people because they had sold the children of Judah into bondage. They must undergo the same punishment they had meted out to God's people. Does the Bible really teach slavery? "He that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death." Exodus xxi. 16. This is the penalty pronounced by God, which was to be inflicted on those who bartered in human flesh. Although the bitter cry of fathers, mothers and children rises to the God of heaven, saying, "How long, oh, Lord!" and the death sentence in heaven is against the destroyers of human peace for thus acting in open violation of God's law, yet you will dare teach to the world the thought that the Bible teaches slavery, when God has declared therein that those who thus act shall surely be put to death.

"Now we come to the New Testament with its glad tidings of great joy to all people. It is good to get at the facts. Hear what it says of servants: 'Contentment is great gain, especially for slaves.'"

That is not the language of the apostle. But "Godliness with contentment is great gain." 1 Tim. vi. 6. He is here speaking of believers, and not of servants or slaves.

You say, "Abraham was commanded to offer up his son Isaac as a sacrifice, and he pretended he was about to obey; and the boy, being only twenty years of age, was never consulted."

What proof have you that this record of Abraham's faith and fidelity to God was all a pretended farce?

You refer to the account in Judges xi. which speaks of Jeptha's daughter, and ask, "Can a merciful God consent to such a sacrifice?" There is no evidence in the whole account of the vow he made and executed that God directed or approved of it in any way. Was God responsible for Jeptha's rash vow which was a violation of God's law? Deut. xii. 30, 31.

You next speak of the book of Job, saying: "Read the book of Job. His children were destroyed in the end to show how much he gained," etc. That is simply an assertion without proof. Although Job was tried, persecuted, and suffered loss of property and children, he murmured not at God, but exclaimed: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken (permitted to be taken) away! Blessed be the name of the Lord!" If Job, amid all his sorrows, saw no reason for complaint against the God of earth, why need you, away down in the nineteenth century, hundreds of years thereafter, murmur at the afflictions of Job? We think this very far fetched.

A Question Answered—Weekly Communion.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

An intelligent sister in Eastern Virginia writes to request of me a Scriptural solution of certain doubts and difficulties in her mind "as to whether it was intended that the Lord's Supper should be observed weekly, and on the First Day of the week? and whether or not, our Lord partook of it after he arose from the dead?"

She adds, "Any light on the subject will be thankfully received, and, I trust, rightfully applied." As others may share her doubts, it may be well to consider the subject, with your leave, in the columns of THE RESTITUTION.

1. As to the first enquiry,—the First Day weekly communion,—we get some light from the Bible lesson that, as a matter-of-fact, our Lord and his apostles, taught, both by precept and example. In the commission given to the twelve, after he arose from the dead, they were commanded to "teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them (the baptized) to observe (i. e., practice) all things whatsoever, I have commanded you." Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Hence, it is plain the apostles had the Master's authority to teach those they baptized to observe—to keep and obey—the "all things he had commanded them." Among these things, the Supper was one, for he had said to them, "Do this in remembrance of me," and "take, eat; this is my body," etc. Accordingly we read that subsequently they taught their first converts, on Pentecost, in such a way that it is written of them they "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship and in breaking of bread," etc. Acts ii. 42.

Now, so far, the teaching is all by command—by precept. But they likewise taught by example, for Paul taught his Corinthian brethren, 1 Cor. x. 5, 11, that certain acts done by the ancient people of God "were our examples," and "are written for our admonition," etc. And, again, in Philippians iv. 9: "Those things which you have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do," etc.; and, again: "Be ye followers of me, as I am of Christ."

With this testimony before us, who can doubt that apostolic example is as binding on the disciples of Jesus as apostolic precept? and that each is as obligating as if expressly commanded by the Master himself, for did he not say to, and of them, "Whosoever heareth you, heareth me?" "If" true, we may add, that if they, in anything, are found to differ in their teachings—which some shallow reasoners allege but cannot prove—we must, by their own admonitions to us in 1 Tim. vi. 3, always adhere to "the wholesome words of our Lord and to the doctrine, which is according to godliness;" and this precept is not without reason, for the apostles were infallible in their judgment and conduct (as in the contention about circumcision, Acts xv.), but Jesus, our Lord, never erred. Beyond the plain command, "Do this in remembrance of me," our Lord did not instruct his disciples as to the Supper. The time, place and manner of observing it were left to the direction of the apostles, after "they were endued with power from on high," and it is to their teaching and practice, to their precept and example, that we are referred for our imitation and guidance. Without telling us in words how often and when, the feast should be "observed," we are left to find out by recurring to their practice and the example of the churches set in order and superintended by them. From the Sacred Record, we learn, as in Acts ii., that they "continued steadfastly" to attend to this divine ordinance; hence, that it was not an occasional or infrequent occurrance, as it is now with the prevailing religious societies.

In 1 Cor. xi., St. Paul declares particularly, the manner and design of the institution; and Luke, in Acts xx., records the historical fact that the disciples at Troas "came together to break bread on the First Day of the week," and in 1 Cor. xvi. 2, we read the statement that the church at Corinth was to attend to the collection for the saints as he had already "given order to the churches of Galatia on the First Day of the week." Remembering that the day of Pentecost (the fiftieth day after the expiring of seven precious Sabbaths) was also the First Day of the week when the first Jewish converts first broke bread, we have the example of all these churches at Jerusalem, at Troas, in Corinth and in Galatia, to justify and oblige us to meet together on the First (not any first) Day to "keep the ordinances," breaking bread, included, as they were delivered to those who had authority to direct and prescribe our duty in the premises. Hence, we should follow the example and pattern after the manner of these inspired models. And we may add that, considering the great design and object of the institution, viz.: "In remembrance of me," in the touching and tender language of our beloved Master, and St. Paul's further exhortation "to shew the Lord's death till he come," can we not discern and realize the value of this great honor and privilege that has been accorded to us? The First Day of the week commemorates his resurrection. How fit and appropriate on that day to remember also his "great love to us in laying down his life for us." Surely, as his friends and followers, we need no other stimulus to this blissful duty than the faith, hope and love which impels us to its grateful discharge.

2. Whether our Lord partook of the Supper after he arose from the dead is a point as to which the Holy Scriptures are silent, as far as I know and understand. That he met with his apostles and "ate and drank with them after he rose from the dead," is expressly stated by Luke and John and Peter. Acts x. 41.

It is probable, however from the Sacred Narrative, that this eating and drinking was at an ordinary meal, "bread and broiled fish, and an honeycomb" being mentioned as the articles of food used. Luke xxiv.; John xxi.

One thing, however, is mentioned in these narratives, and with apparent significance, and that is, that it was generally, if not always, on the First Day of the week that he appeared, alike and in person, to his disciples in the forty days' interval between his triumphant resurrection and his ascension to his Father's right hand in heaven.

This fact is entitled to much consideration in determining the day of the week most fit for "the assembling of ourselves together" to keep the ordinances, "steadfastly," as they are enumerated in Acts ii. 42-47, conspicuous among which is the "breaking of bread."

Finally, I venture to suggest as a corollary to the previous reasoning that, as the Lord appeared on this day to his brethren (above five hundred of them at once, as we read in 1 Cor. xv. 6,) when he comes again—"a second time unto salvation"—it will be on the First Day of the week; and it is neither wise nor safe, therefore, to "forsake the assembling of ourselves together" on that day, if we can attend, lest our fate should be that of the "foolish virgins" in Matt. xxv.

False happiness renders men stern and proud, and that happiness is never communicated. True happiness renders them kind and sensible, and that happiness is always shared.

The great secret of avoiding disappointment is not to expect too much. Despair follows immediate hope as things fall hardest to the ground that have been nearest to the sky.

The Christian aim is to be perfect. "Be ye therefore perfect." Now distinguish this from mere worldly morality. It is not conformity to a creed that is here required, but aspiration after a state or condition. It is not the demand that we perform a certain number of duties, but that we yield obedience to a certain spiritual law.

It was Dean Swift who said that "it was easy to see what the Lord thought of money, judging by those to whom he gave it." We all know that this is not true as a proposition, yet there are times when we are forced to recall it with a keen sense of its force and meaning. We quote it mentally, and we are naturally a little comforted thereby, when we see arrogance and ignorance, coarseness and prejudice, delicately clad and luxuriously fed, while the finest and noblest natures are too often overwhelmed with petty cares or suffering under numberless privations.

While the English steamer Warrior was off an island in the West Indies, but out of sight of land, a human cry was heard, and the carpenter said he had seen a man struggling in the water. The engines were at once stopped and a boat put off. After a long pull in the direction noted the cry was again heard, and half an hour later a man was discovered and picked up. He proved to be a native of Jamaica named Alexander Hughes, and said he had been three days in the water clinging to a clothes chest. He was one of the crew and passengers of The Little Minnie, which capsized at sea and sank while on her way to Colon. The accident occurred sixty miles from where the man was picked up. He was the only survivor.

THE RESTITUTION

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 1, 1879.

OUR conference has just closed. The present editor has been chosen for the year to come. We know and feel our own incompetency for the position assigned us, and with desponding diffidence enter upon the responsible duties of managing THE RESTITUTION for 1879. Erecting our "Ebenezer," or Stone of Help, as a mile post on the pathway of years, we say—"Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." A more full report hereafter from the secretary.

THE annual conference of the Church of God was held in this city last Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The attendance, except from this immediate vicinity, was not as full as was expected, although the meetings were of great interest to those present. The preaching was by H. V. Reed, D. T. Halstead, J. M. Stephenson and Hugh Barnhill, and a lecture by R. S. Dwiggins. A hopeful feeling prevailed, that the truths dear to the heart of every true believer are taking a firmer hold on the public mind than ever before. There was no business of importance brought before the confrence, and the time was employed in hearing and dispensing the word, and strengthening and confirming each other in the determination to be guided in the discharge of every Christian duty by the spirit of the blessed Master, and to stand up boldly in maintaining and advancing his cause. May these meetings continue to be a blessing to all the patient waiting ones until the times of refreshing shall come.

THE annual meeting of the stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association of Indiana was held in Plymouth, on Monday last, a majority of the stock being represented. The meeting was called to order by R. S. Dwiggins, of Rensselaer, and on motion, D. T. Halstead, of Rensselaer, was chosen chairman, and Robert Rallsback, of Argos, secretary. Reports of officers were called for, but not being ready, it was ordered that they be submitted to a committee consisting of W. D. Thompson, E. K. Barnhill and W. Tuttle, and if found to be correct, certified to the board of directors, and published in THE RESTITUTION. The secretary's report, which was submitted before the close of the meeting, showed the receipts for the current year to be $2,690.01, including disbursements $2,306.52, the excess of disbursements being about equal to the floating indebtedness of the Association at the beginning of the year, which has been paid, and no new indebtedness incurred. It was the intention of the management to keep the expenditures within the receipts during the year, and in that aim they have succeeded. The same policy will be pursued during the coming year; which will be an assurance to all the patrons and friends of the paper that no heavy weight of indebtedness will hang over it at the end of the year. The directors chosen were R. S Dwiggins, Rensselaer; Wm. Rallsback, Argos; I. G. Roberts, Charles Palmer and Platt McDonald, Plymouth. The officers chosen by the directors were: R. S Dwiggins, president; Charles Palmer, vice president; E. K. Barchill, secretary; and S. A. Chaplin, treasurer. S. A. Chaplin was re-elected editor of THE RESTITUTION for the ensuing year. It was ordered that hereafter all reports be made to and including the 15th day of December, of each year, that more time may be given in which to prepare them. A general feeling of hopefulness prevailed for the future of the Association.

The Departed Year.

Another year of the times of the Gentiles, and of the "dispensation of the grace of God" toward the nations, for taking out a people for his name, has gone into that mysterious past where fleeting moments, and measureless cycles, are alike lost in the fathomless abysms of a gone-by eternity.

The past! Stupendous monosyllable! Embracing the infinitudes, and endless reaches of that elapsed duration whose mighty aions have been comprehended and filled by the Ever-living One alone. With the long lost periods when morning stars were born, and with the years beyond the flood, the year 1878 has forever evanished.

Departed year! Like all others it had its days of sunshine and its nights of shadow. In its spring time nature put on the new robes of vegetative life. The bud expanded into the blossom, a living censer exhaling nature's sweetest incense to the exalted Creator. Its summer suns shone as brightly as those that beamed over the innocency of our gleeful childhood. In its sober autumn the foliage was as richly tinted with crimson and gold as it was before time wrote traces of age on our face, or bereavement its record's of sadness on our heart. But the bloom and the foliage are dead, and in their "dust and decay" winter has inwrapped them in its cold white shroud, and the harp of the wild winds wails a funeral dirge over the year's entombed loveliness.

"Rest in thy grave, departed year.
With wither'd joys and sorrows rest;
And I will shed the mourner's tear
Repentant o'er thy frozen breast;
Yes, heap the sods,—it matters not
How deep and dark thy sleep shall be;
Yet grateful memory on thy spot,
And lingering oft shall think of thee."

But it is not time alone that has departed; flowers and foliage are not all that have been blighted in death; many a love-lit eye has been extinguished, and many a love-thrilled heart has stood still, since the luminaries on the dial-plate above commenced measuring the circling periods of the now evanished year. The richly draped casket has been borne into the palace of proud royalty, and the plumed hearse has carried away the princely form to the "house prepared for all living," while the humble coffin and more humble bier have paused at the hut of the lowly, and peasant hands have conveyed the child of poverty to where the "weary are at rest." Truly sang the lyric bard:

"Pallida mors æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas Regumque turres." HOR. CARM. lv. 13, 14.

The smiling faces that beamed with joy and gladness at the last New Year's festive board, have left empty places and vacant chairs; the departed occupants have spoken the last farewell, and broken hearts now weep over the sad recollections of disrupted circles of loves and friendships that will know no future reunions this side the great day. The loved and the lost are now sleeping beneath the mound's mouldering turf, near which affectionate hands have placed the lettered marble to date their exit, and planted the sombre yew or weeping willow to overshadow the dwellings of death.

"The year
Has gone, and with it many a glorious throng
Of fappy dreams. Its mark is on each brow,
Its shadow on each heart. In its swift course
It waved its sceptre o'er the beautiful—
And they are not! It laid its pallid hand
Upon the strong man, and the haughty form
Is fallen, and the flashing eye is dim.
It met the hall of revelry, where thronged
The light and joyous—and the tearful wail
Of stricken ones is heard where erst the song
And reckless shout resounded."

In its coursing flight the wicked have been buried who have come and gone from the place of the holy, unprofited and unsaved. Some that have been regarded as luminaries in the intellectual hemisphere, to guide fallen humanity through the gloom, have set as lurid meteors or baleful stars behind the blackness of darkness forever, and left the betrayed wanderer in the slough of ruin. The pure, the good, and the holy—bright, shining, and heavenly lights placed out in the dark night of time—have gone down to shine no more till they rise to glow in undimmed brightness among the morning stars of creation.

Departed year! The infant has opened its wondering eyes on the mingled mysteries of being, and smiled and wept as the new experiences of joy and sorrow have awakened the latent emotions of a tiny heart. Poor little miniature of man! these momentary raptures may be the infinitesimal foretastes of an eternal weight of glory, or those transient griefs may be only the feeble preintimations of sin-bred sorrows that drown out existence in everlasting perdition.

Departed year! On the temples of age the snows of time have fallen so heavily and so coldly that the frosty chill has congealed the fountains of life at the spring head. Younger generations bedeck the grave of an ancestor whose remembrances were the histories of the long ago, and around whose venerated arm-chair the "marveling childhood" of a third generation had often gathered to list to the strange adventures that happened in the youth-time of those whose graves are unmarked and forgotten.

Departed year! On some souls sin has been painting colorings so deep, and lines so dark, that they have become ineffaceable lineaments—horrible stains, like those of the devil and his angels, never to be purged by sacrifice nor offering, nor whitened by atoning blood; while on some souls the Holy Spirit has been limning the heavenly traceries of a renewed nature till the moral constitution became transfigured into the divine likeness, and the fallen child of earth has become the peer of the unfallen angels that stand around the throne of God. The image of the Son of God has photographed itself on a heart of flesh, and thus immortality and incorruptibility are made the assured boon of the child of dust.

Departed year! While the weeks came and went the church of God has had its joyous assemblings. The word has not fallen ineffectual, nor returned empty and void to the Divine Sender. Sometimes the blest company of believers have gathered by the water's side to witness the symbol burial of some repentant believer in the fluid grave, and to extend the hand of loving fellowship to the newly adopted into the family of the Lord, as the hopeful heir of the new life came up from the hallowed immersion into Christ Jesus, in the likeness of his resurrection. Oftimes around the sacred board, spread with the emblems of dying love, have the tears welled over from hearts softened with sad-toned joy in the remembrance of One whose love was stronger than death, and who, in loving his own, loves them to the end. The ministry have not sounded out the word of the Lord in vain. The impulses of divine truth have aroused the careless to consideration, and the delineations of coming glory have enraptured the fainting heart of wearied pilgrims to patient endurance in prospect of the fadeless crown.

Departed year! A mysterious premonition of coming events, like that inexpressible something that pervades nature before the coming earthquake, and that so strangely disturbs the quietude of the grazing herds, and even alarms the feathered tribes, has impelled the watchmen on denominational walls to sound out an alarm of swiftly approaching doom. The solemn assembly of gathered elders have read the handwriting on the wall, and sent its interpretation through the length and breadth of the land to advertise a slumbering church, and a world locked in deeper sleep, of an impending crisis that will revolutionize empires, overturn all worldly thrones, usher in the day of God, and establish a divine monarchy upon earth that shall endure forevermore.

Departed year! A change has come over Immanuel's land. The way is being prepared for the tribes of the fainting heart, and wearied foot to return to the loved fatherland. The nation homeless in all climes but one are beginning to turn their anxious gaze toward the sanctuary soil of the Lord's own heritage. The scattered outcasts will soon leave their dispersions among all nations to the very ends of the earth, to return to the land of prophecy, poetry, and song, and Jerusalem, the city of the Great King, will soon become a name and a praise among all the nations of the world. To loved Palestine, the land of miracle and vision, will Shiloh soon come, and to him shall the gathering of the people be.

Departed year! The pestilence has walked in darkness, and the destruction has wasted at noonday. Famine has transported millions to the domains of the King of terrors. The empire of death has been populated from the sunny South, from the luxuriant tropics, from the land of dates, and from the flowery empire of the far distant east. The silent cities have enlarged their borders, and death now reigns triumphant over the fallen multitudes.

Departed year! It is gone with all its privileges and opportunities, and we bid it farewell. Its glad gatherings and its festivities; and its exhibitions of sorrow and mournful separations are alike in the past. Many have forfeited the last opportunity of winning the fadeless crown, and others have died assured of the diadem of glory in the morning of the resurrection. Our onward pathway leads through the solemnities of the last days. The prophetic periods are terminating, the rapture of the saints is imminent, the clouds of the coming tempest darken the heavens, the great tribulation impends, and the gospel day is at the sunset. During the last hours of the last night we trim anew our lamps to watch. May we all, dear readers, meet on the sorrowless shore in the summer lands of God's kingdom. Departed year, farewell.

"Pale death with equal foot strikes wide the door
Of royal halls and hovels of the poor.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Was Judas at the Lord's Supper.

BY "PHILOS."

I desire briefly to express my utter astonishment at the hasty and various conclusions to which some of our brethren come on some of the most plainly revealed topics of Bible revelation. For instance, in THE RESTITUTION of December 11, referring to an article in THE RESTITUTION of November 13, upon the institution of the communion, in which the writer said that "By a careful comparison of the four records we conclude that the unfaithful Judas, the betrayer, was not there," Brother M. remarks: "The conclusion that Judas was not present at the memorial supper seems to be drawn from the fact of his going out as recorded by John xiii. 30. But his going out after eating the passover is no evidence that he might not have returned in time to eat the memorial supper."

Now let me briefly, and in all kindness, say to Brother M., that in this he makes an admission which neither John nor any one of the other New Testament writers testifies to.

But again, Brother M. says: "If what is recorded by John were all the information we could get to determine whether Judas was at the supper, we might halt between two opinions, not knowing which was correct."

Very truly so, Brother M., for John is as silent as death on the subject of the Savior eating the passover with his disciples, or of the institution of the communion. He does not utter a single word about either, except incidentally referring to the passover as being yet in the future, even after Judas had received the sop from the Savior's hand. See John xiii. 27-29. The other three evangelists are perfectly agreed in giving their united testimony in stating that the twelve were present at the celebration of the passover, and not one of them says anything about Judas or any one else interrupting or going out between the eating of the passover and the introduction of the Savior's memorial. Matthew makes the interval so short between the two that it seems to me there was no opportunity for any one to have gone out in the time, in that he says: "And as they were eating (Eating what? The passover, most assuredly.) Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body." But Luke puts on the cap sheaf, in giving the narrative of the Savior's memorial, as he says, toward the winding up of the scene, that Jesus said: "This cup is the New Testament in my blood which is shed for you. But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." Luke xxii. 20, 21.

Now, will any one dare to invalidate this testimony, without first impeaching the witness? I am truly astounded at any one making the attempt.

Having made the statement that John makes no mention of the Savior eating the passover with his disciples, or of the introduction of the communion, I feel myself called upon by those who confound the supper recorded in John xiii. with the passover recorded in Matt. xxvi., Mark xiv., Luke xxii., to here introduce the testimony concerning that meal.

But I will first make the statement that that supper was nothing more than just a common meal, was not eaten in the city of Jerusalem where the passover was to be celebrated, but was eaten in the town of Bethany, and two days before the feast of the passover. So, now then, for the testimony.

John xiii. 30: "He then, having received the sop, went out immediately."

Now, so far as I have learned, I have never found a dissenting voice, but all are agreed that Judas then went out to make a contract with the chief priests to betray Jesus unto them according to their wishes. But at what point of time did he do this? Surely not before he took it into his mind to do so. Hence John says, "After the sop Satan entered into him, when he then went immediately out. But at what point of time did Satan thus enter into him?

Luke xxii. 1-3: "Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the passover." Then it was not in the past, nor yet present, when it was only drawing nigh.

"And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people. Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, one of the twelve; and he went his way and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them." But how long before the feast of the passover was it that those things took place? Let Mark and Matthew answer.

Mark xiv. 1-3: "After two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread; and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people. And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box and poured it on his head."

Mark xiv. 9: "Verily I say unto you, wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world this also that she hath done shall be spoken of, for a memorial of her. And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests to betray him unto them."

Matt. xxvi. 2-4: "Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of Man is betrayed to be crucified; then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas, and consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty and kill him."

Matt. xxvi. 14, 15: Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests and said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver."

Matt. xxvi. 16: "And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him."

But the time for seeking that opportunity would have been short indeed if all the time allotted to that purpose were only the time that elapsed between the eating of the passover and the introduction of the communion.

From the foregoing combined testimony of the four evangelists it will be readily seen not only that Judas was present at the communion memorial, but also—

1. That two days prior to that event Satan entered into Judas, as Luke expresses it, or as John says, the devil put it into his heart to betray his Lord.

2. That he then went directly to the chief priests and captains, and made a contract with them to betray Jesus unto them.

3. From that time forth he sought for an opportunity to carry out his design, which he did two days later.

4. We see that the supper recorded in John xiii., when Jesus washed his disciples' feet, was not the passover, but simply a common meal eaten at the house of Simon the leper, in the town of Bethany, from which point Judas, after receiving the sop from the Savior's hand, went unto the chief priests to make a bargain with them to betray his Lord unto them. This was two days before the passover, at the conclusion of which Jesus instituted the communion memorial.

Hence it must be seen by every close observer that there was no connection whatever between the Savior's washing his disciples' feet and the communion. A hint to the wise is, or ought to, be sufficient.

The foregoing is confidently submitted in behalf of the truth.

SELECTIONS.

The Lost Tribes of Israel.

It is strange, if true, that the Hebrew Premier of England is going to war with the Afghans in fighting against his own race. There is strong evidence that in the Afghan nation we have the ten lost tribes. "The Afghans" says Mr. Bellew, in his "Journal of a Political Mission to Afghanistan in 1857," "consider themselves a distinct race and style themselves 'Bani Israil,' and trace their descent in a direct line from Saul the Benjamite, King of Israel. They can adduce, however, no authentic evidence in support of their claim to so honorable a lineage. All their records on this subject—and they are mostly traditionary and handed down orally from generation to generation—are extremely vague and incongruous, and abound in fabulous and distorted accounts (as compared with Scripture history) of the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt under 'Musa' or Moses, of the Ark of the Covenant, which they call 'Tabut i Sakina,' of their wars with the 'Filistin,' 'Amalika,' 'Anak,' &c. These accounts, moreover, are so mixed up with Mohammedan doctrines as at first sight to give the whole an appearance of fiction. But this fact alone is insufficient, in the absence of other and evident proof of a negative nature, to condemn or detract from the justice of their claim to so distinguished an origin. It is natural that a race such as the Jews, who still adhere to their ancient religion in all its integrity, should be proud of their high ancestry, although on this account they are the reviled and oppressed of the nation among whom they dwell. But it is not natural that a nation like the Afghans should claim a common descent with them, unless really from the same source, seeing they have apostatized from their ancient religion, as is proved by their own traditional records as well as by several peculiarities of religious observance, all of Jewish origin. Besides, what, I may ask, do the Afghans gain by claiming a common descent with the Jews, whom they despise and detest as the worst heretics and infidels, their very name being a common term of abuse among them?"

In one of Sir William Jones' works also is a passage on this subject which is interesting:—"We learn from Esdras that the ten tribes, after a wandering journey, came to a country called Arsareth, where, we may suppose, they settled. Now the Afghans are said by the best Persian historians to be descended from the Jews. They have traditions among themselves of such a descent, and it is even asserted that their families are distinguished by the names of Jewish tribes, although since their conversion to Islam they studiously conceal their origin. The Push to language, of which I have seen a dictionary, has a manifest resemblance to the Chaldaic, and a considerable district under their dominion is called Hazareh or Hazarat, which might easily have been changed into the word used by Ezdras." Benjamin Disraeli setting his imperial mistress' troops in motion against the descendants of Saul, the Benjamite, King of Israel! Here is the irony of fate, and no mistake!

A Chance for Dr. Cummings.

The Evangelist is disposed to think that the pressure of events affords a fair warrant to students of the Apocalypse for doing a little in the way of interpretation, and it says:

The students of prophecy, who have been wont to ponder over what is said in the Book of Revelation of the Beast and the False prophet, will be likely to find much to confirm their interpretations and predictions in the present state of the Pope and the Sultan—one dead, and the other reduced by the fate of war to the lowest point of humiliation. We do not presume to be wise in the matters of prophecy, or to read the signs of coming events on the sky; but we do recognize the fact that history is now being made very fast; we see the hand of the Great Ruler of Nations in what is passing before our eyes, and turn eagerly, and yet with hushed awe and wonder, towards the East, looking to see the curtain rise on the Future.

Crackers and Cheese.

The Star in the West thus refers to a recent controversy in which the pastor of the Church of Christian Endeavor was concerned:

Dr. John Hall does not favor Church entertainments, and says it is no more the business of a church to furnish amusements than it is to keep a grocery. But Dr. Eggleston replies to this, that if his young men could only be saved by his keeping a grocery he would open a dry grocery at once. This reminds us of the Scotch divine who said, that the reason why he attached himself to the church of his mother, rather than to that of his father, was because his mother always carried a pocket full of crackers and cheese with her to the kirk to eat between the services. Dr. Eggleston is undoubtedly correct. Let him open the grocery by all means. We vote for the crackers and cheese.

The Fear of Hell.

The Journal, an organ of the Society of Friends, thus refers to the weakness of the fear of spiritual punishment as a deterrent form of vice:

The fear of eternal punishment has never deterred men from sin. It is a curious fact that since the first settlement of this country, but one wilful and deliberate murder, that of Dr. Parkman, by Professor Webster, has been committed by a man who did not believe in eternal punishment; the thousands of others have been the deeds of men who were the firm believers in the dogma. All the horrors of the first French Revolution were committed by men brought up within the pale of the Roman Catholic Church, which insists most strongly upon the certainty of eternal punishment.

The Bible and the Labor Problem.

The Christian Union summarizes as follows the light thrown by the Hebrew Scriptures upon a pressing social problem.

The brotherhood of man; the rights of the individual; political equality; a large number of small land-owners; discouragement of the credit system; compulsory labor for dishonest poor, and considerate compassion for the honest and the worthy—these are the lights the Hebraic constitutions throw on the labor problem. They are worthy of more careful study than has been given to them by either legislator or moralist.

Cholera, famine and fever seem likely to nearly depopulate Morocco. At a small village near Alcazar thirty-six out of thirty-seven of the population have died. At Casa Blanca 1,380 deaths occurred in thirty-seven days. In the city of Morocco hundreds have died. In many places the epidemic still prevails, and the suffering caused is very great. The misery of Tangier, resulting from the stoppage of business, is on the increase. The only communication with the outside world is by way of Gibraltar, from which supplies, when obtainable, are received only twice each month. Their only hope is that help may be received from abroad.

POETRY.

Watching for the Master.

BONAR.

Long has the world, the Master's rule disowning,
Hating his presence and his holy sway,
Cried,—"Where is now the promise of his coming,
And where the signs of the long-promised day?"

But still above the scoff, and taunt and laughter,
The still small voice ariseth "watch and pray;"
And still farthest the hours of lonely waiting,
"Behold, I come," I hear the Master say.

It may be that the night will yet grow darker,
It may be that the storm is yet not spent;
It may be that the times will wax more evil,
Earth braving heaven and scorning to repent.

It may be that the church's eye shall wear,
That hope, so long deferred, at last shall faint,
That dark delay the buoyant heart may sadden,
And shake the faith of many a weary saint.

Still as we hear the Master's daily saying—
"Behold, I come; awake, arise, prepare!
For but a little then there sounds the summons
Ascend, my saints, to meet me in the air!"

Then end at once our weary days of watching;
Cometh the vision and the vernal day,
Cometh the Master to his waiting household:
"It is sunlight bursts, the shadows flee away).

Error and darkness hide their heads forever,
Truth, life and righteousness make up our morn;
Earth rises up in holier splendor
Than when at first in perfect beauty born.

Were Miracles Perpetual or Limited in their Design?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

If, as was proven in our former article, the apostolic commission and the miracles, or signs confirming it, having fulfilled their design, ceased,—then the following questions may be asked:

1. By what authority do you preach or baptize? I answer, the authority vested in the church of Christ to select from among them a man who is apt to teach and with sound doctrine to stop the mouths of gainsayers. The apostles left a fallible church to prove the qualifications. Paul says: "This is a true saying if a man desire the office of a bishop, (the qualifications being 'to hold fast the faithful word,' or holding forth the word faithfully .... that he may be able by sound doctrine . . to convince the gainsayers) he desireth a good work." 1 Tim. iii. 1; Tit. i. 9. Deacons were also to be tried or proved by their brethren, not whether they could speak with tongues or work miracles, but whether their conduct was good, and especially whether they were apt to teach. That which was a good work then, is a good work now. The only tribunal the apostles left by which brethren desiring the office of elders or deacons, were to be proved, was their brethren, and if these applicants should convince their brethren that they had the requisite character and qualifications (among which no miraculous power is mentioned), these brethren were to permit them to use the office of elders or deacons.

Thus, the Apostle Paul having named the only qualifications required to authorize brethren who might desire to preach or teach, says: "And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon." 1 Tim. iii. 10. A great persecution arose against the church at Jerusalem, "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." Acts viii. 4. There was evidently no formal council of apostles authorizing these thousands of gospel preachers to preach the word. Their commission came from Saul of Tarsus, in the form of bonds, imprisonment and death. Acts ix. 1, 2. They fled from their cruel and relentless persecutors without a formal commission, and yet all were qualified to preach the gospel.

Paul names the qualifications necessary to teach and to baptize. He said to Timothy: "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." 2 Tim. ii. 2. Having heard and believed these things, I teach them to others. The authority to teach and to baptize stands or falls together.

Surely no one will reason so illogically as to argue that the authority of a legate, or an agent of government, to make, or enforce law, and that of an unofficial teacher of law, or the pupils thus taught, involve the same authority? As well might it be urged that the humble school teacher who explains to his pupils the meaning of the words in the constitution of these United States, must be clothed with all the authority of the legates of the colonies who were delegated with authority to make that constitution. It is only necessary for subjects to understand the law of the land and obey, to reap all the blessings promised loyal subjects. None except the apostles since the ascension of Christ, have been authorized to make or enforce law, except by appeals to the rich rewards promised, as an inducement for men and women to voluntarily comply with the conditions of salvation. It matters not through what instrumentality a man may learn the conditions of salvation if he shall believe and obey the gospel, and continue faithful, he will be saved. If the meanest man on earth preaches the gospel and another man believes the gospel thus preached, and this man baptizes him, he will be saved. No man to-day can trace an unbroken chain of administrators any further back than the Church of Rome.

There is not an example on record of a man being baptized ever because the administrator was a wicked man. The defect was in the faith of the twelve disciples of John, not in any invalidity in their first baptism. Acts xix. 4, 5. The man who first preached the gospel of the kingdom at Buchanan, Michigan, and baptized quite a number of believers, was at that time, and had been previously, a very wicked man. The principle remains unchanged whether that man had a gospel baptism or not, for an apostate is worse than any other kind of sinners. Were the baptisms valid? Of course every believer will apply to a Christian to administer the ordinance of baptism if there are any such available. I believe that an elder or deacon of a church in gospel order should officiate in this ordinance as well as the Lord's Supper.

In all the references to the ordinance of baptism in the New Testament, since the apostolic commission, the ones to be baptized are placed in the objective case, except the eunuch, and the few whom Paul baptized; and he denies having been sent to baptize, lest it should be said that he baptized in his own name. But there were always others present to administer this ordinance. In the former dispensation baptisms were administered by the persons themselves, and not by a second party. There is no record of one of the eleven who were commanded to teach and to baptize, having personally baptized a single disciple. The Greek participle, baptizo, is in the passive voice. As the legates of Christ it was only necessary that they should cause those who should believe their preaching to be baptized, or, rather to command them to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ without naming the administrators. The commandment to repent and be baptized rests upon the same authority, by whomsoever administered.

In the foregoing language of Peter, repentance and baptism rest (1) upon the same authority; (2), if any authority, except that of this legate of Christ, is necessary now, then more than apostolic authority was necessary then. But (3) no additional authority was necessary then; therefore no additional authority is necessary now.

The same argument which demands apostolic authority to-day to validate baptism will demand the same authority and evidence to validate faith and repentance. Repentance and baptism were joined together and enforced by the same authority. Acts ii. 38. These two duties, therefore, stand or fall with the authority vested in Peter, whether the commandment comes to us in a verbal or written form—whether we read it for ourselves or hear it read by others, it is either binding by virtue of the authority of Christ and his chosen legate, or no power in the world can vitalize an obsolete and dead law. The same is true of all the commandments of Christ; they stand or fall with the authority of Christ which he conferred upon his apostles. He told them that all authority was vested in him, and he therefore, or for this reason, commanded them to go and make disciples, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them Matt. xxviii. 20. Thus, not only the command to repent and be baptized stands or falls with the authority vested in the apostles, whether uttered orally or read in the written constitution; but all his commandments from the least to the greatest of them stand upon the original authority of the Supreme Law-Giver, whose legates were Christ and his apostles.

The same skepticism, therefore, which demands the re-investment of divine authority and apostolic evidence to confirm that authority, would, if it were carried to its legitimate sequence, dethrone the Supreme Judge, render null and void the intercession of Christ for the transgression of that constitution for whose ratification he shed his precious blood, thus leaving an interregnum of eighteen hundred years with no Savior, no salvation, no divine law, no God except the God of this world, no Christ except with the prefix "Anti," no church of God, no hope!

There is no half way ground on this question. Either the authority and evidence of the word are all sufficient without any additional evidence, confirmation or emendation, or it fails to vindicate its high claims to infallibility, and is, therefore, unworthy of God as its author and man as its object. A man's note that needs additional signatures or securities every day to prevent a panic among his creditors, is not worth the paper upon which it is written. The followers of Brahma Buddha and Confucius believe without a doubt, and render implicit obedience to all their commandments without demanding any additional evidence to establish upon a firmer base the authority of these Gods, or legates of the Gods. All the constitutions in the world devolve responsibility upon those amenable thereto, to understand and obey by virtue of the foreordained authority with which their original founders were invested. The constitution of Christ is not an exception to this rule. His authority and that of his apostles remain intact in their defacto constitution. Let me ask those who demand demonstration to-day, by what authority do you observe the Lord's Supper, or repent, or baptize, or claim the promised remission of sins?

If, according to the irresistible conclusion growing out of your premise, that the same authority, founded upon the same miraculous evidence is necessary to the existence of the church of Christ, then do not shrink from the necessary sequence that there have been no Christians and that Christ has had no church since the cessation of these miraculous evidences, which was more than eighteen hundred years ago. This premise being false, if they reason logically, they must reach a false conclusion. This premise demands an unbroken succession of apostles, or legates invested with the same authority and confirming this high claim with the same signs and wonders and divers miracles. Why not affirm, as some do, that the whole plan of salvation is Israelitish, and therefore, Gentiles are left out in the cold?

The law of the land holds all sane men responsible to become acquainted with its demands, and to acknowledge the authority of its founders and to be under implicit obedience or suffer its penalty. The constitution of these United States is just as binding now upon every citizen as though the legates, who enacted it, had been followed by an unbroken succession of legates to the present time. Their mission having accomplished its design, ceased,—ran out by limitation,—but the constitution still continues with all its original authority, and will continue intact until the same authority that enacted it shall repeal it. It is the aggregate of all the authority with which the delegates who made it were invested; it therefore, by its inherent authority, devolves responsibility upon every loyal citizen who acknowledges its authority, to obey its statute requirements without omnipresent officers at every man's elbow to enforce its laws or thunder its penalties. Just so with reference to the great constitution of God—it was enacted by his appointed legates, and is therefore, invested with all the authority of its Almighty Author. It is the personification of the authority of God, the embodiment of his revealed will; it therefore, is clothed with supreme authority to enforce obedience by all the authority of its Great Author, and to hold all who understand its precepts, amenable to a future reckoning when they shall be rewarded or punished according to their loyalty or disloyalty. It will be no excuse in that day to say that you did not witness the stupendous miracles with which the authority of his chosen legates was confirmed. He will respond, you knew your duty and did it not.

We have the same word Christ and his apostles preached, and a faithful record of the miracles they wrought; thus we have all that those had who heard their preaching and saw the miracles they worked—only they walked by sight and we walk by faith. Nothing but skepticism will demand additional evidence. For God to give additional evidence would be an acknowledgment that those to whom Christ and his apostles preached did not have sufficient evidence to justify or condemn them. Christ never worked a miracle to confirm a single truth in the Old Testament Scriptures. Their evidences were complete as far as the faith God required of them was concerned. Christ stamped their evidences with perfection when he represented Abraham as saying, they (the ten tribes) have Moses and the prophets, if they will not hear them they would not believe though one should rise from the dead. We may say to any to-day who demand additional evidences: ye have Christ and his apostles, if ye will not hear them, ye would not believe though Christ should come down from heaven, or his apostles up from the grave.

Did the End Come, Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 20, During the Lives of the Apostles?

J. B. COOK.

This seems asserted, argued, and rattled speculatively, as if it could have been certainly so! I refer to THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 18.

But as the subject seems primal and fundamental, allow me to ask a few questions, with all due courtesy, for the truth's sake—only for the truth's sake—and to avoid the responsibility of silence. For the flock is looking to its paper for instruction on all such subjects. Note briefly

I. Did John the Baptist's mission embrace "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God"? Mark i. 1. Nay, more, Did John's ministry introduce Jesus, "As it is written in the prophets"? Isa. xl. 6; Mal. iii. 1; Mat. xi. 10. Here are three witnesses.

To what age does the Lord Jesus and his apostles belong, if not to the Christian or gospel age? Surely, they cannot supplement the feet and toes, as it were, of the then withering, dying Jewish nationality! or shall we imagine a special nondescript-nowhere-period, from the birth of Christ to the death of the apostle John?

II. Can the head of the body, the church, be severed from its chest and members, and not assassinate the whole?

IV. Are not the ministry and miracles of Christ our inheritance of heavenly wisdom, and ours for the confirmation of our faith, and our encouragement in gospel labor?

V. The Great Intercessor said: "I pray for them (the twelve) and also for them who shall believe on me through their word." John xvii. 9-21. Is the Spirit denied to believers? 1 John iii. 24; iv. 13. Does Christ dwell in us by faith? Eph. iii. 14-17. Do believers receive the Spirit by the hearing of faith? Gal iii. 2. Who are "we" and "us" with Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 49-57; and the beloved disciple, 1 John iii. 1-3? "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed"! When? "At the last trump," and the resurrection. Does it not follow, then, that the gospel age reaches from the first advent—like the Lord's supper service—to the second coming and kingdom? Amen.

Speculation to the winds! It is marvelous that gifted men should indulge it to the extent of moral suicide to that "body, the fulness of him who filleth all in all." Eph. i. 3-23; iv. 11-13; v. 32.

These remarks apply, not to any one personally, but to what seems to me a ruinous mistake. Individuals and whole classes have held the central error in this terrible mistake; but to us, as an instructed people, it seems an utter oversight of all cardinal truth embraced in the premises. It loosens the screws and unsettles almost all parts of gospel truth.

No one among us, who is awake to the dispensational calling of the Gentiles—the dispensational gift of the spirit (alone forever, and of gospel ministry to "edify the body of Christ—the fulness of "the new—the perfect man") would designedly alter it, much less make its realization impossible, as that error does. See Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Luke xxiv. 47; John xiv. 16; xv. 7-11; Acts xv. 14-18; 1 Cor. xii. 3, 13; Eph. iv. 11-13; 1 John iii. 1-3.

Jesus and the apostles, as such, have no successors. We have them in their teachings. We believe on Christ "through their words." We have "the gifts of the self-same spirit" for pastors and teachers to "the end of this present evil world, (or age)." It is only this age and that which is to come. Matt. xii. 32. Or am I bedazzled or insane in teaching that we are yet in the gospel age? No, no; indeed I am not. Every child should know that there can be no second "end" till there shall have been a second "beginning of the gospel." Mark i. 1-14; Matt. i. to iv.; Luke i. to iv.; John i; Acts xiv. 1-8.

What then shall we do with the end of the Jewish age? I answer, let that matter stand just where the wisdom of God has left it. Matt. xxiii. 37-39, etc.

It is worse than vain to assume to be "wise above what is written." God's ways are high as heaven above us. Isa. lv. 8-10. Hence, he says: "Be still and know that I am God."

In charity to all, and in reverence for the word, which God has "magnified above all his name," I am among those who yet await "the end,"—the crowning consummation of the gospel of Christ (and his apostles) at his coming "again the second time." Amen.

Abdin Palace, the Winter residence of the Khedive, of Egypt was half destroyed by fire yesterday.

Is it Probable?

Yes, more than that; it is certain that the nations will dare to make war upon the Lamb.

I have read the history of Pharaoh—how after those terrible judgments on Egypt he prepared his men of war, and chariots, and pursued the Hebrews even into the Red Sea, with that terrible cloud of darkness and fire between them, and perished in their madness.

The Scriptures abound with these war scenes at the end of this age. Read the following with their connections:

Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations. Zech.

Who is this that cometh from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah? Isa.

And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse, and he that sat upon him is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. Rev.

Also the second Psalm: And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more. Amen.

C. BOARDMAN.

We should select our friends with great caution, for it is they who determine our own character; others look for us in them. It is giving to the public our own portrait and an avowal of what we are. Therefore let us be cautious in the selection of our friends.

POETRY.

To You, Rebecca.

L. M. BURGESS.

If we love the Lord, Rebecca,
What should grieve us?
Ev'ry sorrowing thought
Ought to leave us.
What if sorrows come?
'Tis but a day
Till beneath His smile
They 'll away.

When His gentle eye, Rebecca,
Ours shall meet,
As in joy we lie
At His feet;
Oh, how faint and far
Will be the cares
That now so weighty are,
They fill our prayers.

All will be forgot, Rebecca,
'Neath His smile;
Heaven will shine for us
All the while.
All we've patient borne
For His sake,
Lest His law of love
We should break.

All the multitude, Rebecca,
Of desires
That have filled our souls
With their fires;
All the angry words
We have hushed,
All ungentle thoughts
We have crushed,

All we for His sake, Rebecca,
Have tried to be,
Even though we fail,
He can see!
And He will abide,
Never leave us,—
If we have Him then,
What should grieve us?

Be it yours then, dear Rebecca,
Be it mine,
That within our hearts
E'er may shine
His abundant love
And His grace,
Blessing us for ev'r, Rebecca,
With His peace.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Benevolence vs. Covetousness.

A. CURTIS.

"God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. ix. 7.

Mutual helpfulness is a law of our being. None of us liveth to himself. Rom. xiv. 7. We cannot dissociate ourselves from the needs of humanity. When we recognize the glorious truth of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, (Mal. ii. 10; Acts xvii. 26-29,) our hands will be outstretched in mutual assistance. We will then strive to ameliorate the condition of suffering humanity. The law of mutual dependence should teach us to aid each other in time of need. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Gal. vi. 2. In no other way can we fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Mark xii. 28-31; Rom. xiii. 8-10; Gal. v. 13, 14; James ii. 8. For an answer to the query, "Who is my neighbor?" see Luke x. 25-37.

Generosity, or benevolence, is limited only by individual circumstances and opportunities. It is frequently the case that the benefactions of the charitably disposed flow in a prescribed channel. This is an unwarrantable course to pursue. As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith. Gal. vi. 10; 1 Thess. v. 15. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. James iv. 17. But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 1 John iii. 17. We should honor the Lord with our substance. Prov. iii. 9, 10.

"It is well to insist," says Brother Platt, (in his little work, the "Christian Law of Giving,") "upon the reasonable distinction between legal proprietorship and moral ownership. The man may be the legal proprietor of all that he has in possession, but God is its owner; hence, any demand that he lays upon man's substance is a debt to him, and man can rightfully claim only the use of such portion as may be exempt from his requirements. And even the use of that must be in conformity with the obligations of stewardship which he has laid down." The timely and judicious exercise of the faculty of benevolence, will prove a safeguard against covetousness, which is idolatry. Col. iii. 5, 6. Covetousness is classed as a kindred spirit with evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, ... wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness. Mark vii. 20-23: Are not the perpetrators of these enormities worthy of death? Rom. i. 29-32; vi. 23. They certainly are unworthy of everlasting life; for that blessed boon is to be sought for, and obtained, by patient continuance in well doing. Acts xiii. 43; Rom. ii. 6, 7.

"Covetousness," together with its vile associates, will exclude many individuals from the future kingdom of honor and blessedness. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Eph. v. 3-5.

Do not suppose that gain is godliness, for it is not. But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. Flee these things. 1 Tim. vi. 5-11. Covet God instead of gold! Remember the poor. Gal. ii. 10; Psa. xli. 1-3; Mark xiv. 7. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker; but he that honoreth him hath mercy on the poor. Prov. xiv. 21, 31; xvii. 5. He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again. Prov. xix. 17; xxviii. 27. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away. Matt. v. 42; Luke vi. 30-38. Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. Luke vi. 38; Mal. iii. 10. Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days. Eccl. xi. 1. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. Prov. xi. 24-28.

The prayer of Agur should be had in remembrance: "Two things have I required of thee; deny me them not before I die; remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me; lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain." Prov. xxx. 7-9.

"Give me the common things of life,
The good and ill of common fates,
The tranquil, middle ground that lies
Between the high and low estates."

Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Eph. iv. 28. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Acts xx. 33-35. We should not trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. 1 Tim. vi. 17. He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want. Prov. xxii. 16.

"If we knew the cares and crosses,
Crowding round our neighbor's way;
If we knew the little losses,
Sorely grievous day by day;
Would we then so often chide him,
For his lack of thrift and gain;
Leaving on his heart a shadow,
Leaving on our lives a stain?"

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. vii. 8. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. James ii. 1-4, 8, 9, 15-20. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me, is the language of the Judge of quick and dead. Matt. xxv. 31-40; Acts x. 42; xvii. 31; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 2 Will a man rob God? Mal. iii. 8-10.

In the language of Brother Platt: "These are statutes designed to control Christian life, and in conformity with which that life is an unspeakable blessing to the world, but in antagonism with which that life is spurious, or at least faulty and imperfect." We should not close our ears against the cries of the needy, nor divorce from our minds the duty of practicing benevolence toward them. The meal-barrel and the oil-cruse of the widow woman of Zarephath, (1 Kings xvii. 8-16,) are mute witnesses to the truthfulness of God's word, Give, and it shall be given unto you. Luke vi. 38; Prov. xix. 17.

Penuriousness and generosity cannot long dwell together. Genuine benevolence will, as effectually displace covetousness as water will air. "When the desire for money becomes absorbing, whether in prince or beggar, it is that covetousness that God abhors, and its natural and only antidote is giving, giving, giving—depleting the plethoric desire till its imperiousness is subdued and its clamors are hushed."

"Covetousness is generally marked by two or three peculiar and dangerous features:

"1. It commences long before it is suspected, and usually in the guise of some laudable ambition; for example, to provide for one's own household, to acquire the means that will enable one to be more benevolent, or in some other really commendable way.

"2. Insensibility to its existence increases in the ratio of augmented danger; that is, the more commanding it becomes, the less consciousness of obedience its victim has.

"3. It so perverts the conscience that its victims often, perhaps usually, think themselves right in their course.

"So, that it is difficult to find one whom the world and the church brands as covetous, who does not justify himself in all his penuriousness, honestly believing that he is only doing his duty to himself, yet—'There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.'" Prov. xvi. 25.

"What, then, is this fearful covetousness that must be antagonized? In Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and English alike, it signifies eager, longing desire. Yet its condemnation is not in the fact that it is desire, nor yet in its strength, for we are commanded to 'covet earnestly the best gifts.' On the other hand, it is not in desiring temporal things, for the parable of the talents teaches us that increase of substance is even commanded; but it is in giving to interests of secondary importance the strength of desire that belongs only to spiritual things!"

Beware of covetousness! Luke xii. 13-21; Matt. xiii. 22.

"Is thy cruse of comfort failing?
Rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine
It shall serve thee and thy brother.
Love divine will fill thy storehouse,
Or thy handful still renew;
Scanty fare for one will often
Make a royal feast for two.

"For the heart grows rich in giving;
All its wealth is living grain;
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered fill with gold the plain.
Is thy burden hard and heavy?
Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden,
God will bear both it and thee.

"Numb and weary on the mountains,
Wouldst thou sleep amidst the snow?
Chafe that frozen form beside thee,
And together both shall glow.
Art thou stricken in life's battle?
Many wounded round thee moan;
Lavish on their wounds thy balsams,
And thy balm shall heal thine own.

"Is the heart a well left empty?
None but God its void can fill,
Nothing but a ceaseless fountain
Can its ceaseless longings still.
Is the heart failing power?
Self-entwined, its strength shake low;
It can only live in loving,
And by serving love will grow."

Our Duty.

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service, Rom. xii. 1.

God is making up a royal priesthood after the order of Melchisedec for the coming ages, and especially the age to come, to which we are invited; and as sacrifices have always been offered by this class of people; and as Jesus our example and great High Priest offered himself, will we be able to participate in those exalted priestly positions without we, ourselves, "offer somewhat" here? I think not.

In the earlier ages of the world sacrifices were offered in the form of certain animals; but the true child of God made personal sacrifices that won for him God's favor and constituted him one of the elect according to the foreknowledge of God, (Heb. xi.) And so in these latter times God foreknows his people by the sacrifices they are willing to make.

There are many sacrifices the child of God is required to make. There are the pleasures of this life—as Moses, "who chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season,"—we are required to forego. As comprehending the same, though rather somewhat more, we have this language: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." Included in these would be such things as party-going, worldly pleasure-seeking of any sort, and any form of extravagant living. I will not attempt to enumerate the many ways in which sacrifices are to be made; we will see them without this.

Our sacrifices will all be rewarded, but the greater they are the more abundantly will we receive. If we were to work and should be oppressed, and yet to promote the cause of Christ, we should continue and use the means, or a portion of them, to that end, sacrificing our own pleasure and comfort; God would abundantly reward us. I believe this would be our duty. We need to make great sacrifices with our property and money. Now, above all other times, we seem to need the means of comfort and increase in knowledge our Millenarian papers afford, and their support depends on the willing contributions of their subscribers. Who will do it? I have scarcely a doubt but that the most of the subscribers to THE RESTITUTION could afford to take two or more copies, (I judge from my own circumstances,) but they will not; therefore it will be meagerly supported by a few who will sacrifice money and comfort for the Master's cause. The time of reward is nigh and if we want the reward offered, we must make the sacrifices. Will the door be closed against us if we are found wanting?

An Inquirer.

Will some of our learned brethren be so kind as to answer the following questions through THE RESTITUTION?

Who constitutes the church, the bride?

Is it the saints who will be living when the Master comes? or, is it believers of all ages?

If it is the saints of all ages, including the living at the advent of the Savior, is there a different state of holiness, or preparedness necessary in order to be changed to immortality without having died, than having died, to be raised in the likeness of our risen Head?

If the same state of fitness is required now, and ever has been, can we consistantly claim that the same manifestations of Spirit power, as those granted to the Apostles is necessary in these last days in order to make the Bride ready? Or in other words: If we are ready to fall asleep in the Lord, are we not ready to be changed to immortality if the Lord should come?

Are the terms of salvation, faith in and obedience to the Gospel? If not, an anxious inquirer would like to know what they are.

ANXIOUS INQUIRER.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Upon my return from Pennsylvania I was laid aside from labor for some eight weeks by sickness. But I am now able to travel and preach the kingdom of God, and teach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding me—things which I conceive to be essential for people to hear, believe and do in order to develop the character, which exists in embryo, into the likeness of our elder brother, Jesus, the Lifegiver of the body, the congregation of the Lord, of whom he is the head.

I reached my own pleasant home today. Have been absent six Sundays. Spent three Sundays with the congregation in Pleasant Street. Had a free time in discoursing upon a drawer of truths, to the comfort and enlightenment of the brethren and friends of truth.

Spent one Sunday and the Sabbath in St. Catharine's, very pleasantly and I trust profitably, though we had a few hours of sharp discussion on the inspiration of the prophecy of Daniel.

Spent a few days with the brethren in Norwich. Gave a number of sermons. Had excellent meetings. Ate the memorial supper. Had the honor of immersing Brother Wm. L. Stubbs, one of the editors and proprietors of the Listowel Standard. He is a well informed brother, and on some of the the leading truths is in advance of those of riper growth. He occasionally gives public lectures to the acceptance of the well informed disciples of Jesus. He is worthy of the confidence of all whom he may visit.

Spent a few days with the church at Sweaborg. By request I gave three discourses founded upon Pilate's question, "What is truth?" As usual, a good turnout; a good and joyful time in presenting truth and listening to it.

In these two last places some have decided to be immersed into the saving name of Jesus Christ, upon my return.

Fraternally yours,

SELECTIONS.

The Mazarine Bible.

At a meeting of the Connecticut Historical Society in Hartford, the chief interest gathered about the exhibition of the rarest and most valuable books in the world, Dr. Trumbull brought out the Mazarine Bible, belonging to the collection of the late George Brinley. This is one of the only two copies in America, and there are only six in the world. It was printed in 1455. Two years ago, two copies were sold at auction in London in the same sale, and one printed upon paper brought $14,000, gold; the other, on vellum, brought $20,000, gold. Usually a vellum copy of any work brings four or five times as much as a paper one; but the history of the Mazarine Bible raises the value of the paper copies relatively to those on vellum. Gutenberg printed the first copies in 1455, and those were on paper; in 1456, Faust got possession of the types, and his edition was partly on vellum. These consequently, are not so completely "original."

The Brinley copy is on paper—one of the genuine Gutenberg prints, and is a marvel of the printer's work. Its equal could not be made to-day. The ink, though four hundred years old, and more, is as distinct as ink could be, and the paper is still white and clear. The "register" is perfect, and the appearance of the page surpasses that of the best modern books. The work is printed in Latin, with a number of curious contract symbols in the text, used to space the lines evenly. Three different ways of the letter "S"—broad, moderate wide, and narrow—are examples of the care taken in this respect. This volume was probably bound about a hundred years after printing, and must have been hidden away for centuries in some monastery. The Mazarine Bible was the first book printed with movable type.

The Oldest Obelisk.

Next after the greatest, it may be in order to notice the oldest of the existing obelisks. This is the one close to the modern village of Matareeah, or the site of Heliopolis, in the land of Goshen, near Cairo. A singular perpendicular line of hieroglyphics ornaments each side and records its erection by Osirtasen I., or probably about B. C. 3,000. The inscription, with one slight exception, is the same on all sides. A myriad of wasps' nests now completely obscures the carvings on two of the surfaces. Authorities differ regarding its height, but 68 feet 2 inches is given as the latest measurement by Marietta Bey. Nearly six feet of the length is buried in the accumulation of soil deposited by the Nile; and the stone, even at the surface of the ground, presents sad evidences of the destruction caused by repeated visits of the water. The opposite sides only are equal, the measurements at the base being 6 feet 1 inch and 6 feet 3 inches. Pocock gives 6 feet and 6 feet 4 inches as his finding in the same connection. The southern side of the shaft is the best preserved, while the western is in the worst condition on account of having been sealed to a height of about 15 feet. This obelisk is supposed to have stood at the entrance to the great Temple of the Sun, where Moses studied theology. Remnants of the temenos or inclosure of this sanctuary still remain.

EASTERN ITEMS.

A correspondent at Kuram says an Afghan soldier in the British service was hanged for firing to warn his countrymen of the advance on Peiwar Pass. Eighteen others were sentenced to terms of from seven to fourteen years' penal servitude for desertion.

A correspondent at Kuram says a proclamation of the Ameer of Afghanistan has been discovered, dated November 11. It shows he had declared a holy war against the British.

A fire which broke out Christmas at Hong Kong raged all day yesterday. The loss is very great.

Yakoob Khan, son of the Ameer of Afghanistan, has come into Jellalabad. This is regarded as equivalent to submission to the British.

A dispatch from Cape Town, dated the 10th, says it is stated on good authority that Sir Bartle Frere's communication to the Zulu King demands the disbandment of the Zulu army, the cession of St. Lucia Bay, and the reception of a British Resident. The message had not reached the King at the date of the telegram. War is considered imminent.

A telegram from Tiflis says the Ameer of Afghanistan has arrived at Tashkend.

Arms are being generally distributed throughout Eastern Roumelia, to be used in resisting the execution of the Treaty of Berlin.

The Chinese Envoy has arrived to adjust the difficulties between China and Russia.

Commander-in-Chief Soutzo and Secretary General of the Interior Zinopoulos have been appointed Commissioners to negotiate relative to the Turco-Grecian frontier.

The resolutions in favor of quarantining all vessels now coming into this port from Hong Kong, offered yesterday at a meeting of the Board of Health, are more timely than is generally understood. There is very little doubt, from the tone and language of our latest newspaper files from Japan, that Asiatic cholera exists in an epidemic form at Hong Kong and some other cities of China, and is causing an alarm at Yokohama and Tokio. It will be kept a secret as long as possible, for the reason that as soon as it shall be known, commercial intercourse and local business will suffer. Cholera infection is as dangerous to this city as yellow fever to New Orleans.

BREVITIES.

Not for many years has snow fallen so copiously as during the close of last month on the higher Alps. The passes across Mounts St. Gothard, Bernard and Simplon were closed to travel, and the mails had to be sent by the Mount Cenis tunnel.

An important Nihilist conspiracy has been discovered at St. Petersburg. The Governor of the province of Jenisael had been warned some time past that a rising was to take place. The exiles of Siberia and the gold diggers of Krasnoe were to take possession of the houses in the town and set fire to them. Numerous arrests have been made.

Capt. Roudaire has once more started for the Shot el Jerid, in Algiers, and will report to the French Government on the practicability of filling that depression in the Algerian Sahara with water from the Mediterranean. He is accompanied by Dr. Andre, who will examine into the natural history of the country.

Many interesting finds continue to be made in the lacustrine stations laid bare by the shrinkage of Lake Neuchatel. Among the latest are a complete bronze axe mould and a human skull. Rings, pins, buckles, hatchets, flint implements, and the bones of animals are in great abundance. Human bones, however, are very rarely found, from which it is supposed that the tombs of the lake dwellers have not yet been discovered.

There is a strong suspicion in certain circles in England that the Afghanistan war is only the entering wedge towards the opening up of a new and startling policy of British territorial acquisition in the Orient, which will include Palestine and its restoration to the Jews under an English protectorate. This conjecture is based upon the fact that Earl Beaconsfield, the head of the present British Cabinet, is of Jewish proclivities, and in strong sympathy with the undying ambition of the Jewish race for the recovery of the land of their ancient habitation.

When Mr. Henry Drummond, an eccentric but able English member of parliament, and a light of the Irvingite faith, was in Rome, some thirty years ago, he had occasion to refer to the highest authority among the Jesuits on the subject of the Real Presence. The Jesuit told him he must believe that there was no bread present after consecration. Mr. Drummond asked whether if the bread were chemically analyzed the ashes would contain animal and not vegetable products. The father replied that "if such an act of profanation were committed, the holy presence would be withdrawn and the elements would be as they were before."

The Cologne Gazette says that a committee of experts having examined the document known as Luther's will, which is in possession of the Protestant church in Pesth, has declared it authentic. The document found its way, with a number of manuscripts of the learned theologian, John Benedict Carpzolius, to Hungary, and came into the hands of a private collector, a rich proprietor named Jankovics, from whom the Archduchess Maria Dorothea obtained it for 400 golden guldens. She presented it to the Protestant church in Pesth, in whose archives it has since lain, nobody being positively certain that it was authentic. It is henceforth to be deposited in a special case in National Museum at Pesth.

The people of Afghanistan are not given to trade nor to manufacturing. They leave to the Persians, the Arabs and the English all such occupations. They live a free, easy, unsettled life. It is most truly a pastoral country. The inhabitants were divided into tribes and subdivisions; some live in the valleys and others on the plains, and others guard the mountain passes and demand toll from the trading caravans. In appearance they are savages, arming themselves with any weapon, dressing in any clothes, roving from place to place. The cities are usually found settled by the side of some high mountain with a vast and open plain stretching out before them. The houses are generally of mud, low, flat-roofed and plain. Cabul is the city of most importance. It rests nearly at the foot of Baba peak, 8,000 feet above the sea level. From here one may look upon the high, deserted, cold peaks of the Koosh range, while southward extends an open and fertile plain. The Cabul river is picturesquely crossed by three bridges, the one leading westward to Khyber Pass being strictly guarded. The houses of the city are of sun-baked bricks, low and devoid of beauty. There are mosques and bazars, and a citadel in the eastern part contains the Governor's palace. The climate is severe in winter, from October to March, but in summer is delightful.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION sets forth the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It advocates a new age to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth, with which Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal reign as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead; the full annihilation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only to the Christ and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and Baptism by immersion, alone to the remission of sins, and a holy life as a essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

What Shall we do that we may Have Eternal life? and When Shall we Obtain the Promised gift, Immortality?

I will endeavor to write an article on the subject named above, and will try to substantiate my conclusions by the Word of God as taught by Christ and the apostles. In the first place, I will cite Acts ii. to verse 44. We can plainly see by these references that the Apostle's inciting motive was the gospel. Now, when the great multitude which had gathered at Jerusalem at the day of Pentecost, heard the apostles preach concerning the death, burial and resurrection of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and that God had raised this same Jesus from the dead and crowned him with immortality, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Hear Peter's gospel answer, that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off; even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying: save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And all that believed were together, and had all things common."

Now listen to Paul's own words as concerning his conversion (Acts xxii. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16): "And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews that dwelt there, came unto me, and stood, and said unto me: Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him, and he said, the God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth; for thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

Now, notice, it was told Paul to do just the same as they had done on the day of Pentecost, namely: Be baptized for the remission of sins. Why be baptized for the remission of sins? Because it is a command from Christ and the apostles, and according to the Scriptures, it is the only means used by which we can be initiated into the Christ family.

Now for the proof. Gal. iii. 27. Paul, our great model preacher, says: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." In Acts x. 34 to 38, we see that Philip preached Christ unto the eunuch. What was the effect? "Then Philip opened his mouth and preached unto him Christ. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water, and the eunuch said: See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said: If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said: I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him."

Again, please take notice of the conversion of the jailer, (Acts xvi. 30 to 33). Here we see that the jailer and his family were convicted that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, because, when the prison doors were opened, the jailer appeared to be convicted of the truth. He came trembling and fell down before Paul and Silas, and said: "What must I do to be saved?" And they spoke unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes, and after the jailer had washed their stripes he was baptized; he and all his straightway. The reader can take note if he chooses, and he will find that they all, with one accord, make faith, repentance and baptism, the first principles of the gospel as preached by Christ and the apostles.

In Acts xviii. we see that Paul preached the same gospel at Corinth to the Gentiles. What was the effect? And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized. Acts xviii. 24 to 28, gives us a slight history of a man by the name of Apollos. As concerns his baptism, it appears he had been baptized into John's baptism only. "A certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, came to Ephesus. This man was instructed in the way of the Lord, and being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John. And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue, whom, when Aquilla and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him, who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace. For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ."

Again, Acts xix. 1 to 5 verses: "And it came to pass that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus, and finding certain disciples, he said unto them: Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him: We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them: Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said: Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul: John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Now, all the Scriptures that have been brought forth thus far show most assuredly that faith and obedience to the gospel are the essential prerequisites as taught by Christ and the apostles in order that we may be partakers of the divine nature. In connection with the Scriptures that have been alluded to, notice how the commission that Christ gave to the apostles, harmonizes with the doctrine of Paul, Philip, and all the inspired teachings in regard to the subject, Mark xvi. 15, 16: "And he (Christ) said unto them (the apostles) go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned."

Now, in regard to these first principles of the gospel, how can we say that the Bible teaches that sprinkling will answer just as well as to be baptized? If it will, why did not Christ command the apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel, saying: "He that believeth, and is sprinkled, shall be saved?" Simply because that was not the way that God ordained that we poor mortals might put on Christ.

In 2 Tim. xv. Paul says to his son Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed rightly dividing the word of truth." And when we rightly divide the word of truth in regard to being initiated into the family of Christ by sprinkling, we positively ignore the teaching of the word of God.

In regard to the subject of baptism, Paul tells the Romans, Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5: "Know ye not, that as many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

It seems to me that this passage of Scripture is too plain for a sound mind, and a Bible student to get around. Just think of it! The idea; buried with Christ in sprinkling; planted together in the likeness of his death by sprinkling! Don't you see, that in order to plant anything under the water or under the earth, it has got to be covered up? I think that this is a sufficient argument to show that sprinkling is null and void, according to the word of God, and that baptism is one of the great essentials in order that we may obtain an eternal inheritance in the kingdom of God. Then after we have obeyed the first principles of the gospel, as taught by Christ and the apostles, we are taught, 2 Peter i. 5: "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, when are we to put on immortality as the promised gift for obedience to the gospel? 1 Cor. xv. 51 to 55, Paul says to the Corinthians: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trump shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality; then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory." Then the victorious ones can say: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" according to the Scripture just quoted. Then we put on immortality at the resurrection of the dead.

In 1 Thess. iv. 13 to 18, our beloved brother Paul tells to those that have obeyed the truth, and that are looking for their reward according to promise: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so also them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; for this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord, wherefore comfort one another with these words." Let us all try to be ready to make Paul's confession.

In 2 Tim. iv. 1-8, he says: "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." This is the kind of doctrine that Paul commanded Timothy to preach. He says: "Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine, in all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works; in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you."

I will close, hoping that this explanation will be satisfactory to the reader.

Galva, Ill.

An Open Letter to Col. Robert Ingersoll—No. 3.

You say: "We are taught that, if it had not been for the treachery of the Jews and the treachery of Judas, we would all of us have gone to hell." The Bible teaches no such thing, and it is not responsible for the sayings and speculations of men.

Again, you state, "If Adam had not sinned we should none of us have been born." In the first chapter of Genesis we find a command given by God to Adam to multiply and replenish the earth. There is not one single word in the whole account as to the necessity of a crime being committed before the command could be obeyed. "God's sole idea in creating the universe was to glorify himself." Another statement without proof.

You next declare: "You are willing to give up; have to get rid of hell." Doubtless, there are many others in our world who would gladly make the same sacrifice; but God pity all such. "Now, in the Old Testament there is not, in my judgment, a single reference to a future life." Go read Dan. xii. 2; Ezek. xxxvii. 1-18; Job xix. 24-27; Psa. xvii. 15; Isa. xxvi. 19, and we hope you will never again have reason to say the Old Testament breathes forth no hope for a future re-living beyond the cold grave and the dark river of death. But does your God of nature, with his varied scenes of falling leaves and fading flowers, give back to us a joyous echo of life beyond the tomb? Has time (nature's great historian) with her pencil fingers dipped her pen in the fountain of fallen tears of the mourner, and the broken-hearted, and written upon the page of the autumn past and on the white cold marble which marks the last resting place of the fallen ones the assurance of life beyond, the grave? Nay, verily, if there be no other God save your God of Nature to inspire in our bosom a hope of re-living in the great beyond, we would exclaim, as was written by Infidel hands on the tomb-stones in the cemeteries of France: "Death, is an eternal sleep." But is there no place, no time, no spot of earth, where man shall live and never die? Yes, the God of heaven and earth, by the resurrection of his Son Jesus Christ from the dead (who was seen by the apostles after his resurrection, also by over five hundred brethren at one time), giving us the assurance that Christ, being raised from the dead as the first-fruits of them that sleep, we also shall be raised from the dead in like manner at his coming. 1 Cor. xv. 20-23; 1 Thess. iv. 15, 16, 17.

Yes, here is a promise of a life beyond the grave, and this promise has inspired the fainting heart from the days of Abraham to the present hour, and will do so to the close of time, when we shall rest in that bright summer home where flowers bloom to fade no more, and where death can never come again.

You say: "The idea of eternal life is not born of any book." True, "Christ came to bring life and immortality to light through the gospel." But can you produce a volume whose divine origin is higher and more sacred, and which holds out to you and me the olive-branch of hope promising to us a future re-living beyond the tomb with brighter prospects of its fulfillment than does the Bible? If so, where is it, and who is its author? Have you a better code of laws to give to man by which he is to be governed than that which God gave through Moses to the children of Israel while they were bowed at the base of the thunder-rocked mountain, found in Exodus xx. 1-17, and those inculcated by Christ in his sermon on the mount, the record of which will be found in Matt. v., vi. and vii.?

We find many things recorded in the Scriptures as having transpired which God has plainly forbidden. Because these acts and events are found recorded in God's Word, does it follow that the God of the Bible teaches or even sanctions those things of which the Bible has become a history?

We surely have intelligence enough to discriminate between a historic account and a precept, or a commandment given to man to be obeyed. Were we to read the Bible as we do any other book, doubtless, many objections to it would disappear. We hope you may live to see and appreciate the Bible as you ought, and acknowledge the greatness and goodness of the God of heaven. May the reward of the righteous be yours to enjoy in that world to come spoken of in Rev. xxi. 1, (read it), where there is to be "No more death; neither sorrow or crying; neither shall there be any more pain." Where no sound of the tolling bell will ever again be heard telling us of the departure of some loved one to their long home, there to rest beneath the willow, to slumber on while the winds sing a mournful requiem above their graves; where no marble slab with its snowy whiteness will ever again be raised to mark the resting place of the pale, pale dead; where no green grave will ever again appear, to whose sacred spot we will go as in this life, to plant at spring-time the evergreen, the rose, the wild flower, or to guide the curling vine above the form of the lost one. This is the home yet to be prepared by God for all the good and true of earth. May you and I be there; may we rest at last in that summer home beyond the dark, cold grave,

"Where no tear will ever fall,
Or heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

There the sorrows of this life will all be forgotten. Amen.

Very respectfully yours,

L. S. BRONSON.

"Paul's Untimely Birth"

In the title of an article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of March 27th, 1878, taken from the Prophetic Times, with which, in the main, I can heartily concur. The main objection is the terming of Paul's conversion the birth of the spirit. In my own mind I substitute conversion where the writer would represent it as the spirit-birth; and I see no difficulty in our brethren who do not believe conversion is this spiritual birth accepting it in the same way.

I can not agree with some who dissent, that it (the vision) had nothing to do with his (Paul's) conversion; for I do not think he would have been converted without it; yet I think it was a "miraculous interposition in his call to the apostleship." But the question that arises in our minds is, How can we call conversion a birth?

In John iii. 5, Jesus says: "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." That this birth of water is the resurrection from our watery grave is evident, because Paul says, "That like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Rom. vi. 4. That the literal resurrection is a birth is evident because the Scriptures say Jesus was the "first born from the dead." Therefore the type must be.

But, you say, admitting that this typical resurrection is a birth, why do you apply it to conversion? I apply it to conversion because a person can not be said to be truly converted until he has yielded obedience in baptism. Peter confirms this, for he says: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Acts iii. 19. Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Chap. ii. 38. Besides, our "newness of life" is represented as beginning here—after baptism.

Thus, I think, as our conversion may be termed a birth, because it is typical of the literal change from this life to that which is to come—from "old" to "new," so Israel's conversion at the proper time, when Jesus shall manifest himself to them, may be termed a birth; and Paul's being before the time for that event, was "out of due time."

Much more might be said, but I wish only to notice one more objection that may be urged, and that is, it may be said that, if the "newness of life" does not commence until after baptism, Paul's did not commence at the time of the vision. But this can be answered by saying that the whole was the transition stage from the old to the new; or, if you prefer it, it was as though baptism had already taken place immediately after the vision, for he immediately obeyed, being baptized without unnecessary delay.

The southeastern portion of the district of Wynaad, in Malabar, India, has been found very rich in gold. Experts state that upon a superficies of twenty-five miles long and thirteen wide they have found ninety localities of ore from two to four feet thick on the surface, which would yield 200 ounces of gold per ton. The land is 3,000 feet above the level of the sea, and healthy for nine months of the year.

The strength of the European troops upon the Indian establishment, exclusive of those temporarily detained in India is about 62,000, consisting of 4,300 cavalry, 12,500 artillery (horse, field, and garrison) and engineers, and 45,800 infantry. Prof. Nordenskjold, who directs the Swedish polar expedition in the north polar waters, has written a letter to a friend in which he gives a highly interesting account of the village Chaburova, Nova Zembla, inhabited by Samoiedes, from whom, with considerable difficulty, he obtained specimens of their gods, which for the most part resemble large dolls. Although converted to Christianity, these curious people retain many of their old customs and sacrifice on their altars to gods. A Russian who lives in Chaburova in summer for trading purposes took the professor to see one of these altars in a cavern, which is regarded as sacred. Although the Archimandrite had destroyed it thirty years ago, and had raised a cross on its site, the Samoiedes have found in the neighborhood evident traces of recent sacrifices to the gods, whose images were placed around.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 8, 1879.

A COPY of Leisure Hours, for December, 1878, is on our table. It is a neat monthly of some thirty or more pages, at ten cents a single number, or one dollar a year. By. I. L. Patton & Co. New York.

THERE are two reasons for meagre editorials this week. One is that we are perfectly flooded with communications for which we are disposed to surrender all the space possible; and another is that we have been engaged in making up our book as treasurer for submission to the finance committee.

WE hope all our friends will interest themselves in the financial welfare of our paper. Our indebtedness is less than it was one year ago, and much less than two years ago. This result has been achieved mainly through the "Relief Fund." To prevent incurring further indebtedness, we have been compelled to give some fewer than fifty-two numbers for each of the past two years.

THE RAINBOW for December has arrived. Its special editorial address on "The Revealed Future of the Church and the World," on the question of "Israel," and on the "Nearing Advent," is impressively interesting. Its other articles are very noteworthy. Like our own loved RESTITUTION, it is straitened financially. May God grant it enlargement and more abundant prosperity.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The One Hope.

The old hoper's hope. What is it? He professes to believe that he was converted some forty years ago and oh! what bright visions of glory he then had; of heaven and the spirits of the blessed who had long been in heaven enjoying those happy scenes. He goes into one of our revival meetings and as every spirit begets its own likeness, he takes fire and when the form of the meeting is appropriate he arises quietly and begins his speech in decorous manner, but as he continues herefers to his old hope[illegible] in his heart [illegible]d as he does so [illegible]s and slaps his [illegible]eet and shouts [illegible]d the rest catch the [illegible]he flame burns very finely [illegible]general belief is that this is [illegible]of God, and that by the outpouring of his spirit he is doing wonders, and so a general shout is the result, for they all seem to share in the excited speech of the old hoper, and say, 'Why, he became so revived it was worth the whole effort of our revival meeting to have one such backslider so much revived. Oh! if you had only been there to have heard him that night you would have said there is a divine reality in such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit as that was; and the best of it was we all enjoyed it so well.' "What of it," says one, "do you not believe in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit?"

My belief or yours will not alter the facts in hand; you may believe in the direct operation of the Holy Spirit, I may believe in its operation through the truth, but that difference will not alter the facts in the present case. You think the old hoper was a backslider reclaimed; I will take the negative of that, and examine his hope. In order to do so let me illustrate the subject by a suppositious case which I consider a fact similar. We will suppose Mr. B. to be sick and finally to die; the friends and neighbors come in to sympathize with the mourning ones and to weep with those who weep. If in the midst of the general lamentations a person were to secretly attach to his person an electric battery and charge the dead person he might indeed show signs of life by motions of eyes or hands so as even for the moment to deceive the beholders into believing that the dead was alive, but let the battery be removed and the dead becomes as motionless as before, though when the extraneous influence of the galvanic battery was withdrawn the dead was no more dead than when he was being charged upon. So with the old hoper who becomes so heated by an extraneous and revival spirit; when the revival is over, he is over. He is no more a backslider from God after the extraneous influence of this revival spirit (misnamed the Holy Spirit of God) is taken off and he is away back where he was before, than he was at the time that his excited speech begot its own spirit and excited so many with joy. In fact his hope looks entirely in the wrong direction; "for what a man hopeth for, he doth with patience wait for it," says Paul. All can see that hope with him looked forward to the future, but with the old hoper with his dead hope revived it looks backward for at least forty years. Let all beware of old dead hopers, that look backward instead of forward to the kingdom. Whether they give signs of life by lip service and human gesture under revival influence or not, they are to be depreciated, for there is no soundness in them; and what I say unto one I say unto all, beware.

C. F. SWEET.

The Nature of Man.

Man is born of woman; he is of few days; he springs forth like a flower and is soon cut down. Man is natural—he cannot keep himself alive. Stop! reader, and think that man is born of natural parents, and those parents of whom he was born must die. As we behold them die and laid in the tomb, we cannot but perceive that we, being their offspring, are natural also. Man must be born again if he would live forever. He must feel a second birth, which will change him from a natural body, to a spiritual body. Christ said to Nicodemus, "you must be born again." And again he said, "that which is born of flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit," John. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. We see our Savior coming into the world a natural man; in due time he dies—"what for?" you ask; I will tell you: Jesus was to be tried and tested, the test was this: He was to die and rise again. If he rose from the dead, then he would conquer death, and become the first to rise from the dead to die no more, and those who believed thus and obeyed him should be made like him, and being made like him we die no more. Why? because we are the children of the resurrection.

By this then we see man cannot possess an immortal soul this side of the resurrection. Christ must come to earth again according to the promise, to give man his reward. That reward is a resurrection from the dead and eternal life. So we say in the language of the Apostle Paul, "seek for immortality" Rom. ii. 7. Immortality is not received nor cannot be given to us by our parents. It is the gift of God through Jesus Christ, our Lord, Rom. vii. 23. And the Bible plainly tells us by the mouth of the Apostle Paul, "God only hath immortality," 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. This then, would exclude the human family of that possession. And again, immortality is the reward of God's people and that reward cannot be bestowed upon mankind until the Savour comes, from the fact that he says: "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me," Rev. xxii. 12. So we are to understand by this, that the very best Christian on earth is on trial for immortality and eternal life.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—In your issue of November 25, 1878, was an article from Simon Rosenfield, (a Jew) which I read with much interest, not that I endorse his present view, or, more properly, his skepticism in regard to Jesus of Nazareth being the Messiah foretold by the prophets of Israel. It is not strange that doubts in his mind should still linger; his early education—the scoffs and sneers—the prejudice and persecution from the Gentile world would very naturally have a tendency to confirm his own prejudice, which was ingrained by birth and education. But how is it with regard to the Gentile world in this respect? Have they anything whereof to boast in? We, who are of Gentile extraction, and have become partakers of the gospel by being "grafted into the good olive tree," should heed the apostle's admonition: "Boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee." Rom. xi. 18. The whole chapter, of which this is a part, is a complete refutation of the doctrine held very tenaciously by many; and strange to say, by many who believe in the soon-coming of our future King, the one who said to Pontius Pilate, that he was the born "King of the Jews," and the one who is to sit on the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob forever. See Luke i. 32, 33; Isa. ix. 6, 7.

Jerusalem is to be trodden down by the Gentiles. How long? Forever? Nay, verily, "Until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." We would ask right here, is not the kingdom which we are seeking, Israelitish in every phase of it? Is it not the kingdom of Israel restored, or will be when set up? Blindness, in part, (not wholly) has happened unto Israel. How long? Until he comes whose right it is to reign on David's throne. If the veil is over the face of the Jew, in the reading of the Old Testament—which veil is done away in Christ—(see 2 Cor. iii. 13-16), is it not certain that the time is coming (and that soon) when Christ (the antitypical Joseph) will make himself known to his brethren, and they will ask him, "What are these wounds in thy hands?" and then he shall answer, "Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends." See Zech. xiii.

I would respectfully ask, is there not a still darker veil over the face of the Gentiles, who ignore the apostle's declaration in Rom. xi., through prejudice against anything which seems to favor the restoration of Jewish nationality? The Jewish, or Israelitish nation, is the only one which will survive the catastrophe which is inevitable on all others. For proof see Jer. xxx. 10, 11. "Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel, for lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return and be in rest and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee; though I make a full end of all the nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."

The restoration of Israel, as clearly taught in the foregoing Scripture, and many others too numerous to mention for want of space, clearly establishes the fact, that the restoration of Israel, nationally, is one of the most prominent features of the gospel; the one which is susceptible of the clearest proof of any doctrine contained in, or taught in the Scriptures of truth. To preach anything else for gospel, and to reject this, is virtually to pervert, or to preach another gospel, which, if this be true, and for my life I can see no way to avoid this conclusion, and yet I speak in all good kindness, that the curse will, and must be incurred. See Gal. i. 6-9.

Disraeli, the great English premier, said recently, "That it was not right or proper to call a Jew who believes in Christ as the true Messiah, a converted Jew." For said he, "The Jew who believes in Christ is an 'Israelite indeed,' and not until then can he be." He does not become thereby a Gentile by any means, by believing in Christ. It comes with an ill grace, to say the least, from those who have cast off the heathen dogma of "going to heaven at death," and deifying the "King of terrors," and forming with it an alliance, and so of the rest in the list of errors to the end of the chapters, to reject the doctrine of the restoration of Israel. The kingdom of Israel, proper, which was inaugurated by the anointing of David as king, (see 2 Sam. v. and vii.), its perpetuity is guaranteed under his greater Son Christ. Strange as it may seem, it is sneeringly called the "Jewish question," and the time when the Kingdom is to be reorganized, which, of course, must be a time or age yet future, called in common parlance, the age to come, is by them called heresy. But, if this belief is a heresy, I glory in it.

M. I. LEWIS.

Editor Restitution:—The pre-millennial coming of the Lord is a necessity—an absolute necessity.

It is said to be "as a thief," in Rev. xvi., thus guarding it from misconception and distinguishing it from all other comings. A glance over the Biblical map of the future shows an unlikeness for a thief-like coming at any other time.

Peter uses stronger language, in the third chapter of his second epistle, speaking of the day of the Lord coming, as a thief in the night, who makes his entrance with stealthy step, and commits a burglary unperceived. So shall it be when he whose right it is shall come.

It is manifest, then, that Christ comes secretly, though not unexpectedly; and yet he will not be recognized, for one shall say, Zech. xiii., What are those wounds in thy hands? And he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

Then shall they look upon me whom they have pierced, and there shall be a great mourning in Jerusalem. Hence will arise the moral and then the political regeneration of the children of Judah. Zech xii.

The Lord (of hosts) shall save the tents of Judah first. Verse 7.

To effect this, the horns of the Gentiles will have to be removed and their armies broken to pieces upon the hill countries of Judea by Christ and his saints. Thus will come off the battle of Armageddon. Rev. xvi. 16.

Now it is desirable to know what will lead to this event. This is revealed in Rev. xi. 18, in these words: The nations were angry—wrath come—time of the dead—and so on. But wherefore are the nations angry? Answer: I saw three unclean spirits like frogs—out of the mouths of the dragon—the beast and the false prophet. The dragon represents Constantinople; the beast, Vienna; and the false prophet, Rome. From these three centers, under the influence of the frog spirits will proceed a policy that will embroil the nations and kindle the lake of fire and brimstone upon the continent of Europe. This war will be before the resurrection. The Russian clay must be remixed with the Roman iron and the pope will be a pseudo-prophet. The Greek Catholics and Roman Catholics in unison, subject to the dictation of the pope, will wage a bitter persecution against the natural and spiritual Seed of Abraham. Under this threefold power the ten kings of the old Roman world and the kings of the earth will be gathered to Armageddon to fight against Jerusalem, where the saints under Christ will unite in overthrowing the enemies of Judah, as already mentioned. Then the kingdom of the Stone will be built up, and Jerusalem will become a rejoicing, and her people a joy. After this Jehovah shall hiss for the ten tribes.

And there shall be a time of trouble such as never was....and at that time thy people shall be delivered....everyone that is written in the book. Dan. xii.

The dragon power being broken on the mountains of Israel, and the beast exasperated at the suggestion of his pseudo-prophet, the spirit of war revives; the military forces are rallied, and a move is made against the Lamb; but the Lamb overcomes them, for he is Lord of lords and king of kings. Rev. xvii.

And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet, and were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone, and the remnant were slain with the sword of him. Rev. xix.

Thus the Lamb conquers a peace, and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven is given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Daniel vii. 27. CHRISTADELPHIAN.

Editor Restitution:—It may be of some interest to you and the readers of your valuable paper to know that there are a few persons in this part of the country who are willing to bear testimony to the whole truth as it is in Jesus. We, in order that we might work more effectually, held a meeting Nov. 2, 1878, and organized a Church of God in Christ Jesus, a copy of which we here submit:

"We, the brethren in Christ at Dry Run meeting house, in Shenandoah county, Virginia, do, this 2d day of November, 1878, organize a church of God in Christ Jesus.

"We agree to take the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, for our rule of faith and practice in worship and discipline; therefore we teach and practice under the covenant established at Jerusalem, A. D. 33, with all essential ordinances exemplified and sustained by the apostles, who delivered to the people the decrees for to keep; and, therefore we immerse in water in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins all who come to us and confess a willingness to obey the gospel."

The number of names of members enrolled at the organization was twenty-four. The resolutions adopted were as follows:

1. That the highest title for teacher be elder, who may go out and make proclamation of the gospel at the suggestion of the brethren, for which he is not to expect a fixed salary, but if loss of time or cost of trip be too great for him, then it shall be at the common cost of the church that sends him.

2. That the other officers be deacon, treasurer, clerk, and sexton.

3. That we engage in no military service whatever.

We understand the Bible to teach that the saints will be rewarded on the earth when Christ comes to rule in righteousness.

We also learn that man is mortal, and can only get immortality in Christ, "for he is our life."

We believe that the wicked will be utterly destroyed—will be as though they had not been.

We baptize in that only name, Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, as commanded by the apostles under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; therefore that which was taught and practiced by the apostles should be obeyed.

Now may the Lord help us all to learn and do his will, that we may be found worthy when he comes to make up his jewels.

Editor Restitution:—Please find enclosed $2 for THE RESTITUTION, for Brother James E. Quimby and myself for the next six months. It is all the preaching we have of the one faith, and we love it too well to think of doing without it, and would be glad to do more for it than we do, but our only excuse is a want of means. We would be very glad indeed if we could have some other preaching of the right sort, but as we are so far from the rest of the brethren we have to content ourselves with the Bible and THE RESTITUTION for our guide, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. You have our earnest prayers for its success in heralding the gospel to those who, like us, are isolated and lonely. It affords us great comfort to read the letters from our dear brethren and sisters in the faith, and know that although strangers to each other in the flesh we are one family in Christ.

Let us all strive to hold fast our confidence in the faith without wavering, looking unto Jesus, who is our life, that when he shall appear we may be like him, for we shall see him as he is.

Ever yours, in hope of the soon-coming kingdom.

The Dreadful Pestilence.

Time and frost has killed the terrible pestilence. "Never before," says the Interior, "has this awful scourge taken so wide a sweep, and desolated so many once happy homes. And never before has there been so general an interest throughout the nation—it is a memorable year in our annals." It is estimated, says this authority, "that the loss to the South in the suspension or destruction of business, if it could be all told, would probably be little short of the loss caused by the burning of Chicago." Good authorities put this loss by the plague at $200,000,000. Over an area of the Mississippi valley 1100 miles in length and from 100 to 250 miles in breadth, it raged and spread terror and death. And the President in his Message informs the people that "about 100,000 cases are believed to have occurred, of which about 20,000 proved fatal." All this remember in one short summer. Ah, what shall come when other summers break the blossoms of flowers, God only knows. In the light of science and Scripture it is my belief that still worse, still sadder, still more calamitous times are coming to men. And I see no end of our evils "Till Jesus comes."

Faith.

The confiding public goes to sleep in a railroad car as quietly as at home. This quietness involves a faith immeasurably greater than is required to accept the Redeemer. It requires confidence in the engineer, whom we never saw, and of whom we only know that he belongs to a class many of whom are given to drinking. It requires confidence in every other engineer and conductor that may be running any freight or gravel train at the time. It requires confidence that these men, who must support a family out of a small salary, have money to secure a perfect timepiece. It requires faith in every old watch on the road. No saint was ever taxed to meet such demands. Why will not men believe God?

The fact that so many fish are dying off the coast of Florida calls to mind the awful prediction of Professor Knapp. From the juxtaposition of certain planets to our earth, he predicts that one-half of the population of the world, including man and all kinds of animals, and even vegetable life, will perish before or during the year 1880. In a lecture delivered several years ago, he said that this desolation would commence by the fishes of the sea dying, and pestilence and famine occurring in more southern latitudes. The famine in China and the yellow-fever scourge in the South, and now the fearful pestilence among the fishes in southern waters, are so many steps in fulfillment of Professor Knapp's prophecies.

In bibliography, those editions which proceeded from the press of the family of Aldus Manutius are termed Aldine. The first of that name established his press at Venice about the year 1490, where he cast Roman letter of a neater cut than had before been used, and also gave to the world the beautiful letter known as Italic, it first appearing in his Virgil of 1501. He also improved upon the style of punctuation previously in vogue, adding the semicolon to the points then used, and giving to the comma a better shape.

One of the Astor family has recently given to the Astor Library a book which brought 70,000 francs ($15,500) at an auction sale last summer in Paris. It is an early printed book, the first edition of the Catholicon of Joannes Balbus de Janua, dated 1460—a treatise on grammar and rhetoric and a Latin dictionary, the printing of which is attributed by Brunet to Gutteuberg.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Flattery is a false coin which is current only through our vanity.

Tillotson: A good word is an easy obligation; but not to speak ill, requires only our silence, which costs us nothing.

As every thread of gold is valuable, so is every minute of time; and as it would be great folly to shoe horses (as the Roman Emperor Nero did) with gold, so it is to spend time in trifles.

Bishop Hensbaw: "Our endeavors are in vain without God's blessing, yet in vain shall he challenge a blessing that endeavors not. Sloth is no less guilty than covetousness."

"They sowed in weakness and in tears;
They watched out with doubts and fears;
But God, their Father, heard their prayer,
And made their wait His constant care."

Enjoy the blessings of this day if God sends them; and the evils bear patiently. For this day only is ours; we are dead to yesterday, and we are not born to-morrow.

A mother's love, how sweet the name!
What is a mother's love?
A noble, pure and tender flame,
Enkindled from above,
To bless a heart of earthly mould;
The warmest love that can grow cold;
This is a mother's love.
—James Montgomery.

READING THE BIBLE.

Remain: I will answer for it, the longer you read the Bible, the more you will like it; it will grow sweeter and sweeter; and the more you get into the spirit of it, the more you will get into the Spirit of Christ.

PRAYER.

It is the voice of the needy to him who alone can relieve them. It is not eloquence but earnestness. It is not fine words, nor flowing periods, but it is a deep sense of our guilt urging us to approach the Savior, and to seek pardon, help, and salvation with strong crying—it may be with tears and groanings which cannot be uttered.

Bishop Taylor: Prayer is the key to open the day, and the bolt to shut in the night. But as the clouds drop the early dew and the evening dew upon the grass, yet it would not spring and grow green by that constant and double falling of the dew, unless some great shower at certain seasons did supply the rest; so the customary devotion of prayer twice a day, is the falling of the early and latter dew. But if you will increase and flourish in works of grace, empty the great clouds sometimes, and let them fall in a great shower of prayer. Choose out seasons when prayer shall overflow like Jordan in time of harvest.

We have shared our home together,
We have sat around one board;
And we'll find a home together
In the Paradise restored!

LABOR OMNIA VINCIT.

"Labor conquers all things." There are few difficulties which will not yield to persevering labor. Continuous toil surmounts every difficulty. It makes the wilderness of nature blossom as the rose.

THE ONE NAME—ACTS iv. 12.

When round my dying bed ye stand,
And kiss my cheek and clasp my hand,
O, whisper in my failing ear
The only Name I care to hear,—
The only Name that has the power
To comfort in the dying hour.

Let neither sob nor sigh be heard,
But still repeat that sacred word,—
Until the solace it imparts
Descends like balm upon your hearts,
And I in triumph gladly sing:
"O dreadful Death, where is thy sting?"
—Miss H. M. Johnson.

EASTERN ITEMS.

The Political Correspondence says intelligence has been received from Scutari that the inhabitants of Podgoritza telegraphed the Sultan their determination not to submit in any case to the enforcement of the Berlin treaty. Simultaneously with this notice the authorities of Podgoritza demolished the dwellings of those inhabitants of Spuz who had gone to tender submission to Montenegro.

A Times Vienna dispatch states that Prince Dondakoff-Korsakoff has made a special report to the Czar, asking his intervention in behalf of the Bulgarians in Macedonia, who declare that 120 of their villages have been burned and 9,000 persons massacred during the suppression of the insurrection. The Bulgarian fugitives have petitioned the foreign ambassadors for deliverance from Turkish rule.

A Hasir-Pir dispatch says General Roberts with a large force has entered the District of Khost, which he intends to occupy to overawe the mountaineers. No opposition is expected.

A correspondent with the Quetta column reports that the Afghans have flooded the country around Candahar, and that all non-combatants are leaving that city.

A plague has appeared among the Cossacks of Astrachan. The sufferers are isolated. Many doctors have been summoned to their relief. Of the 195 persons attacked since the 1st instant 143 have died.

POETRY.

Past—Present—Future.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

Sweet childhood hours—life's opening scenes—
How fondly memory backward leans
Toward its first dreams, and ardent pants
Let me re-live these blissful days.
How gay was spring, enrobed in bloom,
And dewy pearls, when morn's perfume,
And bright Aurora's crimson flush,
Were sweet as bridal beauty's blush.
'Neath summer's sun, in sportive race,
I watched the flight the shadows chase;—
Looked up to heaven's majestic blue,
That words of light were mocking thought;—
Then in the streamlet's natural flow
Looked down on heaven that hope below.
How oft before sin's shadow black
Had yet eclipsed life's shining track,
On mountain heights I wondering stood
In nature's midst solitude,
Before the palmist; sharp-felt
O'er rising peak or sinking dell;—
Ever withering flower were laid in death,
Cut down by Winter's killing breath,
And heart prophetic whisp'ers say—
Youth's transient actions fleet away.

* * * * *

These years are passed,—upon my brow
The snows of time are falling now.
The school-mates troops with whom I played
Are slumbering 'neath the grave-yard's sunset;
Parents that saw my life-dawn day
Are enrolled yonder in the clay;
Green mounds are heaved above the breast
Of sisters in their dreamless rest;
And graven marble-give the date
When children graced the earth of late;
And she—I name my youthful bride—
Is sleeping by these children's side;
The grass has often grown above
The saints who taught me God to love;
And while I wait the grave for me
Is ready as once, Ah, for thee;
For as I lit with bated breath
I hear thy steps, O coming death!

* * * * *

But Judah's seers foretell an hour
When death shall lose its eternal power;
That One shall come with might to save,
And break the bolts that bar the grave;
When that dear dust o'er which we tread
In deathless shapes shall leave that bed;
They say upon life's farther shore
No "trumpets beat, no billows roar";
That Indelen Paradise bloom
Beyond the sweets and the tomb;
That on those shores Jerusalem
Has golden streets and walls of gem;
No sorrows there, no grief, no sigh;
For tears are wiped from every eye;
That the eternal raptures there
The pure, the good, the holy, share;
That sin shall ne'er invade our home
In the delightful world to come;
Then, Heavenly Father, me I pray
Give youth eternal in that day.

COMMUNICATIONS.

This Hope and its Effects.

And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. 1 John iii. 3.

The hope of being like God, our blessed Savior, when he appears, and seeing him as he is, is indeed a peculiar hope, claimed by comparatively few. John does not say that every man has this hope, while many good honest souls who profess to be good Christians claim a different hope to this. But if our hopes do not agree, then our faith, the substance or basis of hope, cannot be the same, and there being only one faith, that is saving faith to produce the Christian's hope, then we act wisely to heed the apostle's admonition: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves." 2 Cor. xiii. 5.

It must be self-evident to all reflecting minds, that this hope of being like God when he comes was the hope of apostles and primitive Christians. Not only so, but David the prophet who yet slumbers near Jerusalem, when contemplating this glorious heaven-born hope exclaims from the very depths of his heart, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Psa. xvii. 15.

The beloved disciple, who gave us our text, was so enraptured with this doctrine which has cheered and sustained the hearts of the good of all ages, that he exclaims, in a most pathetic manner, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, but it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

Paul, the aged, bears testimony as follows: "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. iii. 20, 21.

Again, when writing to his Colossian brethren of this blessed hope and its realization, he admonished them to "Set your affections on things above, not on things on earth, for ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 2–4.

Peter, when instructing those who had the oversight of God's elect strangers scattered abroad, gives as a motive to faithfulness, "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Peter v. 4.

"God, speaking in times past by his prophet, for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope," says "Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. xl. 10.

The personal coming of our Lord is one of the grandest and most life-inspiring themes that mortal ever contemplated. We may desire ever so much to be like our Lord; yet unless we believe the record God has given of his Son, and that the gift of God is eternal life through Christ, also exercise a strong living faith in those "exceeding great and precious promises," and conform our lives to the divine requirements, we cannot expect so much, but such, by their actions class themselves with those who "have no hope, and without God in the world," while those who have taken pains to dig deep and build on the sure foundation, rest secure amid the storms of life, waiting for the consummation of their hope—the redemption of their body, their vile body changed and fashioned like unto his glorious body. Blessed hope! And every man that hath this hope in him purifies himself, even as God himself is pure. Gentle reader, brother, or sister, is this your hope? If so, the fruits must follow.

John says that everyone having this hope, which is a peculiar kind of hope purifies himself. This must and will follow as a natural result, as effect to cause. The effect must correspond to the cause or hope that produces it. If our hope is a very peculiar one, so must our lives be. Then we form a class of peculiar people.

The glorious gospel of God finds us sunk deep, not only in tradition and false teaching, but also in sin and corruption; and there should be a corresponding change and reform in our customs of life, which is divinely required of us, and just as necessary and essential as to believe the unpopular truth to salvation. Sin in all its forms must be killed, our fleshly affections restrained, and our worse than useless habits, such as dram-drinking, tobacco-chewing and smoking, and many other such useless and hurtful habits, which I am sorry to say are now and then found on those who claim this peculiar hope, must be broken up. One versed in divine things would look for different and better fruit.

Paul, who has kept back nothing profitable, when addressing those who claim the promises, the basis or groundwork of this peculiar hope, says, "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Thus if we would share in the good things promised, we must conform to the requirements.

Brethren, is not this hope set before us a sufficient motive? Be not deceived. Jesus will soon come. He says, "I come quickly." Are we ready? Do our words and actions respond, Amen? T. E. ADAMS.

Behold this Child.

In our introductory article we have shown the relation existing between the Lord Jesus Christ and Israel, or the Hebrew nation, viz.: That God's purpose is plainly revealed; that in Abraham and his seed all nations are to be blessed.

In this article we purpose saying a few things in relation to God's purpose in creating the world or arranging the ages. He created it, not in vain. He made it to be inhabited. The heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. David adds: "And delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

No statement of Holy Writ is susceptible of more positive proof than the one we affirm, viz.: That it was the original purpose of the Deity to have the world peopled with a race of holy beings.

Question: Will God's purpose be thwarted by the introduction of evil? We affirm, not in the least. But, if, as the orthodox believe and teach, evil is to be eternal; then, indeed, will this beautiful planet, deeply impressed with the seed of divine wisdom and power and goodness, prove to be a blot and a stain on one among the many mansions in God's house (John xiv.) which this child has undertaken to restore, fit up, and beautify, for a home and an everlasting inheritance for the saints.

How derogatory to the character of an infinitely just, merciful, and an All-Wise Deity to believe, or admit for a moment that evil will be eternal. If this be so, then the promise fails, Gen. iii. 15. The serpent's head will never be bruised. Alas! for lost humanity.

Since writing the foregoing, THE RESTITUTION has come, containing Brother Shepherd's article on "The Fall of Man," and the introduction of evil into our world. He has anticipated much we intended saying. We will try and not repeat what he has said, but will glean a little after so able an exponent has investigated the prophetic word.

How gloomy and forbidding the outlook if evil is to be eternal, and a portion of God's beautiful creation remain eternally under the curse. This cannot be so. God's word forbids it; yea, he has sworn by himself (because he could swear by no greater). But, as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. Num. xiv. 21; Isa. xl. Habak ii. contain words of the same import.

Query: Will the glory of God consist in having a part of the world partitioned off for an eternal hell for lost souls to howl and rave in and blaspheme God Almighty to all eternity and God Almighty can't help it? so affirmed Professor Henry Cowles, of Oberlin College, in our hearing. But, says orthodoxy, God will prepare a place outside of the new heavens and the new earth. Not so fast. The word of God forbids the taking away from the planet on which we dwell, either the righteous or the wicked for reward or punishment. "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner." Prov. xi. 31.

But, says orthodoxy, we don't believe and teach that dreadful hell-fire dogma any more. Well, then, be honest, publish to the world the sad mistake and wipe the blasphemy from the escutcheons of the church and no longer fasten upon it a libel on the character of the God of the Bible. "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself; that where I am there ye may be also." John xiv. 1, 2, 3.

In this passage the Savior speaks of God's, or his Father's house, which can only mean the universe, composed of the many mansions of which our world makes one. That any of these many mansions except the planet earth are in a fallen condition, we do not believe. That the great work that God purposes to accomplish through this child, is to bring back, restore to more than Eden beauty, glory and perfection, and place it among, or in the great galaxy of mansions composing God's house, admits not of a doubt. That there will be a dark spot or a blemish upon it, we cannot for a moment admit. It would be charging God with imperfection and injustice; it would be virtually saying he began to build and did not count the cost, or was not able to finish. This would greatly please Bob Ingersoll, or Darwin, or some orthodox eternal torment advocate, but no intelligent Bible Christian can give countenance to any such blasphemy—not for a moment. The thought that God will have a clean universe, is glorious; beyond human conception. How it exalts the character of the Deity, and also of this child—his beloved Son, in whom he is ever well pleased. "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26.

Will there be progression and improvement after the above affirmations of the apostle are accomplished? or, in other words, will the world, and all that pertains to it, including man made immortal, remain in statu quo? This is a debatable question and opens a wide range for thought and argument. We will not at this time enter into the discussion, or express an opinion, supposing Brother Shepherd will ventilate the subject carefully and logically. We cannot believe that man, exalted to so high and glorious a position, will be idle, or as Dr. Aiken says: "Sit upon a white cloud and sing psalms to all eternity." Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out. Rom. xi. 33. The subject we have but barely hinted at, is vast, grand and sublime; far beyond the grasp of finite mortal man, with his dwarfed interest, for we see through a glass darkly. "What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I thought it was about time for me to renew my subscription for the paper, as it is now over three months past due. I never did neglect to before. It is not because I am not interested in the paper and the great truths it advocates, but on account of hard times. It is so hard to get money this winter. I am as much interested as I ever was. My hope in the coming of the Just One is as strong as ever; and I do not think it will be very long until the hope will be realized. But I can exclaim, with John, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." I do think this groaning earth has great need of a change in its affairs.

Brother C. C. Ramsey came to our place October 20, and remained with us over three weeks. He is an able proclaimer of the gospel. He awakened a great interest in the minds of the people. Two were baptized, and many more were almost persuaded to become Christians. The church was greatly strengthened. But right in the midst of a good interest he was called away by sickness in his family.

Enclosed you will find $3 to renew my subscription for six months; and also Widow Bennett's. I would remark, right here, that Wilson Bennett died last September, and his widow was one that was baptized during our meeting; she being poor in this world's goods, I wish to continue the paper for her.

I will have to close by wishing you a merry Christmas and a happy new year. Your brother in Christ.

A. SEITZ.

Carlisle, Iowa.

Editor Restitution:—My time is past due. I now send $2.25. I want you to date from January 1, 1879. I would have sent before, but money is so hard to get. I will try and be more prompt in the future. I have taken THE RESTITUTION now about five years, and to me it is next to the Bible for instruction, for reproof, for righteousness, and for rightly dividing the Word of God.

I remain your brother, in hope of the age of restitution.

C. H. WATKINS.

Boardman, Iowa.

Editor Restitution:—You will please accept my thanks for your kindness in continuing to send THE RESTITUTION so long after my subscription had expired. You will find enclosed $1 to renew my subscription a little longer, as the dear paper is a great comforter in these trying times. I will send you another dollar probably in a month from now.

I am sorry to say that there are not many of the Abrahamic faith in this part of the country. They all seem to be deaf and blind to the teachings of the Scriptures. The Gentile times will soon draw to a close, and the dear Master will come to set up his kingdom upon the earth, with all his saints. But the people around here have his kingdom set up now! They know all all about it, and can't be taught any more! They are all going to heaven at death, on flowery beds of ease!

Yours in the hope of the soon-coming of our Lord and Master.

ANDREW SYME.

Denford, O.

Editor Restitution:—After arriving home this morning from a preaching tour in trying to spread the gospel as best I could, finding my subscription was up to-day for the paper, I would renew it by sending you the money for the paper for another year.

I am preaching in places where the immortality of the soul was never called in question, to their great surprise. I need not tell you how this is. You know better than I can tell you. I am trying to do all I can for the paper. We can't afford to do without it. I have another subscriber for six months.

Your brother in the faith.

DIED.

H. M. Hickok, aged 47 years, December 13, 1878.

Brother Hickok was formerly a resident of Berrien county, Michigan, but for the past five years of Defiance county, Ohio. Being without brethren of like precious faith, except his very kind and much esteemed companion, he had concluded to return to his former residence, and join with the little band of believers here, but while on his way, driving his team through alone, his family to follow on the train, his horses ran away and killed him almost instantly, the wheel passing over his head. Our dear brother fell among strangers but they proved themselves friends, by bestowing every kindness possible on him and his family. The corpse arrived at Brother Merwins on the 17th. Remarks on the occasion by the writer from 2 Thess. ii. 16, 17. Brother Hickok has left a wife and five children to mourn his sudden death, but they sorrow not as others that have no hope. Sister Hickok's health is very poor, but that everlasting consolation and good hope through grace is her comfort.

May we be also ready.

SAMUEL ANDREWS.

Then, sleep, our brother, awhile in death,
Till Jesus bids thee rise,
To hail the Great Deliverer,
De-scending from the skies.

Then let our sorrows cease,
The time will not be long.
When we shall see thy smiling face,
Among the happy throng.

I. ANDREWS.

A Free-Will Offering.

We, the undersigned, having the good of the cause of truth at heart, and believing that it is our duty to sustain the gospel with our means as well as our tongues, and believing that God will bless us in all the offering we make in behalf of the truth, have paid the sum set opposite our names for the purpose of freeing THE RESTITUTION from debt, and sending it out as a messenger of truth to those sitting in darkness, and to comfort those who are walking in the light of Him:

POETRY.

Christmas, 1878.

W. L. CHICKERIT.

Up from the valley now
See the mist stealing;
Wreathed on the mountain's brow,
Its dark tears concealing.
See the first golden ray
Break from the night away,
Herald of blessed day,
Beauties revealing.

Hail to the glorious light
O'er the world streaming,
Vanished the shades of night
From the sun's beaming,
Hail to this natal morn,
Hail to the Savior born,
Death of his triumph shorn
By His blood streaming.

If we stand by the flocks at night
Shepherds were tending;
If we stand 'neath the heavens bright
O'er their heads bending,
We can hear o'er the dewy field
Soft sounds of music steal,
We can see the rent sky reveal
Angels descending.

Tidings of precious joy
To the world bringing,
Sin can no more destroy—
Hell to the stinging.
Christ shall in glory reign,
Israel to peace attain,
Blest be the savior's name
Loud hosts are ringing.

Praise ye the Lord above;
Worship ye nations;
God has in tender love
Given salvation.
God sendeth greeting, peace,
God bids thy sorrows cease,
Oh, let thy joys increase,
Redeemed creation.

Carol is the holy song
Glory proclaiming;
Vaulted the angel throng,
Silence is reigning.
Let us go where the Savior lies,
Let us haste as the eagle flies;
Behold the eastern star arise
O'er the spot dazzling.

See, in His manger-bed,
Jesus in all spring;
Watch o'er the holy head
Angels are keeping.
Gentile, thy light is here,
Israel, thy Prince, draw near,
Immanuel removes thy fear—
Comforts thy weeping.

Then, on thy natal day,
Let us rejoicing,
Casting our sins away,
Earth's riches spurning,
Fly unto Him for rest,
Lean on the gentle breast
And to thy arms be pressed—
Still our hearts yearning.

Twenty Reasons Why a Belief of "The Gospel of the Kingdom" is Essential to Salvation.

WILEY JONES.

1. Because it is that gospel which the blessed Savior himself preached. In proof of this assertion you need only to read the following testimonies, which are too clear and pointed to admit of any dispute:

"Now after that John was put in prison Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." Mark i. 14.

"And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Mat. iv. 23.

"And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Mat. ix. 35.

At Capernaum "The people sought him, and came unto him, and stayed him, that he should not depart from them. And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent." Luke iv. 43.

"And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." Luke viii. 1.

And even after his resurrection, he was seen of his disciples forty days, "and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Acts i. 3.

Now as to the absolute necessity of believing just what he preached, the Scriptures are equally clear, pointed, and pungent:

"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." Mat. xvii. 5.

"God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Heb. i. 2.

"Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that Prophet shall be destroyed." Acts iii. 22, 23.

"He that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true. ....He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 33, 36.

"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Luke ix. 26.

"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." Col. iii. 16.

"If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing." 1 Tim. vi. 3, 4. And "The day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. iv. 1.

These declarations of Scripture plainly settle the fate and doom of every man who "knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know" (1 Cor. viii. 2); for there are thousands of such, who, while making great pretensions to learning, and while wearing the high-sounding titles of "Rev." "D. D." and "LL. D." yet notoriously, stupidly, and persistently refuse to either preach or believe that blessed "Gospel of the kingdom" which the holy Savior preached from the beginning to the end of his personal ministry.

This fact alone—that the Lord Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom—is enough to prove that a belief of that gospel is essential to salvation. This fact also convinces us, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the gospel of the kingdom is the noblest, wisest, and best theme that can engage the the minds or tongues or pens of men: although it is well known that multitudes of modern teachers, both in high and low positions, are in the habit of treating it with almost a silent contempt. For all the world I would not be in the place of such teachers at the day of judgment.

2. Because in order to be saved we must "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," who, as "The Messenger of the covenant," has brought "the good message" to man, from God to man. Acts xvi. 31; Mal. iii. 1. And of course we cannot be truly said to "believe on" a messenger so long as we reject the message which he has brought. Now that the gospel of the kingdom is his message is evident from the blessed Savior's own words—"I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also, for therefore am I sent." Luke iv. 43. Also from the language of Peter—"The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ.... began from Galilee after the baptism which John preached." Acts x. 36, 37. Now, on turning to the record we find that the word which began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached, was "the gospel of the kingdom of God." Mark i. 14. This, then, is the message which we must believe, and refusing to believe it is refusing to "believe on" the high and holy messenger, and also on the Father who sent him; for "the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak." John xii. 49.

3. Because "this gospel of the kingdom" is a testimony purposed; the Savior said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony to all nations." A. R. V.'s translation of Mat. xxiv. 14. And as he—"The Faithful and True Witness"—preached this gospel of the kingdom during the whole of his own ministry, we know that it is a part of "his testimony," and as such it becomes an essential matter that we shall believe it, for "he that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true.....And he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 33, 36.

4. Because Christ commands us to believe that gospel: "Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying,.....repent ye, and believe the gospel." Mark i. 14, 15. Of course he did not command them to believe "another gospel" than the one that he was preaching. The language, therefore, proves that he commanded them to believe the identical gospel which he was preaching—"the gospel of the kingdom of God." Does any one imagine that it is not essential to keep his commandments? "If ye love me keep my commandments." "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." John xiv. 15; xv. 14. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Luke vi. 46. "Whatsoever he saith unto you do." John ii. 5. "Blessed are they that do his commandments." Rev. xxii. 14.

5. Because, in the parable of the sower, "the word of the kingdom" is the true "seed" sown in the heart, and every one who "understandeth it not" is a mere wayside hearer, destined to perish: for "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi. 16. And now remember we have the authority of holy Scripture for saying that after hearing the "word of the kingdom," if any one endeavors, either "by smooth words and fair speeches," or by scowls and threats, to take away that doctrine out of your mind and heart, that person however fair his professions or intentions may be, is really doing the work and acting the part not of a Christian minister or of a friend, but of "the wicked one," or of "the devil;" for in Mat. xiii. 19, we read, "When any one heareth the word of the kingdom and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart." In Luke viii. 12, we read, "Then cometh the devil and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved." So we see that in reality not only the work but the motive is diabolical—the word of the kingdom, i. e., the gospel of the kingdom, is taken away from them "lest they should believe and be saved."

6. It is essential to believe the gospel of the kingdom, because the apostles preached it. The Savior said to them, by way of prophecy and command, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony panteon to all nations." Mat. xxiv. 14. Any tolerably bright youth in a Sunday School ought to be able to tell you that the Savior's own personal ministry was confined to the land of Palestine. By whom, then, was it preached in all the world? Certainly not by the Scribes and Pharisees, nor by the Gentile philosophers; it must, therefore, have been preached by the apostles. Nor was it preached by them in all the world until after the day of Pentecost, for while the Master was with them, he expressly "commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not." Mat. x. 7.

As to the brief ten days between his ascension and the day of Pentecost, he was equally explicit, saying, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high.... Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Luke xxiv. 49; Acts. i. 8. That "power from on high" enabled them to speak the various languages of "all nations" to whom they were sent, and also to work miracles in confirmation of the gospel of the kingdom which they preached.

After reading those plain words, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world," I wonder that anybody can doubt or question the necessity of believing it.

Some people imagine that the fulfillment of this prediction and command of the Savior was entrusted to the modern self styled "successors of the apostles." But it is notorious that those who style themselves in these days "the successors of the apostles" do not preach "this gospel of the kingdom." The Scriptures teach that the Apostles themselves fulfilled that prophecy; the command to them was a personal one—"Go YE into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark xvi. 15. "YE shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." If their witnessing in Jerusalem and Judea was personal, it must have been personal also "in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Accordingly we find Paul, about thirty years after, declaring that it had been "preached to every creature which is under heaven," and "in all the world," kosmo. Col. i. 6, 23. "Their sound went into all the earth, ge, and their words unto the ends of the world," oikoumeny. The Roman empire is called "all the world," in Luke ii. 1, "There went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed." The word here translated "world" is the same as that in Mat. xxiv. 14, and Romans x. 18—oikoumene. Matthew Henry acknowledges that "within forty years after Christ's death the sound of the gospel was gone forth to the ends of the earth." Rom. x. 18.

"The end" that should come after the gospel had been preached in all the world seems evidently to be the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the end of the Mosaic commonwealth, as described in the immediate context—verses 15 to 28. And it is remarkable that the end of that commonwealth, which took place A. D. 70, was delayed until then, apparently for the very purpose of allowing the gospel of the kingdom to be first preached among all nations.

We have now made it as clear as a sunbeam that the gospel of the kingdom was preached by the apostles after the day of Pentecost, and throughout the whole of their ministry; it was oikoumenikos, the ecumenical gospel—they preached it everywhere they went. This great truth must be constantly borne in mind. It can not be set aside. Neither the rough jeering of the ignorant, nor the equally malicious "cunning craftiness" of the "wise and prudent" can ever justle it. Mat. xi. 25. And therefore you must remember that whatever short phrase may be used in Scripture to designate what was preached at Corinth and other places, "This gospel of the kingdom" is always implied if not expressed in that phrase. The words of the Master—"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world"—are plain enough proof that it was preached in Corinth, Rome, Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, Colosse, Thessalonica, and in every other place to which Paul or any other apostle went.

To argue that Paul said nothing about the death, burial, and resurrection while preaching at Ephesus, because they are not expressly mentioned in Acts xx. 25, would be unscriptural and absurd. On the same principle, to argue that he said nothing about the kingdom while preaching at Corinth, because it is not expressly mentioned in 1 Cor. xv. 1-4, would also be unscriptural and absurd. Why did not A. Campbell, of Bethany, Va., teach his brethren this first principle of interpretation?

Having now proved that the apostles preached the gospel of the kingdom, I need only quote the following testimonies to prove that we cannot be saved unless we believe what they preached:

"He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me." Luke x. 16.

"Whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when you depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city." Mat. x. 14, 15. See, also, Acts xiii. 51.

7. The belief of that gospel which the apostles preached—the gospel of the kingdom—is essential because it is the only gospel sanctioned by divine authority. One of their number, after he had been engaged in preaching it about twenty years, wrote to some who had heard it, saying, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which WE have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Gal. i. 8, 9. Here is a fearful and a double curse pronounced against any man or angel who shall dare to preach any other gospel than that which the apostles preached—the gospel of the kingdom. Oh! what a fearful reckoning there will be for thousands of modern preachers in the day of judgment. Nor can the deluded flock of any such preacher hope to escape, for they not only receive him into their houses but bid him God speed, thus making themselves "partakers of his evil deeds." 2 John ix. 10, 11. Yes, it is the private member of the flock who preaches that other gospel, if we view the question according to the principle that quid facit per alium facit per se—he who does a thing by the agency of another, does it himself. It is the flock who employs the preacher, prescribes what creed he shall advocate, and pays the salary. So we see that both the preacher and his flock will have, in many cases, to share the double curse of preaching "another gospel."

8. It is essential because we learn from Mat. xxiv. 14, that it was the gospel of the kingdom which the apostles were commanded to preach in all the world, and we learn by comparing this with a parallel and supplementary Scripture, what is the penalty for not believing it—"he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16. We are compelled to acknowledge that "the gospel" spoken of in Mark xvi. 15, 16, is the same as "the gospel of the kingdom" spoken of in Mat. xxiv. 14. To say that they are not the same would be saying that the Lord Jesus commanded his apostles to preach two diverse and different gospels in all the world; an idea too manifestly absurd to be entertained for a moment. To all true Christians there is but "one faith," and that is called "the faith of the gospel," because it is the belief of that one gospel of the kingdom which the apostles preached. And there is but "one hope," called "the hope of the gospel," because it is the hope of realizing those "exceeding great and precious promises" contained in that one gospel of the kingdom. Compare Eph, iv. 4, 5, and Col. i. 23; Phil. i. 27.

Having now proved clearly that the gospel in Mark xvi. 15, 16, is the same as the gospel of the kingdom in Mat. xxiv. 14, it would be perfectly right and proper to add the two passages into one harmonized form, thus: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel of the kingdom to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

9. It is essential because an apostle says, "If our gospel," meaning the gospel preached by himself and the other apostles, "be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." 2 Cor. iv. 3. I freely admit that many very moral and honest men, since the apostolic age, have lived and died without having ever heard or believed the gospel of the kingdom; but I cannot admit that they died in a saveable state. I suppose that none of them excelled Cornelius. He was "A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway. A just man, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews." And yet, notwithstanding all these excellences he "was warned from God," yes, "warned" to send for a preacher of the gospel of the kingdom, and hear from him words whereby he might "be saved." Acts x. 1, 2, 22; and xi. 14. I suppose that none of them were more "eloquent" or more "mighty in the Scriptures," or more "fervent" and zealous than Apollos: and yet even he needed to have "expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly," by two humble believers of the gospel of the kingdom. Acts xviii. 24, 26.

10. A belief of the gospel of the kingdom is essential because the apostles preached it "with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven." 1 Peter i. 12. Hence to reject that gospel is to reject the combined testimony of the Father, the Son, the Holy Spirit, and the holy apostles.

11. It is essential because the Scripture says, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Heb. ii. 3. The sacred record shows that it was the gospel of the kingdom which began to be spoken by the Lord Jesus, and was confirmed unto others by his apostles who heard him. It is indeed a great salvation, because "it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." Romans i. 16; Mark i. 14; Mat. xxiv. 14.

12. It is essential because to reject it is also to reject the evidence of the miracles and signs which the Lord enabled the apostles to work in confirmation of what they preached. Mark xvi. 20; Heb. ii. 4.

13. It is essential because to believe that gospel is to "receive the word of God." At Samaria, "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women.....Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John." Acts viii. 12, 14. Now "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ" constitute the gospel of the kingdom; and if the Samaritans had rejected those things, the report would not have gone to Jerusalem that they had received, but that they had rejected the word of God; and no one who rejects that word can be saved.

14. It is essential because James, in describing how a true Christian is generated or produced, says, "Of his own will begat he us by the word of truth;" and that same regenerating word is called "incorrupt like seed," which expression carries us at once to the parable of the sower, where the seed is declared to be "the word of the kingdom." Compare James i. 18, with 1 Peter i. 23, and Mat. xiii. 19. Hence in the law of generation it requires the word of the kingdom, i. e. the gospel of the kingdom, to generate or produce a child of God.

15. It is essential for us to believe it because it was believed by the Christian converts in Thessalonica, who were a model church in the apostolic ministry, being "ensamples to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia." One of the apostles wrote to them, "Our testimony among you was believed." 1 Thess. i. 7; 2 Thess. i. 10. That testimony was the gospel of the kingdom, for the Savior said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony to all nations." Mat. xxiv. 14.

16. It is essential for us to believe it because it was believed by the early converts in Samaria when they "believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." Acts viii. 12.

17. It is essential for us to believe it because it was believed by Cornelius when Peter called his attention to the word which "began from Galilee after the baptism which John preached, and was published throughout all Judea." Acts x. 36, 37. The record proves "that word" to be the gospel of the kingdom, for it says, "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." Mark i. 14. "And it came to pass afterwards that he went throughout every city and village preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God," Luke viii. 1. And Cornelius, like the Samaritans, believed "that word" before receiving baptism.

18. It is essential for us to believe it because the early converts in Rome believed it, where Paul sojourned for two whole years "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." Acts xxviii. 23, 31.

19. It is essential for us to believe it because it was believed by the early converts in Ephesus, where Paul continued a long time preaching "the things concerning the kingdom of God." Acts xix. 8; xx. 25.

These bright and shining examples become a law to us, for we are commanded to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints;" to "hold fast the form of sound words;" to keep constantly before us the ancient landmarks of the primitive and apostolic faith. "Ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." Jer. vi. 16.

20. Finally, a belief of "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" is essential because those tidings constitute a large portion of the words and sayings of our Savior, the keeping of whose words and sayings is a true test of our love for him. "If a man love me he will keep my words.....He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings." John xiv. 23, 24. And certainly we cannot be saved unless we love the Lord Jesus, for the fearful penalty has been pronounced, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be Anathema Maranatha," i. e. accursed when the Lord comes. 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

And now to recapitulate:

1. You cannot be saved unless you believe that gospel which Christ and his apostles preached.

2. They preached "The gospel of the kingdom."

3. Therefore you cannot be saved unless you believe "The gospel of the kingdom."

In This So?

J. D. COOK.

What saith the Scripture as to Adam's hope; and his immortality? How readest thou Brother M. S. Dee. 18? "What the law saith it saith to those who are under the law." Rom. iii. 19. Surely this applies to Adam; and the law said to him, "Thou shalt surely die." Has this personal penalty been violated law been recalled? How I read nothing of it. We read that "Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." Romans v. 12-14. Death reigned (was sovereign) over those whose sin seemed far less aggravated than Adam's. Did it not, then, reign over Adam still more absolutely?

Again. Is not Abel the first example of faith? Heb. xi. Nay, more: If Adam had surmounted the sentence of death, and from that positive and personal subjection to certain death had passed from its condemnation to justification of life, would it not have been worthy of special mention in the record of those who by faith had obtained a good report?

Here are three several positions of "thus saith the Lord" I and are they not the sum of all the Bible reveals, positively, on the question of Adam's destiny? In other words, is it well to expatiate on mere inferences, and ignore the plainest terms of all that Revelation does contain on that point? "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Peter iv. 11. The word is "profitable for correction, and instruction in righteousness, that we may be" thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii.

Other points are waived. Pardon me if this note seems illtimed. To my feeble apprehension it seems best every way to begin, go on, and end, with the Word of the Lord in all its heavenly revealings. See Rev. iii. 10. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee!" Amen.

In reference to the discovery of the satellites of Mars Mr. Proctor writes:—"Last year, mention being made of Voltaire's guess about the satellites of Mars, which M. de Fonvielle claimed as the first suggestion of the kind ever made, I stated that Kepler had made a much earlier guess to the same effect, quoting his ideas, but not his words. I could not, as I mentioned at the time, recollect where the original passage occurred. A day or two since I came across the passage in Brewster's 'Life of Kepler.' It corresponds exactly with my account of it last year. Writing to his friend Wachenfels in 1610, Kepler says:—'I am so far from disbelieving the existence of the four circum-jovial planets that I long for a telescope to anticipate you, if possible, in discovering two round Mars, as the proportion seems to require six or eight round Saturn, and perhaps one each round Mercury and Venus.' It was from this suggestion, no doubt, that Voltaire and Swift borrowed their guesses; which, however they present in such a way that some supposed they had really seen the satellites, an idea utterly inconsistent with possibilities, even if Kepler's original suggestion be overlooked."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Acts "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The One Spirit.—No. 2.

B. WILSON.

Brother Kimsey in RESTITUTION of December 11th, comments on my former article on the "One Spirit," and asks some questions, which it may be well to notice. It appears that we are not fully agreed. Perhaps we do not properly understand each other. I try to write plainly, and have no desire to hide my meaning. There are certain points connected with this subject on which all are agreed. Some of these may be enumerated as follows:

1. That the One Spirit is the Holy Spirit, or the Spirit of God.

2. That this Spirit is a revealing Spirit, or the medium through which God has made known his will to man.

3. That it was given for this purpose to the ancient seers, Jesus, the apostles, and the Church of God.

4. That when these holy men were inspired they gave what they received in words or signs addressed to the understandings of men. God spoke through them—they spake as moved by the Holy Spirit. Heb. i. 1; 2 Pet. i. 21.

5. That the writings of both the Old and New Testament, were written by inspired men, and contain within them that which is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

6. That this present dispensation began with a pouring out of the Spirit upon a few Jews at Pentecost, (Acts iii.) and a few Gentiles in the house of Cornelius, (Acts x.) This was a limited fulfillment of Joel ii. 28-32, and was called "the first-fruits of the Spirit."

7. That there will be a more general outpouring of the Spirit upon the restored house of Israel, "When the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Acts iii. 19; Isa. xliv. 3; Ezek. xxxix. 29.

Upon the foregoing points we are more or less agreed; and will pass by them at this time, and present a few items upon which there is a difference of opinion.

1. That the Spirit was possessed by each member of the primitive Church.

2. That this Spirit could then and can now be obtained direct from heaven, independent of the apostles.

3. That it is necessary to have the presence of this Spirit, in the heart, to produce the fruit of the Spirit, Gal. v. 22, 23, and in order to teach, guide, comfort, and sanctify the believer.

There may be other points of difference, but these will show the issue. Let me be understood. I believe that all things are of God. The works of creation were elaborated by his Spirit, and everything in our present salvation and future redemption must be attributed to the same wonder-working power. This I am firmly believe as the most ardent advocate of the direct operation of the Spirit. The difference between us is in the mode of its working. I contend that Deity works after the counsel of His own will, and in perfect agreement with his own moral and intellectual nature. He has endowed man with similar godlike faculties, and he expects him to use them for the glory of his Creator, and for his own highest good. God is glorified by the proper use of all the powers of body and mind of which man is possessed. Man, as a moral, intellectual, and animal being, has been placed under law to his Maker. His reason is treated with respect, and he is always appealed to as an intelligent and accountable being, in language that he can understand. Hence, God spoke to the fathers by the prophets, but in these last days by a Son. Heb. i. 1. When he gave Israel the law, he came down upon Sinai, and spake with them from heaven. And when they would not hear, he forbore with them for many years, and testified against them by his Spirit in his prophets. Neh. ix. 13, 30. Priests and prophets were God's mediums of communication with the people of Israel.

But we have to do more especially with the present age, and as to how God communicates with us. God is one—the Spirit is one. The same principle is followed. Man's reason is appealed to in words capable of being understood. He is not left to guess at what God may mean by some indefinable feeling or emotion he may have, or fancy he has. By no means. Jesus came as God's representative. He appeared to the children of Isaac as the prophet like unto Moses. Jehovah said of him, "I will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." Deut. xviii. 18. And Jesus himself said, "I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak." John xii. 49, 50; xiv. 10. The Father by his Spirit was in him, dictating the words, and doing the works. Those who heard the words, and saw the works, were held responsible. Of such Jesus said: "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no excuse for their sin." John xv. 22-24. The apostles also were inspired by the same Spirit. Jesus sent them into the world with the same message which he had received of the Father, and qualified them for the work. They were his ambassadors, to whom was entrusted the word of reconciliation. 2 Cor. v. 19, 20. To them he said: "He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me." Luke x. 16. And speaking of them to the Father, he said: "I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me," John xvii. 8; and they received the Holy Spirit as an helper, to teach them all things, and to bring all things to their remembrance, whatsoever he had said unto them. John xiv. 26.

Thus we see that God's message to men, whether through Jesus or his apostles, was communicated in spoken words. They also delivered that message in words easy to be understood. The Apostle Paul, though he had received a polished education, could say: "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." 1 Cor. ii. 1-4.

Again, he says, that the things the apostles received of God they spoke, "Not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth." Verse 13. The Holy Spirit taught them to present the truth of God in words addressed to the understanding of their hearers. This kind of Spirit influence is consistent with right reason, both in God and man. God speaks to man in words—it is man's duty to hear. The Apostle John wrote: "We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us." 1 John iv. 6. They declared what they had seen and heard, yet they had the Spirit, and yet they spoke and wrote was under its guidance. They spoke as having authority.

I wish the reader particularly to notice that there is no evidence to be found in the Scriptures, that God has ever revealed his will to man, in any other way than through the senses—the avenues through which he obtains all his knowledge. Neither natural nor spiritual knowledge is gathered in some mysterious, unexplained manner. The popular notion of the Spirit being within us, and acting as an instructor, a guide, a comforter, a sanctifier, etc., without the use of words addressed to the ear, is a fallacy. It is simply absurd. If such were the case we should have no need of the Bible. I contend that God has made known in the Scriptures, in intelligible language, all that is necessary for the perfection of character. And as this revelation is given by the Spirit, in God's words, "they are spirit, and they are life," to all who receive them. If, with the word of a king there is power, how much more with words proceeding from God. They require no separate, subtle, mysterious influence, as some say, to explain their meaning and to clothe them with power.

Let us now consider some of Brother Kimsey's statements and objections to the views I advocate concerning the One Spirit, and its operations. Let us inquire:

1. Did all the members of the Church, in apostolic times, possess the Spirit, or was it promised to each member of the whole body, from then until the coming of the Lord?

Brother K. quotes 1 Cor. ii. 7, to prove that all had the Spirit; this, however, only proves that those who possessed those spiritual gifts were to use them for the benefit of the church. The apostle only enumerates the various gifts then possessed by the Corinthian church, and shows that they were given by the self-same Spirit for the profit of all. He says: "Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church." 1 Cor. xiv. 12. The apostle taught them that whatever gift they might have, or desire to have, the good of all the brethren was to be sought. It was lawful for them to desire spiritual gifts, (1 Cor. xiv. 1;) but to desire to prophesy or teach [illegible] be preferable because he that prophesieth or teacheth, "Speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." Verses 1-6. It appears that the Corinthians desired the gift of tongues mainly. The apostle shows that, unless they interpreted also, it would not be profitable to others. Does not this language imply that the gifts were not possessed by all the brethren? He says: "I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all; yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that I might teach others also, than ten thousand in an unknown tongue." 1 Cor. xiv. 10-19.

I find no proof that all in the primitive church had spiritual gifts. Nor do I find a promise that each member of the body should possess them in the present state. The Spirit was given partitively to the primitive church, in a variety of gifts—so that they only knew in part, and prophesied in part—that is, they only obtained knowledge, and communicated it partitively. And even this was to end. "Whether there be prophesies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." 1 Cor. xiii. 8. Whether this was a prophecy, or merely a logical deduction from certain premises, it matters little, for the fact of the discontinuance of spirit-gifts is patent to all. True, we have the word of truth, given by the Spirit, which is a perfect rule of faith and practice, and which is able to perfect the character of every believer, but we have not yet come to the perfect state. "Now we see through a glass darkly," whether living in times of spiritual gifts, when God's will was given in portions, or living now, when we possess it as a whole. In the days of the gifts, the members of the body were exhorted not to believe every spirit, and to try the spirits, because false spirits were gone out teaching error; so now, though we may be satisfied that all the books of the New Testament were written by inspired men, yet we have to contend with errors which have been introduced into the Greek MS., and also with errors in translation, as well as many clauses which are unavoidably darkened somewhat in rendering them into another language. Thus, we do not see things clearly in the present imperfect state, but when that which is perfect is come, we shall be able to see with undimmed and unobstructed vision. I again repeat that I find no proof that all in the primitive church possessed the gifts of the Spirit. The exhortation given to seek after the best gifts, to try the spirits, to prove all things, etc., implies that some did not have them.

2. Can the Spirit, in its various gifts, be obtained now, direct from heaven, in answer to prayer?

There are only two ways recorded in which the Spirit was given—by baptism and laying on of apostolic hands. No instance given of any other way. The baptisms of Spirit are recorded in Acts ii. 1-4; x. 44-46; xi. 15-17. The Lord Jesus alone could baptize in Spirit. Then the apostles after they were thus filled with Spirit could impart it to others. They did so by the laying on of their hands upon baptized believers. See Acts viii. 14-17; ix. 17; xix. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6.

Brother Kimsey infers, because Peter and John prayed for the Samaritans that they might receive the Holy Spirit, that we also may pray and obtain the same Spirit. He says it is God's gift. That is true. But how does he give it? The facts in the case give the true answer. The Samaritans did not receive the Spirit until hands were laid on them. Simon Magus saw this. He coveted this power which the apostles possessed. "Give me this power," said he, offering them money to buy it, "that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Spirit." Peter replies: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gifts of God may be purchased with money."

What was it that Simon wished to buy? Not the Holy Spirit, but the power of giving it. He saw that the apostles had that gift; and that is what Peter calls "the gift of God," in which Simon had neither part nor lot. The apostles then possessed one extraordinary gift over and above all others —the power to impart the Holy Spirit to believers. God used them [illegible] signs of conferring his Spirit [illegible] Church. We have no intimation in the record that the apostles ever conferred this power upon others, or that others than the apostles ever gave the Spirit, or that any one ever received it except through them. Of course, the pouring out of the Spirit on the apostles at the first, and afterwards upon Cornelius and his house is not reckoned.

Brother K. says, because I admit that the apostles themselves received the Spirit without imposition of hands, I admit all he claims. Our brother is mistaken in this. The apostles had the promise of this baptism of the Holy Spirit; they were told what it would do for them, what it would do through them, and how long continue with them. Hence they were told to wait for it. Acts i. 4, 5. None else had this promise. For any one else than they to claim this promise of Spirit baptism, is rather presuming.

Brother K. quotes two promises made by Jesus to the apostles, which belong equally to all disciples. The first is a promise of the kingdom, Luke xii. 32; the second, a promise of the Holy Spirit, Luke xi. 13; more properly, a holy spirit, or disposition. These promises are conditional. The promise of the Spirit, the Comforter, to the apostles, was unconditional, and to them only. Consult what Jesus said—John xiv. 16, 17, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7-15.

Our Brother K. says: "The Holy Spirit is pledged to us if we comply with the conditions." What conditions? The apostles had to wait for it. They did so, and the promise was fulfilled. Was part of it left unfulfilled for us to wait for? If he refers to Luke xi. 13, the condition is asking the Father; but this is not to the point. In the parallel passage in Matt. vii. 11, instead of a holy spirit we have good things.

In Acts ii. 38, 39, to which Brother K. refers, the conditions are repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Are there not thousands now living who have complied with these conditions? and yet not one of them possesses the gifts of the Spirit, as our primitive brethren had them. Has the promise failed, or do we misapply it? Or are we yet not built on the proper foundation, as Brother K. intimates? What is lacking?

He says: "When we come to the required standard of the faith, the gift is ours." What is that? Please explain.

Again, he asks: "Shall we not go to work to build on the one foundation, which she (the apostolic church) has abandoned, and claim all the promises that were made to the bride?" Certainly; that is the work we are all engaged in, I hope; if we are not all so engaged, we had better look to our standing, and examine ourselves whether we be in the faith.

3. Is it necessary to have the presence of the Spirit within us, as the apostles had it, to produce the fruit of the Spirit—Gal. v. 22, 23—and in order to teach, guide, comfort, and sanctify us?

Brother Kimsey says: "The Spirit, in the early Church, produced all the fruits enumerated; and is it not because of the absence of the Spirit, those other fruits?"

Again, he says: "Our brother seems to think that we can have the fruits of the Spirit and not have the Spirit itself." I do hold that it is not necessary for us to possess the Spirit as the apostles did, in order to produce the fruit of the Spirit. These traits of Christian character are the result of obedience to the words of the Spirit, whether developed in the early Church, when the Spirit was present in its gifts, or in these last days. In the days of Spirit manifestation, the believers, the body, the church, were instructed by inspired teachers, in words. These gifted men were required to feed the flock—to speak the truth in love—to speak as the oracles of God—to reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine.

According to Brother Kimsey's theory, all this would be unnecessary, as he contends they all had the Spirit, and it produced its fruit in them. But it was just as essential for them as it is for us, to be mindful of the words of the prophets and commandments of the apostles. 2 Pet. iii. 1, 2. If we are not forgetful hearers, but doers, we shall be blessed. We bring forth the fruit of the Spirit, by attending to its teachings. If we live in the Spirit, walk in it, be guided or led by it, its fruits are manifest in our lives. The "other fruits" our brother refers to are the works of the flesh—manifest in all who are not led by the Spirit, whether in early or later times. The Spirit never did, and never will, act upon the moral and intellectual nature of man, except in accordance with the laws which govern it. If man's character is to be changed or improved, his intellect is appealed to, and motives presented to his moral nature. No force is used except this kind of moral suasion.

I cannot conceive that the early Christians had any better opportunity to develop these fruits of the Spirit than we have now. The Spirit can only develop character in us, by our obedience to its teachings. There is but one Spirit for primitive and modern Christians; our early brethren were under its immediate teachings, but they had them only partitively,—here a little, and there a little; in later times, however, we have the same teachings, but in a more compact form. What brother will dare to say that we lack any teaching in the oracles of God to make us perfect in all good works? Or to say that these words are powerless to produce fruit, unless the Spirit is present to apply them to the heart? It does seem that Brother K. can scarcely apprehend the point at issue, when he asks—"If the words of the Spirit are all we need, did the disciples need more than we do?" I answer, no. But the infant church did not have the words of the Spirit, as we have them, they had them only as given through the agencies then chosen and appointed. Those very means were then necessary to give those words for the growth of the church in favor and knowledge. The Spirit used these agents in all the churches to do its work. They were to teach, exhort, reprove, rebuke, guard and defend the truth and the brethren, holding fast the faithful word, and being examples to the believers, in word in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. The Spirit was their Helper by these means. But they had no better chance then than we have now to perfect character, and produce the fruit of the Spirit.

The outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost was only a partial fulfillment of Joel ii. 28-32. The prophecy and promise embraces the future restitution. Peter said to the Jews: "The promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts ii. 39. They were exhorted to "repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Acts iii. 19. The Spirit which the apostles received was only "the first fruits." Rom. viii. 23. They also called it "the earnest of the Spirit," 2 Cor. v. 5; i. 22. God anointed the apostles, and sealed them, and gave them the earnest or pledge of the Spirit. So also the Ephesians, according to Paul, were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the pledge of our inheritance. Eph. i. 13, 14; iv. 30. These passages intimate that there is something more to be looked for. The apostles, and others in the early Church, had the first-fruits and earnest of the Spirit—a foretaste of the powers of the age to come. The whole body has been blessed by its influence, and shares in the promise. And just as sure as the church is perfected in character by its quickening, enlightening, and sanctifying influences, so surely will it be filled with the fulness of God. How can the prayer of Jesus be answered without this? "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." John xvii. 20, 21. This, without doubt, refers to the future. This indissoluble unity of the Father, Son, and Church, will be when the Bride will have made herself ready, and puts on her beautiful garments of righteousness, clean and white, and is forever united to her Lord. She will then possess the full plenitude of the Spirit. The Church is now being built upon the true foundation, and is growing into an holy temple in the Lord. The whole body of Christ is builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit. The glory of the Lord did not fill either the tabernacle or the temple until they were finished; and so this spiritual building or temple must be completed, before God by his Spirit, will dwell therein. The perfect state will then be reached —"the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

And now "may we be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, so that we may be filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. iii. 18, 20.

[Advocate and Guardian.]

What are We Coming To.

It would almost appear to the careful observer, as he sends his thoughts abroad over our own country, and the nations of Europe and the world, that the times of tribulation spoken of in Scripture as anunciatory of the latter days, had already come. The foundations of industry, order and prosperity, seem to be tottering. Governments are corrupted, people rebellious, enterprise paralyzed, trade and commerce languishing, and individuals bankrupt. Suffering and distress prevail everywhere to a most unusual degree. Wars and rumors of wars, famine, pestilences and earthquakes in diverse places, increasing wickedness, and heart-sickening casualties and crimes startle the community, and large multitudes exclaim: What are we coming to? The answer seems plain.

The world is hastening to its destiny. Prophecy is fulfilling, history completing. The kingdoms of this world are being disorganized that they may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. The nations are filling up the cup of their iniquities, which shall turn in their hands into the cup of the Lord's fury. Leaders of false religions are binding upon their followers heavy burdens, and grevious to be borne, which are destined to be thrown back with crushing weight upon their own heads. Communities are laying up for themselves "wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God," and individuals sinning with a high hand against knowledge and love, are provoking the Almighty to a just retribution. Let the Lord's people be aw zealous and active for the Master, liant and uncompromising against waiting for his appearing, by brightness of whose coming the of sin is to be finally destroyed.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 15, 1879.

IN our Letter Drawer will be found some appeals for help. Let those of our brethren who can assist the poor in their sufferings remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that "It is more blessed to give than to receive." We will try to do a little.

OUR old patrons are quite generally renewing their subscriptions for 1879. We hope all will do this as soon as practicable, as we are dependent upon current receipts for the publication of our paper. We are living in the grandest period of the world's history. We are just at the very closing of this dispensation, and each passing year will rapidly fulfill the few remaining items of prophecy belonging to this age. THE RESTITUTION will not be needed much longer to herald the coming One and the establishment of his kingdom. We are nearing a most fearful crisis in human affairs. Let us work, watch, pray, and sacrifice for the cause of truth. A crown of glory is at stake and our present opportunities are more priceless that jewels. Treasures in this world will soon be of very little consequence.

GREAT IMPENDING CRISIS.

Signs as Given by Paul, Peter and John.

J. P. WEETHEE.

In our last number we examined the declaration of Christ, "For as in the days of Noah (were), they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not;" "also, as in the days of Lot," "so shall also the coming of the Son of man be," dwelling particularly upon the point of similitude, "eating, drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not." To the features of these times predicted, allow us to introduce testimony from Paul, Peter and John.

1. Paul.

Paul, like his Divine Master, has given us a prophetic chart on which is delineated a certain character, whose [illegible] from his days to the return of our Savior. His description is as follows:

"Let no man deceive you by any means; for (that day shall not come,) except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

"And now ye know what withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth (will let) until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming. (Even him), whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thess. ii. 3–12.

This character was working in Paul's day. Verse 7. The present position of that power is a sign of the near coming of Christ. In consequence of what Paul had stated in a former letter, ("We which are alive,") they were looking for the Lord's immediate return, and were neglecting to "occupy." To correct this error, he gives them a chart of the life of the man of sin, stating that he would be consumed by the Spirit of Christ's mouth and destroyed by the brightness of his coming.

2. Who is that power?

There is a great apostasy—"a falling away." Verse 3. This defection is further described in 1 Tim. iv. 1–3. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly (by an audible voice to me, Acts x. 10, 20; xiii. 19; xvi. 6; xxi. 11,) that in the latter times (gospel times) some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils [illegible] speaking lies in hypocrisy; [illegible]ake, [illegible]science seared (burned) [illegible]rig- [illegible] forbidding to marry, [illegible]evil [illegible]ng) to abstain from [illegible] the [illegible] meats.

3. Its Scripture names.

[illegible]man [illegible]he man of sin," "the [illegible]n," 2 Thess. ii. 3, and [illegible] Verse 8.

4. Its Scripture character.

He is the child of the great "apostasy," grew up under its instructions, and became its head. His character is further learned from his names, "man of sin," "son of perdition," "lawless one," his words (doctrines); and from his deeds. He was first a secret worker and teacher. He soon took his position in the "temple of God." He taught Christians to give attention to the (a) instructions of seducing spirits, and (b) doctrines of demons, (c) forbidding to marry, and (d) commanding to abstain from meats.

5. Things not probable.

That one man could ever fill the bill of these Scripture specifications. There is too much for one person to do, and they are extended over too long a period.

True, the singular number is used. So the papal hierarchy says; but similar expressions are often found in the Scriptures: Jesus, "the just (man)—all the just. Rom. i. 17. Paul, the bishop, every bishop. Titus i. 7. John, the deceiver, many deceivers. "The woman Jezebel," Rev. ii. 20. "The harlot mystic Babylon," Rev. xvii. 5. In verse 7 [illegible] "he who restraineth"—Roman civil rulers, the emperor being chief. So the lion, bear, leopard, the seven-headed and ten-horned wild beast. All kingdoms and churches are governed by the same rule. In all these instances the succession is intended, and not any one man in it. By the word papacy we mean the whole succession of 265 popes, not any one pope. The succession is singular, various splices, as when a very lengthy cable is wanted.

6. It is not probable—

That the same Spirit should map the papal power so minutely on the prophetic chart (they are one) of Daniel and John, and put nothing of that power on Paul's chart, or say nothing about it, or that he should note the life of such a terrible character as the man of sin on Paul's chart, and give John no intimation of it.

7. It is not reasonable—

That two such persons as the "man of sin" and the "harlot"—mystic Babylon, should occupy the same seat in the temple of God at the same time, or part of the time, utter the same words and do the same deeds, without being one, or, at least, intimately associated.

8. There has been but one great apostasy, covering the whole Christian era.

9. Please follow us while we trace the prophetic and fulfilled history of this power, that you may be able to discern that its present position is a sign of the coming of Christ.

10. Prophecy.

Paul said: "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work." 2 Thess. ii. 7. It was secretly working in his days; only hindered from its full development by the undivided Roman empire. Such were the views of the early Christian fathers; hence they prayed for the perpetuity of that empire. Tertullian says: "We Christians are under a particular necessity of praying for the emperors and empire for its continued state, because we know that dreadful power which hangs over the whole world, and the conclusion of the age which threatens the most horrible evils, is retarded by the time appointed for the Roman empire. This is what we would not experience. And while we pray that it may be deferred, we hereby show our good will to the perpetuity of the Roman state." So write Justin Martyr, Origen, Ambrose, Hilary, Chrysostom, and others.

History.

This power was, in the apostles' days, in its childhood, unrivalled. The gospel was spread in countries filled with the disciples of Plato and Pythagoras. In Lesser Asia—about Phrygia—their doctrines were popular. Plato held that the government of the world was guided by inferior powers called Angels knowing ones. They carried messages to the gods from man, and returned their answers. They were called by the Jews and Christians, angels, or messengers. Plato required his disciples to worship the inferior divinities. Col. ii. 8. This worship got among some of the Christians at Colosse.

Pythagoras taught the doctrine of transmigration of souls. Some souls went into human bodies, others into brutes to be punished for former sins. Believing the whole brute creation to be souls, they abstained from animal food. They subjected the body to the soul by long fastings. Judaizers came among them, and recommended these practices. Hence the origin of the ancient heretical sects, such as the Marcionites, Encratites, Manichæans. These were austere in their manner of life. The Carpocratians were dissolute, and affirmed that, to them, all things were lawful. Thus were early Christians exposed to the doctrines and practices of heathen philosophy. The epistle to the church at Colosse had its origin in these errors, worship of angels, fastings and feastings.

These were secret workings, or mysteries. See Eph. i. 9. Dr. Newton says: "The foundations of popery were laid in the apostles' days, but the superstructure was raised by degrees; and several ages passed before the building was completed, and the man of sin was fully revealed."

11. Prophecy: Paul and Daniel Compared.

(a.) With 2 Thess. ii. 3: "And there be revealed the man of sin, the son of perdition." Compare Dan. vii. 8: "There came up among them another little horn; in this horn were eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things."

(b.) With 2 Thess. ii. 4: "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God. Showing himself that he is God." Compare Dan. vii. 25: "And he shall speak great words against the Most High." See Rev. xvii. 5; also Dan. xi. 36: "And the king shall do according to his will, and he shall exalt and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods."

(c.) With 2 Thess. ii. 3: "Then shall be revealed that lawless one." Compare Dan. vii. 26: "And he shall think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand."

(d.) With 2 Thess. ii. 8: "Whom the Lord will consume by the spirit (breath) of his mouth, and shall destroy by the brightness of his coming." Compare Dan. vii. 26. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy to the end."

History.—We do not here intend to repeat what we have written, relative to this power, as recently published in THE RESTITUTION. It is sufficient to refer the reader to that history.

Prophecy.—"Sitteth in the temple of God." What and where is this temple? The Romanists say at Jerusalem. That temple was never called the temple of God by Christ's apostles, after the death of Christ, but, by that term, always meant the Christian church. 1 Tim. iii. 15; 1 Cor. vii. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 19-21. The body of believers is the temple of God. 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; Rev. xi. 1. The man of sin [illegible] to take his seat among the believers [illegible] a Christian, and by degrees [illegible] their head. In that position he [illegible] elevate himself above all that is called God.

History.—The one-man power, called the papacy, or man of sin, which was held, successively, and exercised, by 265 bishops in the Christian church, commenced its secret working of iniquity in the days of the apostles. At first all bishops had equal authority. No one set of bishops or overseers assumed control over others. They were all brethren. All the churches were under the supervision of the apostles, and, consequently, all irregularities in doctrines or practices were referred to them for adjustment. Paul said that he had the care of all the churches. During the lives of the apostles no great apostasy could gain any public position in the churches. Heathen practices followed some heathen converts into the distant congregations. Corrupt teachers worked secretly, but the apostolic epistles kept them in check. Soon after the apostles were removed by death, the churches, falling into the hands of uninspired men, began to be rent by the labors of Judaizing and other corrupt teachers, and then began to be fulfilled that predicted by Paul, Acts xx. 29, 30. "For I know this that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." He exhorts them, "Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood." vs. 28. For protection and greater security, bishops presiding over churches in large cities began to assume authority not granted in the original constitution of the church.

This assumed power gradually enlarged as the church increased in numbers till the general organization of the church took the form of the Roman empire. The church had its divisions to correspond with the divisions of the empire. As the rulers having the supreme civil authority to their respective provinces resided in the metropolis, so the bishops residing in such capitals were called metropolitan bishops, taking rank according to the rank of the supreme civil officer. Thus, the bishop of Rome, dwelling in the metropolis of the whole empire, gradually took a position above all other bishops.

As the doctrines and practices of the church became more corrupt, the church government assumed a closer resemblance to the empire. The doors of church (temple of God) were thrown wide open to the heathen world, and multitudes entered with all their previous notions and idolatrous practices. The masses in the churches were converted to heathenism. During the Pagan Roman Imperial dominion the ingathering was small and purer. But as soon as the hindrance was partly removed by the conversion of Constantine the Great, the church being popularized, there was a rush of all classes into the temple of God, and this man of blasphemy took his seat.

Thus have we followed that power through its infancy to the years of its youth in the days of Constantine the Great. In our next number we shall follow him through his youth to his manhood.

The Heavenly Calling. Heb. iii. 1.

The Upbuilding of God's Elect. Phil. iii. 14. A holy calling. 2 Thes. i. 9. Called to suffer. 1 Pet. ii. 21.

In God's order of things, the suffering is before the exaltation. If we suffer with him we shall reign with him. When the beloved disciple addresses us he uses these words:

"I, John, who am also your brother and companion in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ."

Instead of saying that he is in the kingdom of Jesus Christ, as Elder C. affirmed the other night in his discourse at Everett, Mo., he says that he is our brother and companion—copartner, or sharer—in tribulation, and copartner in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. If he is a companion or copartner in these things with his brethren, he shares them in the order in which they come. In the kingdom and tribulation are mixed up, and we have the kingdom at the same time we have the tribulation, or, in other words, if we have to pass through the tribulation while we are in the kingdom, then might the plea be made that John was in the kingdom.

But our beloved brother Paul says "it is through much tribulation that we must enter the kingdom."

We have what is called the gospel, or good news of the kingdom, but if we enter into tribulation, who wants the kingdom? What is the import of the phrase, "good news?" But men will not enter the kingdom upon trial—no, not even for six months. First [illegible] is this; second, approval; and third, admission into the kingdom. With Christ the suffering was first, and after this the glory; and his time of tribulation lasted during his life in the flesh; and he said to those who suffer for his name, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

But the crown is not given at death, but "when the Chief Shepherd shall appear." This is God's order: the tribulation, the conflict, the race, the good fight of faith first; then the crown, the glory, the reign, the exaltation. After the Lord's return, what John said each one of the elect can say to one another, "I am your brother and companion in tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ." Being an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ, each can say, "I am your companion, I share in common with you in the tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ."

Let me say to all who are beloved of God, called to be saints, called to share in the triumphs of the kingdom, I am also your brother and companion in tribulation, and companion, or copartner, in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. The tribulation I now share; but if I am in the kingdom I know it not. But I must take these things in God's order—the tribulation first, afterward, the kingdom. If I am in the kingdom at the same time he was in the tribulation, then what evidence have we that the tribulation will not last as long as the kingdom? Is the kingdom a kingdom of tribulation? I am willing to concede that there is a great amount of trouble in the so-called Christian church, although it sets up the claim that it is the kingdom of Jesus Christ. If this be so, the kingdom was not set up till the nineteenth century, instead of the day of Pentecost, for the organization had no existence before the days of Mr. Campbell any more than the Methodist had before the days of Mr. Wesley; and if this organization is the kingdom it has Mr. Campbell for its founder instead of Jesus Christ.

Some are occupying a critical position, for Jesus has said, "He that gathers not with me, scatters abroad." If the Elder is gathering for that kingdom, of which he is a chief officer, and that kingdom is not the kingdom of Christ, then he must be against Christ, and, for one, I am compelled to regard all churches in this light that claim to be the kingdom of God. If the church founded by Mr. Campbell is the kingdom of Jesus Christ, then when one unites with that church, he is in full possession of all that was promised in connection with that kingdom, and must needs die out of the kingdom and so lose it at last—then what? Who will arise and explain? If the kingdom is enjoyed in this life, and in this world, "What shall we have, therefore," in the life and world to come?

J. C. KELSEY.

Daniel xi. 45 and xii. 1.

In the consecutive prophecies of this book and also in the book of Revelation, the fourth or Roman kingdom is clearly represented from its rise to the end of the present dispensation, as a universal supreme power. Consequently in our interpretation of these verses and context, Rome must have its place without an interregnum or a superior. In chapters vii. and viii. it is represented as a unit, and in chapter ii. it is as much a unit as the two feet and legs of a man are parts of a man. These verses read thus: "And (he) he shall plant the tabernacles (2) of (his palaces (3) (both plural) between the seas (4) in the glorious holy (4) mountain, (or mountain of its light; margin). Yet shall he (5) come to his end and none shall help him. And at (6) that (7) time shall Michael (8) stand up, the great prince, which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time (9) of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that time, and at that (10) time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." All these several events (ten in number) are so blended and united as to the time of their fulfillment as to render a separation next to impossible. They evidently center around the one great event of the establishment of the kingdom of God at the end of Gentile times.

But who is the "he" (1 at is to "come to his end and none shall help him?" The answer has often been given during the late Russian-Turko war, that it is the Mohammedan or Turkish nation, and that this prediction would surely be fulfilled in that war! Well, the war is ended and enough of Turkey still exists to disprove this assertion, and also to preserve the eastern feet of the great metallic image till it is smitten by the kingdom of God upon his feet, agreeably to chap ii 34. This expression "feet" (plural) evidently includes both the eastern and western divisions of the Roman kingdom in this view. This kingdom is called in chapter viii. a king of fierce countenance, who shall destroy the mighty and the holy people, (agreeably to the prediction of Moses in Deut. xxviii. 50,) and was fulfilled by imperial Rome at the destruction of Jerusalem. In verse 25 it is said, "He shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hands." These quotations, with a multitude of others that might be given, clearly teach that the Roman kingdom in its aggregate is the "he" that shall come to his end and none shall help him.

In the two feet of this metallic image, are located the only two seats of empire ever occupied by Rome. Both of these feet in turn desolated Jerusalem. The eastern division was the last, under Mohammedanism; while at the same time the eastern division under papal Rome, or St. Paul's man of sin (2 Thess. ii.) desolated the Christian Church.

When the emperor Constantine removed the imperial throne from Rome, he pitched it at Constantinople, between the seas, (the Mediterranean and on the Bosphorus) on account of its delightful location for governing the world, its rich scenery, and its salubrious climate, in all which respects its equal was not to be found. This city alone filled the prophecy in its [illegible]ority of numerous imperial tabernacles and palaces scattered for miles on the bank of the Bosphorus. In all these particulars the prophetic mould is exactly filled, which justifies faith in its application. If others think otherwise will they please give us a more perfect fulfillment which will be accepted with all thankfulness.

The late Russian war in connection with the Berlin conference, most evidently accomplished the drying up process of the great river Euphrates, of Rev. xvi. 12, and has opened a way for the gathering of the kings of the east (or toward the rising of the sun, Whiting's translation) for the battle of that great day, a little in the future after the coming of Christ; the work of preparation is now far advanced.

Question: If the prophecies relating to Rome, its diversified forms of government, with its two central localities of government have all been fulfilled, is it consistent to assume (as some do) that there is yet another power to rise called "anti-Christ," as the antitype of the two horned beast of Rev. xiii. 12, 13, which is to exercise all the power of papal Rome, described in the ten first verses of that chapter? I think not; because there is no warrant to be found in any of the consecutive prophecies either of the Old or New Testament Scriptures for such a king or form of government. If brother Wilson can point out such a vacuum, he will then have some ground for such an application. Truth, and not assumption, is what is wanted upon this as well as all other Bible doctrines.

Has Elijah Come.

This was the heading of an article written some time ago for THE RESTITUTION by Wm. Shepherd in which he took the negative—that Elijah had not come, but that his coming is still in the future. From this view I am forced to widely differ, as the writer seems to deduce his conclusions rather from his own judgment and reason, than clearly from the word of God, that John was not the Elijah that was to come.

As the question has been stirring up the minds of the readers of THE RESTITUTION, and as there can be no harm in presenting the subject in another, and, as I hope, a more satisfactory light, I will endeavor to prove that Elijah has already come, and that we need not look for another. Taking the word of God we will begin with the transfiguration, and see what Jesus teaches us there. In Matt. xvii. 10–13, we read: "And his disciples asked him, saying, why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spoke unto them of John the Baptist." Now, according to the writer's theory Elijah has not come and Jesus says he has come, and which statement shall we receive? In Matt. xi. 13–16, we read: "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was to come." Seeing that the law and the prophets foretold that Elijah was to come and Jesus bore testimony that John was the Elijah that was to come it seems that the writer of the article in question must admit on the testimony of Jesus that Elias has come. We now turn to Luke i. 17, "And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Here we have a literal fulfillment of Mal. iv. 5.

Again, Mark ix. 11, the disciples "asked him, saying, why say the scribes that Elias must first come? And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of Man, that he must suffer many things and be set at naught. But I say unto you, that Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him." The writer claims that John did not restore all things and puts the coming of Elijah in the future, but do the Scriptures teach that the restoration of Israel will be done by Elijah? By no means, for the Apostle Peter says of Jesus that the heavens must receive him until "the times of restitution of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began," and John came as Elijah, teaching repentance for the remission of sins, and to prepare the way of the Lord. I hope the readers of this article will candidly study both sides of the question, and distinguish carefully the plain teachings of Christ. Seeing that we have this evidence that Elijah has come already, therefore we do not look for another.

The Coming Rest.

RUTUS KENDALL.

How glorious and bright is that mansion in heaven
That Jesus my Savior has gone to prepare
For all God's dear children to whom it will be given.

For there, in its kingdom forever will share.
The Savior will lead them to life's flowing river
To drink from its fountain forever and ever,
And bathe in the ocean of infinite pleasure,
And sing alleluiah to God and the Lamb.

There all my dear brethren in Jesus my Savior
Of every nation united will be,
And back in the sunbeams of His divine pleasure
Where sickness and sorrow forever shall flee.
The Savior will clothe them with robes bright and splendid;
By seraphs and angels they will be attended,
And every voice will together be blended
In shouting all glory to God and the Lamb.

Then come, my dear brethren, here still on probation
In life's world of sorrow, affliction and pain,
Be valiant for Jesus, stand him in your station,
And soon in that mansion a place you'll obtain.
The Savior will give you a crown of bright glory,
With joy you'll rehearse redemption's good story;
The glassy sea of fire there spread out before you,
You'll sing the high praises of God and the Lamb.

O come, dying sinner, we're look for to leave you;
We want you to share in that mansion of bliss;
The Savior is willing and waits to receive you;
His heralds are sounding the tidings of peace.
The spirit is wooing, the bride is a calling,
And Babylon's merchants are trembling and falling;
O fly to that Savior all heaven extolling,
And join in the praises of God and the Lamb.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I would offer, without presuming to be correct, a few suggestive thoughts:

1. I look for the personal and pre-millennial advent of the Lord Jesus Christ; and it appears to me that the "signs of the times" indicate the near approach of that glorious event.

2. I expect the literal restoration of literal Israel—the house of Judah, and the house of Israel—or the whole twelve tribes, to the land of their fathers, to take place in part previous to Christ's visible appearing, and to be finally consummated after that event, and the war of Armageddon.

3. I have an impression that Elijah will come about four years previous to Christ's advent; that he will be the Messiah's herald, and the messenger of the "new covenant" to be made with the house of Israel and the house of Judah.

4. It appears to me that the two witnesses, mentioned in Rev. xi., are distinct from the Elijah; that they will appear shortly after Elijah appears; that they will be two remarkable prophets, endowed with wonderful miraculous power from God, and that during the 1260 (literal) days of their prophesying they will proclaim the "gospel of the kingdom" throughout the entire world.

The gospel of the kingdom was proclaimed three and a half years at the first advent, until Christ was rejected, and the violent took the kingdom by force, casting out the Son of the husbandman by putting him to death.

After the rejection of Christ, the proclamation, "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," was never again uttered, either by Christ or any of his followers. The house of Israel was left to them desolate, and the kingdom of Christ was postponed until God should take out of the Gentiles a people for his name. The moment Christ was rejected he left the temple and never entered it again, but crossed over to the Mount of Olives, and delivered to certain of his disciples that memorable prophecy recorded in Matt. xxiv., Mark xiii. and Luke xxi., in which he clearly declares the kingdom distant. Therefore, when the "times of the Gentiles" are fulfilled, I look for the "gospel of the kingdom" to be again proclaimed, this time to all kindreds and tongues, "for a witness to all nations; and this proclamation, I believe, will be made during the unparalleled tribulations (τῆς θλίψεως τῆς μεγάλης, the tribulation, the great one) which is about to come upon all the world.

5. About the the commencement of this great tribulation I expect a personal Anti-Christ to arise, who will be a resurrection man—"the son of perdition"—Satan manifest in the flesh—the angel of the abyss, and the beast or eighth and last head of the Roman empire, who will deny that Jesus Christ is coming (not has come) in the flesh. He will proclaim himself to be the world's Messiah, and all the world will worship him, whose names are not written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

6. The two-horned beast, or false prophet, will, I presume, be two individuals, who will counterfeit the miraculous work and testimony of the two witnesses. Spiritualism and socialism appear to be the elements now in operation for the speedy advent of the beast and false prophet, both of whom, together with the beast's ten kings, will be destroyed by the visibility of the Lord's advent at the battle of Armageddon.

7. I have an impression that Christ and the resurrected saints will not reside permanently on the earth during the millennial age, but that their abode will be in the heavenly city, which I verily believe will be within sight of the earth; and that Christ and his redeemed ones will visit the earth, perhaps at stated periods, such as at the "feast of tabernacles," etc., a viceroyalty being established on David's throne, by one of David's lineal descendants, who will be the Prince spoken of in the last chapters of Ezekiel. Millions of the heathen will then be converted to God.

8. Circumcision being performed on the eighth day after birth, it appears to me that it signifies that the promise to Abraham will not be completely fulfilled until the eighth thousand years arrives, the seventh thousand being "the times of the restitution of all things."

In conclusion, let me say that the probability of the restoration of Israel, commencing about the Great Pyramid year, 1881 or 1882. We appear even now already to have entered upon "the beginning of sorrows" that betokens the breaking up of this dispensation. S. RUSSELL.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find $2.00 for THE RESTITUTION another year. I have been very much interested and pleased perusing it the past year, and say, as many others have said, I would not know how to do without it. The principles and doctrines it advocates are dear to me, and are, I think, sustained by the word of God. We, as a people, have great reason to be glad, and rejoice in the Lord that he is raising up and sending laborers into his vineyard; men who are able ministers of the New Testament, and who, like the well instructed scribe, are able to bring out of the store-house of the Lord (the word of God) things both new and old; and as wise master-builders, clearing away the rubbish of ignorance and superstition, and build on the sure foundation Christ Jesus. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace. How comforting and encouraging to the way-worn Christian pilgrim the precious promises of God in his word, who, like some anciently, are looking for a better, a heavenly country—a city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. It is encouraging to the lovers of the great an glorious truths of the Bible in regard to the return of the Jews to the land of their fathers, and the soon-coming of Christ to set up his kingdom and reign on the earth, that a deeper interest is being awakened in the minds of many who are searching to learn what the Scriptures say about it. Some are embracing the truth, while others are trying to obscure the true light from shining.

A minister in this place has been preaching and lecturing on the prophecies. He said that Isaiah lxv. 8, concerning a nation being born at once, was fulfilled on the day that the declaration of American independence was signed; and that this republic is the little stone cut out without hands the Prophet Daniel spake of; and spoke against the idea of the Jews ever returning to Palestine; it was so small a place. I'd said this land is where they will gather, if gathered at all. There is a great deal of ignorance and misconception in respect to what God has done and what he proposes to do, as revealed in his word, with the earth and its inhabitants in the future, particularly the Jewish nation. I have been thinking that if a little space could be used in your valuable paper for a series of home Bible readings on those great leading truths of the Bible, say a chapter for each day in the week, beginning where the subject is first brought to view, and tracing it through from Genesis to Revelations, such a course of reading would be pleasing and profitable, and might bring many into the light and liberty of the sons of God. These suggestions are presented not to dictate, but with a desire that the cause of truth may be advanced. You can judge of their fitness or propriety far better than myself.

Yours in the love of the Truth,
RUFUS KENDALL.

Editor Restitution:—In November I held an interesting discussion with Elder J. W. Hodgen, at the Christian Church, at Woodland, California, which continued seven evenings, and was well attended. The questions were the "Intermediate State," and "The Kingdom." I hope good may result.

On the 5th of December I commenced a series of meetings in Lake county, in this state. The first two evenings the meetings were held in a school house in the country, and then were transferred to Kelseyville, where I gave two discourses, to apparently interested audiences; and the interest increased to the end, and very many took references and went to searching to see if these things were so. We used the Pre-byterian meeting house, which cost $1.00 per night and $2.50 for Sunday, and night. I thank the friends for their kindness to me. At the close of the meeting it was voted that they wished me to return in the near future, which I hope to be able to do s on. Several persons expressed themselves as almost ready to become obedient to the gospel. Brother James C. Stone and his excellent family reside in that neighborhood, and it was partly on account of the influence which they have exerted in talking, and circulating THE RESTITUTION and tracts, that I received such a welcome reception by the people. There are a number of places from which the Macedonian cry of "come and help us," has come, to which I cannot at present respond. Oh! that there were more laborers in this large field. Cannot some of our eastern brethren come to this coast and aid in this great work? In many places the people have become tired of the old stereotyped rehash which has been doled out to them so long, and they desire to hear something new (to them) and more rational. The majority realize that some great change must soon come and they desire to hear from God's word what that change is. I am resolved to do all I can in the cause. I am enjoying excellent health, and do not have asthma any more. For all of which I thank God.

Editor Restitution:—I embraced the faith about seven years ago; was baptized into the Christ by C. W. Herron; have lived in the same hope ever since I came to Carthage, about four years ago; attached myself to this little body since that time. The greater portion of the brethren have moved away, but some have fallen asleep. Last January I was confined to my bed, and since that time I resorted to every remedy and every physician in this city and no relief, and it is impossible for me to turn myself in bed. I have spent everything that I have possessed, and now who will aid me while on my dying bed? I have a wife and four helpless children; they are destitute of winter clothing. The city is furnishing something to eat, but will do nothing more. And now, with these few lines I shall say no more. If any one should feel like giving his little mite, it can be sent to me at Carthage, Jasper county, Mo.

Your brother in hope, knowing that God has chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom,
ROBERT J. MATHIS.

Carthage, Mo.

Brethren:—Let me say that this brother is bound to die. He has become a skeleton. I don't think he would weigh over sixty or seventy pounds. I have done all in my power for him, and am doing and will do to the extent of my means, though I am very poor. I labor by day; work for my living. There are but three brethren here besides myself in this city, and all very poor, scarcely able to live. There are others in the surrounding country, yet this afflicted brother gets no comfort from any of them; not one ever comes to see him; but four or five attend our meetings. I have tried with all my knowledge to keep the flock together and to build them up, but despite of all instruction and words of encouragement, both from myself and our beloved pastor, C. W. Herron, now residing in Benton county, Arkansas. May God add to his blessing for his faithful work. Remember the commands, brethren, if one member suffer, all suffer with it.

Yours, in the blessed hope of the soon-coming kingdom,
THOMAS M. HERRON,
Elder of the Church of God at Carthage, Mo.

P. S.—Send in some money to this poor brother, and direct all letters with money to aid him to Robert J. Mathis or T. M. Herron, Carthage, Mo.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:—I appeal to you in behalf of a sick and suffering sister, Mrs. Mary Ongley, widow of Elder Wm. Ongley, who spent many of the best years of her life going from place to place with her companion, preaching the Word. Many of you have heard her preach; some of you were converted under her labors. She is now at her husband's daughter's in Havana, Schuyler county, New York, in destitute circumstances, sick and helpless. Wm. Ongley was my husband's father; Mary was his third wife. They lived near us, and we took care of them some six or seven years before father died. The next spring after his death she sold what she had here, amounting to about one hundred dollars, which she took with her, and went to her daughter, Mary Elizabeth, where she is now. The money was spent in taking care of her; since that was gone, we have helped what little we could. Brother J. B. Cook has helped some, and some few others, but the burden has mostly fallen on our sister and family; but they are very poor and unable to get things for her comfort, now that she is so sick and helpless. Sister writes to me that she does not think it possible for her to live till spring, and thinks that if the brethren only knew how needy she was, they would be willing to help. Whatever is done, must be done quickly, for she probably will not need help long. Now, who of all the Lord's stewards, who have enough, and to spare, will come forward and help bear the burden and so fulfill the law of Christ? Remember our Savior says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Send in your donations to Mrs. M. E. Forest, Havana, Schuyler county, New York. Either money, food, or clothing, will be acceptable. The Lord loves the cheerful giver.

Your sister in Christ,
ADAH ONGLEY.

EASTERN ITEMS.

The Viceroy of India telegraphs confirming the news of General Roberts, victory over the hostile tribes, but says that, owing to rumors of threatened attacks by the Mongols, General Roberts intends to return to Kooram, concentrating his forces, which are now much scattered. Friendly letters have been received from several Sirdars of Cabul. The general feeling in Afghanistan is very strong against the Ameer and Russia.

Major [illegible]eman reports that authentic intelligence has been received that [illegible] Khan has disbanded his army and left for Candahar. General Stewart was one day's march from Candahar on the 8th of January. He expected no opposition.

The enemy opposing General Roberts in the fight of Tuesday numbered 6,000.

A correspondent with the Quetteh column telegraphs from Sifoodin, Tuesday, as follows: One hundred and forty British cavalry yesterday defeated a body of Afghans, killing twenty-four and capturing nine. Twelve hundred Afghan cavalry were subsequently forced to abandon the heights by cannonade. Seven British were wounded. It is thought this skirmish will cause the Afghans to decide not to defend Candahar.

The Journal de St. Petersbury says the Ameer entered the Russia territory, not in consequence of the success of the British, but to invoke the mediation of Russia. The Ameer will receive sympathetic hospitality, but the idea of a mediation is an illusion, upon the clearing up of which will probably depend the continuation of his journey.

A Lesson for the Times.

Moral training in our schools should lead the young, as they approach mature years, to seek for work as one of the greatest blessings God has bestowed upon man. In no other way can our schools do so much to solve the question of tramps and vagabonds as by impressing, daily, upon the minds of the children the dignity of labor. It is one of the forgotten lessons of our fathers which this age has yet to learn. The most essential thing for a young man who has his way to make in the world next to the grace of God, is the grace of hard work. The hand which shoves the plane, which swings the ax, which handles the plow, is as necessary to our perpetuity and progress as a people as the brain which writes our poetry or frames our laws.

The British Museum has lately acquired a small fragment of a terra-cotta tablet, containing parts of the annals of Nebuchadnezzar. The portion relates to his thirty-seventh year and a war with Egypt.

A Free-Will Offering.

We, the undersigned, having the good of the cause of truth at heart, and believing that it is our duty to sustain the gospel with our means as well as our prayers, and believing that God will bless us for all the offering we make in behalf of the truth, have paid the sum set opposite our names for the purpose of freeing THE RESTITUTION from debt, and sending it out as a messenger of truth to those sitting in darkness, and to comfort those who are walking in the light of life:

POETRY.

[New York Observer.]

Christmas Song.

WORDS BY STEPHEN H. THAYER.

On Judah's hills the sun had set;
The moon rode high o'er Olivet;
The starry skies, in watchful rest,
Leaned o'er the blue lake's peaceful breast;
Fair Sharon's roses on the air
Were breathing out their fragrant prayer,
And o'er the sweet and holy calm,
The dews of Hermon shed their balm.

In that blest hour of peace and love,
Bright angels left their home above,
To bear to the unconscious earth,
The story of a Savior's birth.
To tell how God's beloved Son
Left for a time his royal throne,
To bring to our unworthy race,
The riches of his Father's grace.

Well might the herald angels then
Sing peace on earth, good will to men;
And all the host of Heaven reply,
All glory be to God on high!
And earth take up the joyful song,
And rolling years the notes prolong,
Till all creation join the strain,
And shout at once the glad Amen!

What Would I Do for Thee?

L. M. BURGESS.

What would I do for Thee, Lord? dear Lord,
To die for Thy sake would be only joy;
More than that, I would live for Thee,
And every hour in Thy cause employ.

Patience should hate—for Thy sake, dear Lord—
Its perfect work, though my heart be torn;
What grief could ever to me be sent?
What sorrow, Lord, that Thou hast not borne?

What would I do for Thee, Lord? dear Lord
Give me Thy grace and Thy pleasure teach,
And the Difficult Hill I will gladly climb
If only Thy hand mine own may reach!

Blest be the day when some work, dear Lord,
I may do for Thee, tho' my heart it wring!
And grant me Thy peace that in darkest hours
I may Thy constant praises sing.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Was the Design of Miracles Limited or Unlimited.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

The following promise of Peter is adduced to prove the unlimited design of miracles:

"And Peter said unto them, Reform, and let each of you be immersed in the name of Jesus Christ, for the forgiveness of sins; and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. For the promise is to you and to your children, and to all who are afar off, as many as the Lord our God may call." Acts ii. 38, 39, Diaglott. In reference to which please observe—

1. The pronoun you referred to that Jewish congregation, who represented the Jews all over the world, and their children near by and far away from Jerusalem, not far down through future ages. The word-for-word translation reads, "To you for is the promise and to the children of you, and to all those at a distance, as many as may call the God of us." This was to be the area of the apostles' labors. Christ said to them, "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Acts i. 8.

Thus, Jerusalem was the center from which the apostles should go all over the earth. In returning to their homes these three thousand messengers would carry the promised gift of the Spirit to their families and neighbors, to Samaria near by Jerusalem, (to whom the apostles were not permitted to preach in their first commission), and to those countries far away from Jerusalem, Judea and Samaria. Thus, wherever the apostles went they found disciples who had been taught by these three thousand gospel preachers. It would be the most natural thing in the world when they were scattered abroad and went everywhere preaching the word, that many of these fathers would return to their families and teach them the same promise of the Spirit which had been taught them by the apostles.

2. The promised gift of the Spirit cannot, by any inference drawn from the foregoing language of Peter, be carried beyond the lives of the apostles and those [illegible] the promised gift of the Spirit was then and there made, or the generation to whom they preached.

The promised gift of the Spirit was to those Jews who were converted on the day of Pentecost, and their children, and the contemporaneous Gentiles to whom the apostles should preach verbally.

3. The promised gift of the Spirit was not designed for all obedient believers, the same as the promised forgiveness of sins. Peter did not say, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit. If he had said so, then one who obeyed the gospel would [illegible] ceived the gift of the Spirit the the remission of sins. There olding this conclusion. But men and women who believed, , and had a gospel baptism, not receive the gift of the [illegible] wit.

We read: "But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12. Here were men and women, concerning whom inspiration says they believed and were baptized; but did they receive the gift of the Holy Spirit? Most certainly they did if the faith and obedience of the gospel were the only requisites to the receiving of this gift. Neither Philip, though invested with power to work miracles himself, nor compliance with the conditions of pardon, would enable those men and women to receive the promised gift of the Spirit, or power to work miracles. See verses 15, 16. Thus we read: "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power that on whomsoever I lay hands he may receive the Holy Spirit." Acts viii. 14-19.

Please observe—

1. That not one of these Christians received the promised gift of the Spirit as a reward or gift for the faith and obedience of the gospel.

2. Philip, although he could work miracles himself, yet he could not confer this miraculous power upon those whom he caused to be baptized.

3. Christ's authorized agents, the apostles, had to go to where these brethren were, and lay their hands upon them before they received the Holy Spirit.

The gift of the Spirit was not conferred upon all believers, but only on "whomsoever the apostles laid their hands." It does not follow because the gift of the Spirit was only promised to obedient believers that therefore all of this class could claim the promise.

According to the original promise, "these signs" were "to follow them that believed" the apostles' preaching. Mark xvi. 17, 18. According to the foregoing reference, the apostles were not to work miracles themselves to confirm the word they preached but they would select from among believers, brethren upon whom they would confer power to work miracles. This would be more convincing than for these strangers to have worked miracles. It would demonstrate that there was no collusion. When the Jews accused Christ of being in collusion with demons, he silenced them by referring them to their sons upon whom he had conferred power to work the same miracles he had worked.

The language that "on whomsoever the apostles laid their hands" implies that none but apostles could confer this power. Of the same import is the history of the twelve disciples of John, upon whom the apostle laid his hands and they spake with tongues, thus evidencing that miraculous power had been conferred upon them. Paul asked these disciples if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed: "And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." Acts xix. 1, 2, 3. The apostle having informed them that John required faith in the coming Messiah, they believed and were baptized. But did they receive the Holy Ghost, per consequence? Not at all. It was necessary that the apostle should lay his hands upon them before they could receive the gift of the Spirit, according to Christ's prearranged plan. Thus we read, "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them, and they spake with tongues." Verse 6. In reference to which please observe—

1. The faith and obedience of the gospel was not sufficient to enable these disciples to claim the promised gift of the Spirit.

2. The apostle Paul must lay his hands on them, or no miraculous power would be conferred.

God fulfills his promises through the use of his appointed means. To do otherwise would grant indulgence for his authorized agents to defy his authority, and thus set a dangerous example before all his loyal subjects. Upon what other principle can the necessity be urged for the apostles at Jerusalem going down to Samaria, and laying their hands upon those Christians that they might receive the Holy Spirit, if they had already received that promised gift through the faith and obedience of the gospel? Why was it necessary that Paul should lay his hands upon those twelve whom Silas had evidently baptized, as the only means revealed by which they received the Holy Spirit? If Paul had baptized those twelve, he would have enumerated them with all he could remember having baptized, in his letter to his Corinthian brethren. If Silas baptized these brethren, why did he not bestow the gift of the Spirit also? The only answer to this pertinent question is that it was Christ's order that on whomsoever the apostles laid their hands they should receive the miraculous gift of the Spirit, which was originally promised to none others, and through them, as his authorized agents, to others.

3. Those who received the promised Spirit gave evidence by speaking with tongues or working miracles. This is apparent from the examples in the foregoing history. Where such evidences as the apostles and those to whom they conferred the power to work miracles are given, no arguments are necessary to convince men. In the absence of such evidence they have no valid claims for faith or confidence. If they could drink deadly poison and remain unhurt, or speak with a resurrection voice, and the dead should hear and come forth; or if, like the elders upon whom this power was bestowed, they could lay hands upon those afflicted with the most incurable diseases, the moment before they breathed their last, and they should rise clothed with perfect convalescence, their high claims to apostolic power would rest upon the same foundation upon which the demonstrations of Christ and his apostles stand.

Having referred to the elders appointed by the apostles or their agents, I will now invite attention to the source of their extraordinary power. I do this to confirm the foregoing positions that the apostles were the mediums through whom miraculous power was conferred upon others.

Addressing Timothy, who was an elder, having been set apart by the laying on of the apostle's hands, and to caution him to be very careful not to lay hands upon an unworthy person he said, "Lay hands suddenly on no man. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." 1 Tim. v. 22; iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6.

From the foregoing we learn—

1. That miraculous power was conferred by the laying on of the apostles' hands. By reference to Acts vi, it will be seen that those brethren were chosen as deacons upon whom the power to work miracles had been previously conferred. There can be no question but what it was just as necessary that his apostles should lay their hands upon these men's heads as upon those at Samaria, the twelve disciples of John and Timothy. The fact of this power having been conferred upon these brethren previously to their being set apart for the office of deacons, and that therefore this divine arrangement had been reversed, is utterly inadmissible, and very unreasonable.

2. According to this divine order it may be easily understood why it was necessary to send for the elders to heal the sick. James referring to his brethren, said: "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick; and the Lord shall raise him up." James v. 15. The apostle appeals to one of the most stupendous miracles to inspire confidence in the miraculous power of these elders. Thus he says: "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not upon the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." James v. 17, 18. Thus teaching that these apostolic elders were invested with the same miraculous power that Elijah was, and by which was worked one of the greatest miracles recorded upon the pages of inspiration.

Please observe—

1. According to the word, in reference to Timothy, bishops, or elders were appointed and endowed with miraculous power by the laying on of the apostles' hands.

2. The evidence of the promised gift of the Spirit was the same miraculous power by which Elijah demonstrated the superior power of Israel's God above the gods whom Jezebel and her false prophets worshiped. Thus, no such demonstration, no evidence of apostolic elders, and no apostolic elders, no elders who can restore the dying, or work miracles in healing the most deadly maladies, or miracles as great as Elijah wrought in closing the windows of heaven that it rained not for three years and a half; and then, opening these celestial windows, and genial showers watered the earth.

3. If all Christians had power to heal the sick, why was it necessary to send for the elders to heal them? If there were not elders within a thousand miles the promise that the prayer of (miraculous) faith should raise up the sick could not be claimed; and would not be honored in the answer of prayers offered by other agents, however strong their faith might be, any more than he would have been honored, or would have answered the prayer of any other man, except through his divinely appointed agents. God never has or will answer a prayer, or promise suspended upon conditions, unless these conditions shall have been complied with. The only reason why no such healing power has been manifested since the days of the apostles has been the fact that there have been no apostolic elders because there have been no apostles to appoint them.

The Light Shines.

Yes, the light must shine. In its very nature, in the law of light shining inheres. "The greater light—the sun—was to rule the day; and the lesser light to rule the light—the stars also." Gen. i. 14-19.

Thus, the entrance of thy word giveth light. It is a lamp to our feet and a light unto our path.

The light of revelation, like that of the lightning of heaven, asks no leave to shine; for it must shine. But it seems curious that some who should stand on the rising crest of the wave of light, to herald its progress and aid to open blind eyes, and achieve its beneficent triumph among the ignorant and benighted of our race, should falter and fail in their duty through a paltry fear that hath torment! The fear seems begotten of distrust of truth and its author and finisher, as if neither were safe or divine except under their patronage.

Thus thought the Jewish teachers of Jesus and his apostles and disciples. Thus thought the pope and cardinals of Luther and the reformers. A sample is given from the N. Y. Witness:

The Rev. Dr. John Hall recently said: "There is growing up over the country a small, irregular force of men many of them (however under-educated) following the example of Mr. Moody, and to a large extent, teaching—with more or less consistency and publicity,—what are called 'pre-millennial views,' and so getting ready themselves, and preparing some others for entering into 'Plymouth-brotherism,' if a man can be said to enter that which is without landmark or definite boundary. Some of them are already 'brethren' of the 'open' kind—one of the earlier stages of the disorder. In the full development of the thing all churches are denounced as corrupt and worldly organizations, from which all saints must come out, and the ministers of which are money-loving or place-loving hirelings. What should be done? Two things: Ministers had better do their own evangelistic work in their bounds rather than engage these men; and secondly, in their sermons, Bible classes, and week-day lectures, pastors should teach the truth on such topics as have been suggested."

This statement of fact by Dr. Hall, as to the spread of prophetic light, this covert complaint of evangelistic preaching of the second coming and reign of Christ through the thousand years (Rev. xx. 1-7), and this exhortation to pastors to teach the truth (the word of God, of course,) on such topics, indicates more than a little bewilderment of mind and heart, because this zealous minister—Dr. Hall—owns up on the main point, though reservedly, for his better judgment would have the truth on these topics, taught, though by the pastors and teachers. Yes! Yes! we say; by all means! Set the whole force of pulpit and Bible class to the good Gospel work of giving echo to the words of Jesus and his apostles as to the second coming and kingdom of Christ.

If the uneducated (unlearned and ignorant men, Acts iv. 13,) are at fault in giving the trumpet a certain sound, you and all the wise should do as much better as possible. But all should know that no millennium can come with the pope, grand, Turk and devil in it! Nay, more, that none but Christ can conquer and put down all rule, authority and power to the last enemy death, and restore all things spoken 1 Cor. xv.; Acts iii.

The word from the Judge is "Be ye ready also! Blessed is that servant who shall be found so doing."

Trustworthy information from Brazil states that small-pox is fearfully scourging some parts of that country, and that in November last more than 30,000 of the inhabitants died of this disease. In the city of Cera the deaths averaged 600 a day. The Emperor of Brazil has telegraphed to the representatives of his Government in Washington to procure and forward at once all the vaccine matter that can be obtained. All that can be procured will be shipped by the next steamer to Rio Janeiro.

A mistaken notion of the Christian unity spoken of in the Scriptures, which represents it as consisting in having one community on earth to which all Christians belong or ought to belong, and to whose government all are bound to submit, has led to truth being made secondary, and not the paramount object.

Daily Consecration.

It is not that the act of consecration has to be made over and over again; but that we are to regard it as of unceasing and binding obligation—and of unending and gladsome privilege as well—all our lives. It is but the work of a moment to unite a man and woman in the covenant of marriage, but in the force of that vow they walk together until death separates them. If there are moments of estrangement followed by reconciliation, they do not find it necessary to have the marriage ceremony again performed, but recognizing the fact that the obligations assumed on the wedding-day have never ceased for a moment, they forgive each other their mutual lapses, and never regard themselves as anything but husband and wife. In the covenant relations entered into with our Heavenly Father at consecration, we assume like obligations. If any lapses occur, they are all on our side. Let us at once confess them and seek forgiveness, and never allow ourselves to imagine that our vows have ceased to be binding, or that all is lost because by some fault of our own a temporary cloud has come between us and the face of our Beloved. Sink into self-nothingness and self-abnegation, and continually say, "Not as I will, but as thou will," As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord in entire surrender, so walk ye in Him.

Few English churches and church yards are more crowded with graves, tombstones and rural monuments than the quiet place at Stratford-upon-Avon where Shakespeare is buried. It is probable that no new graves will be opened there in future.

BREVITIES.

In Lahore, India, there are nearly 1,400 boys and more than 200 girls in the mission schools.

It is a noteworthy fact that more than three-fourths of the missionaries of the American Missionary Society have been women.

The German excavations at Olympia continue to be most prosperous. On the 24 instant the explorers discovered the chief entrance of the so-called Pompey Gate. Beyond it the ruins of a building came in sight, which are probably those of the Leonidaion.

A supplement of the Official Gazette of St. Petersburg, Russia, announces that the plague in Astrakan, which was abating, has revived with great virulence since the recent thaw. The authorities of Saratow are taking every precaution to prevent the spread of the epidemic.

A new flower of gigantic proportions has been found in the forests of Sumatra. Its average diameter is thirty-three inches, and the discoverer has given it the specific name of "Titanum." Odoardo Beccari, a traveler and naturalist well known in Europe, is the fortunate finder of it. He dispatched six boxes of the bulb roots to Italy.

Mrs. Drake, of Muhlenburg county, Kentucky, has an apple which has been in existence since the Revolutionary war. A soldier received the apple from his betrothed just as he left to join the army of Washington; kept it during the whole war; returned after the surrender of Yorktown and married the fair giver. The apple is sacredly preserved in the family. It is dry and shrivelled, nothing remaining but the woody fibre.

Dr. Schliemann is again reported as making valuable discoveries on the site of Troy, (Ilium ever full). His latest "find" is a bronze vessel, in which were some bronze axes, as well as silver ornaments; the bulk of the contents, however, consisted of gold earrings, bracelets, beads and bars of gold. The Turkish government is very hard on explorers now, claiming the lion's share of all that may be discovered.

A Key West paper reports that the waters of Florida Bay have been in such a putrid condition for the past twelve months that fishermen have been unable to get fresh fish across to Havana. The poisonous waters are said to extend 150 miles into the gulf. Dead fish of every description are found floating on the surface. No explanation is offered, but the result would seem to be due to the action of some sub-aqueous volcano.

Of the toll bestowed upon the manuscripts found in Pompeii and Herculaneum a writer to the Standard says: —The result of all the labor that has been bestowed upon the unrolling and deciphering of these long buried manuscripts is, that the process of making them legible costs more than it comes to. It is not likely that any more pains or expense will be spent upon them. One fruit, however, of what has been done, is to add confirmation to the evidence of the antiquity of the oldest manuscripts of the New Testament. The Vatican and Sinaitic manuscripts, and a few other fragmentary ones, esteemed the most ancient, are found to coincide very nearly as to the form of the letters with these Herculaneum Rolls, in regard to the antiquity of which there cannot, from the nature of the case, be any doubt whatever. In manuscripts of later date, these forms are departed from more and more widely.

A PROPOSAL TO FLOOD SAHARA.

M. De Lesseps, whose activity puts to shame the strength and powers of endurance of men who have reached only half his age, has just returned from a short trip to Tunis. He had a double object in visiting the African coast; to bring home the remains of a brother who died out there, and to investigate the possibility and the advisability of letting the waters of the Mediterranean into the Desert of Sahara, so as to convert a great portion of that desolate expanse into an inland sea. M. De Lesseps says that the Arab chieftains of the south of the Aures keep up the tradition of there having existed in former times a sea in that neighborhood from 500 to 600 leagues in circumference. He also has been enabled to disprove the idea that the formation of a new lake would do away with the oases, for he has discovered that these are all from fifteen to twenty meters above the level of the sea, whereas the desert itself is below that level. Traces of Roman civilization—where did not those wonderful colonizers penetrate?—have been found in the desert, and among them the remains of an amphitheater like that in Rome.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the full restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates, as a leading Bible truth, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the overturning of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a literal belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as a fruit for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Restoration of Israel.

That God is going to restore the scattered twelve tribes of Israel to the land of Palestine, and make them a prosperous and righteous nation forever, is a truth very clearly and prominently set forth in the Scriptures of the prophets. We purpose to present a number of prophetic utterances confirming this truth. We will begin with the following:

"And I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin; and I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning; afterward thou shalt be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city." Isa. i. 25, 26.

This language is addressed to Judah and Jerusalem, for by reference to Isa. i. 1, it will be seen that Isaiah saw in vision the things concerning Judah and Jerusalem. The language indicates the cleansing of the nations of Israel, and the restoration of their judges. He will purge away their dross; this is explained in the following language:

"And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me," etc. Ezek. xx. 38.

"And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem; when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning." Isa. iv. 3, 4.

"I will restore thy judges as at the first." This is explained by the answer of Jesus to Peter, when he asked him the following question:

"Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee: what shall we have, therefore? And Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Mat. xix. 27, 28.

From this it is proved that when Jesus and his disciples in resurrection glory are seated upon their thrones, the twelve tribes of Israel will be in existence and judged by the disciples in fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah before referred to. This judgment of the twelve tribes of Israel is not to consign them to eternal perdition; on the contrary, it is for the well-being and prosperity of the nation, as the judges at the first were for the well-being and prosperity of Israel.

Concerning the future of Israel and her judges, Psa. cxxii. gives a glowing description, showing that at that time Jerusalem will be builded as a city that is compact together; whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord. For there are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David. Then Jerusalem will be called the city of righteousness.

Another prophetic utterance that I wish to call attention to is the following:

"And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea." Isa. xi. 11, 12.

Here it is declared that the Lord is going to recover Israel the second time; and a second time presupposes a first time. Only two recoveries of Israel are brought to view in the Word of God. One in part, the other is future. And if they are not recovered in the future the Word of God will fail, and the Scriptures will be broken--which is impossible.

This proves, then, beyond all doubt, the future recovery of Israel. First they were recovered from the land of Egypt under Moses. The twelve tribes complete passed from Egypt into Palestine. All subsequent returns from captivities were only fragments of the entire nation of Israel or the whole living twelve tribes.

The second recovery will be a complete recovery of all the living twelve tribes of Israel:

"Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them; and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers."

Another prophetic utterance is as follows:

"And now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by pestilence; Behold I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God; and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul. For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them." Jer. xxxii. 36-42.

Thus, just as truly as God has brought all the evil upon them, just so truly will he bring all the good upon them. When will God perform all the good he has promised to Israel? Let the Word of the Lord answer:

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah. In those days and at that time will I cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, the Lord our righteousness." Jer. xxxiii. 14-16.

This proves that God performs the good unto Israel in the days when the Branch of Righteousness is executing judgment and righteousness in the land. And as the reign of Christ, the Branch, is in the future, so the prosperity of Israel is in the future.

Another prophetic utterance is the following:

"Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land they defiled it by their own way, and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman. Wherefore, I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon my land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it; and I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way and according to their doings I judged them. And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land. But I had pity for my holy name which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went. Therefore say ye unto the house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God. I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went. And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Ezek. xxxvi. 16-28.

This prophecy clearly shows that the house of Israel that went into captivity and were dispersed among the heathen because of their evil doings is the house of Israel that is to be taken from among the heathen and restored to their own land. How can such Scriptural evidence as this be disputed.

Again, the restoration of Israel is shown to the prophet Ezekiel in the thirty-seventh chapter by a valley full of dry bones, which, upon receiving the breath of the Lord became covered with flesh and quickened into living beings, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army. This, of course, is a figurative allusion to the national condition of the house of Israel when the time for their national resuscitation arrives. The dry bones represent the whole house of Israel. How exactly does the "phrase, "dry bones," illustrate the national condition of Israel ever since Jerusalem was overthrown. But ere long the time will come for these inspired words to be fulfilled:

"Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city, for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise and sit down, O Jerusalem; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion. For thus saith the Lord: Ye have sold yourselves for nought: and ye shall be redeemed without money," Isa. lii. 1-3.

Hosea also agrees with the spirit of prophecy, saying:

"Come, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. After two days will he revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." Hosea vi. 1, 2.

After two days, or two thousand years--for "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day,"--thus comes the revival of Israel; in the third day or third thousandth year will they be raised up. This synchronizes with Daniel's 2,300 year-days, during which the sanctuary and the host are trodden under foot, and at the end of which comes the restoration of Israel and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom of God.

Further on, in Ezek. xxvii., by the unity of two sticks representing the two houses of Israel, the Lord reveals to the prophet his determination to "Take the children of Judah and Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land, and make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." At this time will be fulfilled that prophecy which says: "Ephraim, or the ten tribes, shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Isa. xi. 13.

The restoration of Israel will be the surprising sequel to a mighty effort on the part of a confederacy of nations for the purpose of blotting out the name of Israel from under heaven. See Psa. lxxxiii. The prophet Joel speaks thus on the subject:

"For, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all the nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage, Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." Joel iii. 1, 2.

Micah also speaks thus:

"Now, also, many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his counsel; for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion, for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth." Micah iv. 11-13.

Zechariah also speaks thus:

"Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." Zech. xiv. 1-3.

Now, as the bringing again of Israel's captivity is to take place at the gathering of the nations, and as the gathering of the nations is in the future, it unmistakably proves that the restoration of Israel is future. This gathering of the nations to Jerusalem to battle constitutes the battle of the great day of God Almighty, Rev. xvi. 14; and is the time of Jacob's trouble, Jer. xxx. 7; but he shall be saved out of it, for at that time Daniel's people shall be delivered. Dan. xii. 1. Then will come the fulfillment of this glorious prophecy:

"Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgment, he hath cast out thine enemy; the king of Israel even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: Thou shalt not see evil any more. In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not; and to Zion, Let not thine hands be slack. The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save thee, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing." Zeph. iii. 14-17.

Thus will Israel's nationality be restored. For thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar. The Lord of hosts is his name. If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me forever. Thus saith the Lord: If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off the seed of Israel for all they have done, saith the Lord. Jer. xxxi. 35-37.

Who will call for stronger proof for the restoration of Israel? And these prophetic utterances are only a few of the very many that unite in foretelling the glorious and eternal destiny of that nation whom God hath "formed for himself, that he might shew forth all his praise." Israel shall yet "blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruits."

God's eternal purpose concerning Israel and the nations is one of the overlooked subjects of divine truth by the great majority of Gentile Bible readers. And the great majority of Gentile ministers are seeking to accomplish what God has determined to accomplish by means of the regenerated house of Israel, viz: the conversion of the world. As God shone upon the heart of the apostle Paul to give the light of the knowledge of God to the elect of the Gentiles, so will God shine upon the remnant of Israel to declare the knowledge of God's glory to the Gentiles that shall go up from year to worship the King of all the earth.

Bride and Subjects of the Coming Kingdom.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Questions of interest daily occur to those looking into the future. In reply to a request published in THE RESTITUTION, allow us a few hints and suggestions relative to the above topic. We shall not pretend to exhaust the theme, lest, in the effort, we appear dogmatic. We would rather be pupil than teacher.

The Bride.--The holy Jerusalem (Rev. xxi. 9) is called the bride--the Lamb's wife. That city John describes (Rev. xxi 10-27; xxii. 1-5). This seems to descend on the new earth (Rev. xxi. 1-7).

The city is called the bride as it is the home of the bride and will contain the bride--(by metonomy) the container takes the name and character of the contained.

The marriage is a previous event; how long we know not. It may be many (1000) years; perhaps only a few. This will depend on the duration of the reign of subjugation, and the identity of this city and river with the river and city seen by Ezek. (xl. xlviii.) Ezekiel sees a temple; John's city has no temple, but the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb Rev. xxi. 22. They may very as to size. This is a difficult question. As Ezekiel's vision was during the captivity in Babylon, his division of the land, his city and temple were, perhaps, a pattern for them to follow when they should return from that captivity (Ezr. xliii. 10). Only a small remnant returning from the captivity, the pattern was not followed.

The wife of the Lamb is named in Rev. xix. 7-9: "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him. For the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousnes of saints. And he saith unto me, Write, blessed (are) they who are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb."

There are invited guests distinct from the bride, who are honored at the supper. The enemies of the bride are overthrown and judgment is executed on the harlot, and on kings (Psa. cxlix. 7-9).

Her preparation is the righteousness of her husband--the Lamb. It is her strength and her beautiful garments (Isa. lii. 1; lx. 10). The bride is brought to view in other passages. Jesus in some of his parables points out his bride. See Matt. xxii. 2-14; xxv. 10; Luke xiv. 15. In Matt. ix. 15 we have the following: "And Jesus said unto them, can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast." See Mark ii. 19; Luke v. 34; John iii. 29. John Baptist calls himself a friend of the bridegroom. The bride-chamber should be noted, since it shows where will be the home of the bride and bridegroom after the marriage. Paul says (2 Cor. xi. 2), "I am jealous over you with godly jealousy; for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present (you as) a chaste virgin to Christ." Paul had betrothed them to Christ by persuading them to believe the gospel. The betrothing is in this life, the marriage in the age to come. The spouse of Christ must be a chaste virgin, since the wife of the typical high priest was to be a virgin. Lev. xxi. 13.

In Eph. v. 27, it is said, "That he might present it (the church) to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

The bride of the Lamb, is therefore a chaste virgin--a church free from idolatry, having one husband, and following him "whithersoever he goeth." Rev. xiv. 4. They are children of faith Heb. xi. 13 to the close, and would include all of that class redeemed before the marriage. Those converted during the age of subjugation would constitute no part of the bride since they come into the family after the marriage. We do not understand why the Messiah's age of triumph and power should be called a kingdom, unless its elementary construction is similar to that of other kingdoms, having a territory, people or subjects, king, officers, laws and a government, (Isa. ix. 17.) Since the bride and bridegroom are one in law, Christ and his bride are one, (Eph. v. 25-27; Col. ii. 19.) Joint heirs, (Rom. viii. 17.) (Gal. iv. 1, 7.) See 2 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

In one sense, the bride is composed of subjects--the bride is subject to her husband; each child, therefore, is individually a subject; yet he is a joint heir and an officer.

Why should the bride, aggregating all its members to the marriage be called a bride, and the union a marriage, unless there is an analogy between this marriage union and other marriage unions?

If this be true, then, there must be other persons present besides the bridegroom and his bride. A wedding has guests and servants, both classes having their positions, and are subject to the laws of the occasion. In a kingdom all are not officers, or there would be no subjects.

In the typical kingdom, there are kings, priests, and subjects. (See Zech. iii. 1-9.) As it should have been organized (Eze. xl. to xlviii., it would have been a typical nation to which the anti-type Rev. xxi.-xxii. would have agreed. The bride and the nations are distinct, (Rev. xxi. 24-27.)

The bride is composed of joint heirs, kings and priests, (Rev. i. 6; v. 10.) The Jews were to be a kingdom of priests, Exo. xix. 6, God being their king; but the future shall be a nation of kings and priests being joint heirs with Christ.

After the marriage, and during the reign of subjugation, all subdued will be distinct from the bride.

He must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25. During that reign the bride is with Christ, sharing in all the triumphs and honors, Psa. cxlix. 9.

Promised Revival of Sodom and Gomorrah.

It is reported that French capitalists have secured a grant for a railway line from Jaffa to the interior of Palestine, which will open up the Jordan valley and the whole region north of the Suez canal. In certain contingencies this road might become of great military usefulness, but it appears further that the productive resources of the country are considerable, and what is more surprising, that the Dead Sea itself can be turned to commercial account. Chief of these at present are the stores of natural combustibles for which that region is noted.

Hitherto the main obstacle to the development of steam traffic in the Levant has been the total absence of combustible material. Not only Egypt, but the shores of Syria and the Red Sea are completely stripped of wood, and the coal imported from the West commands a price ranging from $10 to $24 a ton. Now the masses of asphalt continually thrown up by the Dead Sea attests the presence of vast subterranean layers of fossil vegetable matter, and these signs were not long overlooked by the enterprising men attracted to Suez by the opening of the canal and the movement of commerce in that direction. Recently numerous soundings have been made between Jaffa and the Dead Sea, which, so far, have laid bare inexhaustible beds of lignite.

Of itself this store of lignite is likely to prove an inestimable gain to the industries and commerce of the Levant; but we should add that the juxtaposition of asphalt in great quantities furnishes the elements of a mixture of lignite and asphaltum in the form of bricks, which is equal in heating capacity to the richest bituminous coal, while its cost on the ground is only $2.50 a ton. It is known that similar bricks, made up of coal dust and bituminous debris from gas works, are much sought after by French railways, since, besides their heating power, they greatly facilitate stowage, owing to their regular shape. Of course the bitumen of lower Palestine has been known from immemorial times, was used to impart solidity to the structures of unbaked clay in Assyria and Egypt; but it may be said that the discovery of the subterranean combustible has lifted once for all the curse which has so long rested upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and will transform the wasted shores of the Dead Sea into a focus of industry and a magazine of wealth.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 22, 1879.

THIS makes four numbers for the current month. Our next will appear early in February, as our finances only admit of four papers each month.

OUR apologies are due to some brethren who sent in obituary notices while we were sick with chills and fever. Some got misplaced and did not appear on this account.

WE are flooded with manuscript, and do not write much editorial that others may have all the room possible. Will resume and finish our article on trine immersion as soon as we find room.

THROUGH the kindness of Brother G. W. Young, we have received a copy of the New Zealander of Dec. 6, 1878. It hails from Wellington, a town on an inlet of Cook's Straits. It seems strange to read a paper distant nearly half around the world both in latitude and longitude.

WE hope our friends will exert themselves for the prosperity of the paper. We have interesting matter on hand for succeeding numbers on matters bearing on the fulfillment of prophecy. It is for these few last years of this dispensation that a paper treating on the literal fulfillment of prophecy is needed. We assure our brethren that we will do all we can, personally, for THE RESTITUTION.

Suggestions to Students of Prophecy.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Before entering upon the discussion of interesting prophecies you will please allow us a few introductory suggestions, hoping that they may be of service.

1. When a prophecy has been repeated in history, do not look for history to repeat itself, for if one repetition is required any number may take place, and there would be no certainty in any prediction. One might contend for the first fulfillment, another the second, and onward through an infinite series.

2. When investigating any prophecy take the following course: 1st examine critically every term, singly noting those that are literal, and that are figurative. Fix a definite meaning to every word in each class, substituting each figure or symbol to its special laws. After this work is accomplished, construe the whole according to its true and proper analysis. 2. Examine the time, circumstance, and design of the prophecy, noting all the Scriptures that will explain or illustrate the whole or any part of prophecy.

3. Decide whether the prediction has been accomplished. If so, when, where, and by what agencies and what is its practical lesson?

4. If its fulfillment is in progress, show the past, the present, and the future of it by deducting the sum of the past and present from the whole prophecy.

5. To accomplish this work fully, place before you two charts; the one containing the analyzed prophecy, the other an outline history of the world, ancient and modern. Do not conclude that, because you, with a very limited knowledge of the world's history, cannot readily fit the prophecy to history, there is no fit, and consequently, its fulfillment is in the future.

It requires but little knowledge to say that a prophecy is unfulfilled; but most profound knowledge of the world's past record, to show intelligently and to demonstrate when, how, and by what agencies predictions have been accomplished.

If every person, before attempting to commit his prophetic imaginations to the public, would rigidly follow the above suggestions, our prophetic expositors would be very much reduced in number, and those that presumed to write would utter their thoughts with modesty. They would not rush in where angels fear to look.

6. Do not estimate the amount of truth in any production by the dogmatic assurance of its author. To produce a great momentum a light article must have much velocity. Many write of the future with a greater degree of fluency than of the past.

Letter from England.

Brother Chaplin:—If I could get a copy of a letter of Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, concerning the Afghan war, I would send it you. This is placarded in the streets by members of the Liberal or Peace Party. It is clear the Bishop is right in declaring the war on the part of the British Government inexcusable on Christian grounds. I think I shall not err in saying that the frankness, the courage, and the direct appeal of the Bishop to the teachings of our Lord, are worthy of admiration. But wars come; and here we have an outbreak which the "Liberal" party pronounce unjustifiable, and which we think is unpopular. Depend on this, Brother Chaplin, a tremendous stir is imminent. The war in South Africa is no trifling matter; but on account of the upheavals in Europe, Asia, and Egypt, it is not much noticed by the people. Still it draws seriously on the resources of the nation.

The Prince of Wales is awake to dangers. His mother is not indeed old; only in her sixtieth year; but her life is not viewed as safe as it was awhile ago. The Prince has been bent on securing the friendship of France: this the English people plainly see; but the awful future may be miserably disappointing to the calculating Prince. Wisely did England keep from interference in the Franco-German war; so neither power can justly accuse her of partiality. But the Prince is aware of this, that of all the continental powers it is most important to have France on his side, should the throne be in danger.

The suspension of two more banks and the ruinous failure of Fenton's Rochdale bank, add to the perplexity and distress which the failure of the city of Glasgow bank began. Yet, appalling as the distress is, strikes are announced here and there; and private jobs have been declined because employers would not quite grant the price asked. "It seems," said a Christadelphian brother, who gave me some facts, "that men are mad." Belgians, and other foreigners, have good, profitable work, which Englishmen have refused, because they wanted a higher rate. What suicidal folly!

Our Queen is afflicted by the death of the Princess Alice; and this, happening on the anniversary of her father's death, has added to the sorrow of the event.

Winter here has set in early, and with uncommon severity. Thank God, many who have abundance have contributed to the relief of the sufferers who are tens of thousands in Lancashire alone; and the cry of distress comes from other counties continually. Yet, strange though the fact may appear, London seems the least affected. I doubt, however, if the vast Metropolis will long continue so remarkable in exception. It holds more people than the six New England states combined contain.

Ere this reaches you another year will have begun; and it may be our last in this mortal state. May we greet each other ere long in immortality. H. HEWES.

P. S.—Only the morning after I finished the foregoing, news of distress in London was announced, and the Queen promptly gave £200—the first donation reported. Alas! the cloud on the land darkens. The cautious Manchester Guardian is obliged as a truthful chronicler to tell its readers day after day the terrible facts; and some from districts whence distress was scarcely heard of for a long time.

The failure of the West of England and South Wales District Bank has brought down families of the middle class from affluence to want. Those who know the sensitiveness of this class can well conceive the intensity of their sufferings. "To beg they are ashamed;" and I am sure many will endure much, rather than own their cutting deprivations. The Times has held out some hope of improvement when 1879 opens; but the great organ spoke, as it were, tremblingly. Are we on the verge of the end? or are the "distress and perplexity" ("anguish of desponding nations"—Wakefield's Translation) setting in upon the world before the translation? Let us, who are waiting, look well to ourselves. Let us satisfy our individual selves about our preparation. Organizations are shaken, And shaking will go on. Brethren and sisters will have their trials in circumstances; let us know the Lord for ourselves. H. H.

The work of fortifying the two lines of defence of Constantinople proceeds with great activity. The government factories are occupied in the manufacture of 10,000 wagons and barrows for the conveyance of the material, cartage of earth, &c. These fortifications will, when complete, be armed with 800 guns of large calibre. The defensive works are constructed in parallel lines, so that the first is commanded by the second, the second by the third, and so on. They are connected by trenches, with embankments serving as shelter for the infantry. Since the armistice preceding the conclusion of peace between Russia and Turkey, twenty-nine vessels have arrived at Constantinople, mostly from America, with large cargoes of rifles and cannons, and the Turkish troops are now armed as completely as on the eve of the Russo-Turkish war.

To the heart that is full of kindness, every other heart beats in kindness.

SELECTIONS.

Cincinnati Commercial.

The Astrakhan Plague.

The disease now ravaging the district of Astrakhan is the "black death," which for ages has had its home in Egypt, Syria, Greece, Turkey and the adjoining provinces of Russia, to which countries it is now chiefly limited. The people in the first infected districts are dying, the reports state, like flies. So rapidly has the disease spread that fully 70 per cent. of those of the newly infected districts have perished. No one dares touch the dead, and they lie unburied in the streets.

In the commencement of the disease there is a feeling of weariness and fatigue, shivering, nausea and sickness, confusion of ideas, giddiness and pain in the loins. These are quickly followed by increased stupor and delirium, by pallor and flushing of the face, and a feeling of intense swelling or constriction about the heart. Darting pains are felt in the groins, armpits and other parts of the body. The lymphatic glands become enlarged, and carbuncles appear. The tongue becomes dry and brown, and the gums, teeth and lips are covered with a dark fur, while the bowels, which are at first constipated, become relaxed and dark; offensive and sometimes bloody discharges are frequent. The will loses its control over the muscles. About the second or third day livid spots and stripes appear upon the skin. In fatal cases—and most are fatal—the pulse gradually sinks, the surface becomes cold and clammy, blood oozes from the mucous surfaces, and there is either coma or delirium. The victim usually lingers five or six days, and may pass away without a struggle, or in convulsions. It is said that infected persons might visit every country in Europe before the symptoms were recognized, and in this way endanger the whole world.

The plague may be spontaneously engendered by endemic or epidemic influences; it may originate from local causes, and may be propagated by peculiar contagion. Temperature seems to exert a very great influence over it. In tropical climates it is not known, and it does not long withstand the cold of northern climates. Its particular harvest time in Europe is late in the summer and early in the fall; especially in September. Like the germs of yellow fever, it has thus far evaded the examination of chemists and microscopists. As soon as absorbed it alters the composition of the blood and the condition of the tissues. There is no universal cure for it. In occasional instances fresh air may be of benefit. Cleanliness is generally a preventive, and it is due to this and superior ventilation that foreigners in the Levant are comparatively exempt.

In 1338, so Chinese historians tell us, there were great convulsions in nature, and earthquakes and floods, which were followed by droughts and famines. Hills and lakes disappeared, and the gases rising from the earth and decaying vegetation and animals rendered the air excessively impure. Following these convulsions came the great plague, and before it entered Europe 13,000,000 people in China and 25,000,000 people in Western Asia and Northern Africa had died.

It appeared in Russia near where it now prevails in 1348. Constantinople was attacked, and from there it spread over all Turkey. The disease was carried to Italy, and from thence to France, England, Germany and the Low Countries. From England it was conveyed to Sweden and passed over the Baltic Sea into Northern Russia. In only three years it covered the whole of Europe. Half the population of Italy died of it. Fifteen Continental cities lost 369,000 inhabitants, London 100,000, and in Europe 25,000,000 people perished.

The terrible disease was attributed by the superstitious to the Jews, who were accused of poisoning the wells so that the waters would breed pestilence. Entire colonies of Jews were massacred, and thousands were so terrified that they took their own lives. The disease was extensively spread by numerous bands of religious zealots, who visited town after town, torturing their bodies in the vain hope of expiating the sins of the people. These Flagellants, as they were called, comprised both men and women, who went about nearly naked, and each one wore a red cross upon their breast. The Church reaped a rich harvest, for many of its frightened subjects gave to it their all. The donors were obliged to throw their gifts over the walls of the inclosure, for the monks were afraid to come in contact with them, and shut the gates. Multitudes sought to escape the disease by living in caves and woods, and starved. Some endeavored to escape by the sea. They died, and the sailors who picked up their boats shared the same fate. Rotted bodies floated down the streams, polluting them and filling the air with the contagion. Some of the delirious victims ran through the streets of villages, tearing out the hair and scratching the faces of every one they met.

The plague of 1563, 1564 and 1565, the last that prevailed very extensively, produced fewer deaths. In 1720 Marseilles was almost depopulated, and in 1730 Turkey, Poland and Russia were again visited. From all reports the present plague promises to destroy as many lives as those of former years.

A PROPHECY REVIVED.

The Remarkable Paper Found in the Gatineau Cave in 1871.—"A King shall sit on the Northern Throne."

The Gatineau is a rough but romantic region, and a few weeks sojourn up in that district will take the sentimentality out of any ordinary human being. But it is a grand field for sportsmen; bears, deer, duck, geese, partridge, etc., being plentiful in their proper seasons, while the fishing is, in the summer exceptionally good. There are mountains of rock, dense forests, picturesque lakes, tiny rivulets, brooklets, and rushing rivers to charm the eye of the artist or cheer the heart of the pleasure-seeking tourist.

It is not of these things that we now intend to write, but to revive a prophecy that has in part been fulfilled, and which will be of peculiar interest at the present moment, inasmuch as its complete fulfilment would be of startling importance to the entire world, as having great political significance.

Some seven years ago, a California miner made it his business to go prospecting up the Gatineau. While scouring around among the lonely mountains he discovered a cave, and in it the skeleton of a man. The remains were evidently those of an Englishman of wealth, who had retired to the fastnesses of the forest years before to live a hermit life away from the haunts of men, as papers found in a crevice of the rock seem to indicate. Among the scraps of paper was a piece of parchment containing the following curious prophecy, which had in part been fulfilled at that period. The scrap as then published is as follows:

A PROPHECY.

The land is rich, and vast, and wide,
Laved by two oceans' restless tide,
Yet ere ten years their courses run
This mighty land shall all be one.
Where first into the Senate Hall,
The nation shall her rulers call,
A mighty man shall murdered fall.

But ere these years have onward past,
Grim war shall rule the Southern blast
And all the land with grief o'ercast;
The Northern land shall victor be,
The Southern land be cleft in three.

And ere a score of years have flown,
A king shall sit on the Northern throne—
The seer sees beyond his death,
This shall not be while I have breath;
But things shall come more great and weighty
Before the year eighteen and eighty.
In the wilderness, 1860.

The prophecy having apparently been written in the year 1860, its fulfilment in the several instances up to date is remarkable, to say the least. The seer wrote "Yet ere ten years their courses run, this mighty land shall all be one"—and in 1867, seven years from the time first mentioned, confederation was consummated and the Dominion of Canada came into existence. A year later, on the first assemblage of the Federal Parliament, came the death, by assassination, of the talented D'Arcy McGee, as brilliant a man as ever breathed the air of this free country. The prophecy of the rebellion in the states was quickly realized, breaking out in the fall of 1861 and extending over a period of four years, during which time scores of thousands of valuable lives were lost and the shadow of sorrow cast on as many households throughout the length and breadth of the neighboring Republic, as well as on those in this country, for many a native Canadian was laid low on the field of battle in the American war. "The southern land be cleft in three," read the prophecy, and so it was, by Sherman's march to the sea and Grant's on to Richmond, the two victorious armies dividing up the country into three parts when success finally crowned their efforts. The last prophecy has yet to be fulfilled. But will it be?—that is the question. The paper read: "And ere a score of years have flown, a king shall sit on the northern throne," and then, "But things shall come more great and weighty, before the year eighteen and eighty." It is a remarkable fact, taken in conjunction with the rumor that a Vice-Regal Court would be established in this country, that seven years ago, when the prophecy was first made public, there was no thought that one of the royal line would grace the Government House of Canada by her presence, as is now the case with the Princess Louise. We shall see what we shall see.

Palestine and the East.

Last month we noticed Lieut. Conder's papers, addressed to the Jews, through their most influential English paper, on the "Colonization of Palestine." The Jewish Chronicle, in a leader, has since recapitulated the chief points brought out by its correspondent, and driven home the appeal which he made for interest in the question. In concluding, it makes the following remarks: "The appointment of so enlightened a statesman as Midhat Pasha as Governor of Syria, affords adequate ground for believing that there are far brighter days in store for the Holy Land, and that they do not lie in a very remote future. The government of the country will certainly undergo a vast change for the better, seeing what kind of man it is that is henceforth to be at the head of affairs, and remembering, too, the stimulus to improved administration which he will receive in the shape of English influence. There is no reason why the tide of prosperity should not set in now for Palestine in earnest."

The same organ gives currency to the following statement, made by a London correspondent of the Leeds Mercury: "I can state as a fact, and not as a mere rumor, that a syndicate is actually in process of consolidation, which has for its sole object the purchase of Palestine from the Turkish Government and its restoration to the Jews in some form. I know, but am not at liberty to mention, the name of the Secretary of the body, which already numbers some very influential members, and I can vouch for the confidence with which the Secretary, who is not a member of the Jewish race or religion, but a well-known man, regards the future success of the scheme; and his experience of the world and knowledge of men are too important to be ignored."

Alongside of these indications of continued interest in Palestine itself, we find an abundant crop of rumors as to projects for the formation of the Euphrates Valley Railway. At a meeting, recently held in Stafford House, in connection with this, it was stated "that many Continental speculators were endeavoring to obtain concession for such a line from the Ottoman Government, but that the Porte would probably prefer to grant the concession to the British company presided over by the Duke of Sutherland." Stories have since appeared of negotiations between the Turkish and British Governments with reference, among other things, to the projected line. Seeing the matter is being so much canvassed, we may expect soon to see some definite move made of a practical kind. M. W. S.

EASTERN ITEMS.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 11.—The Journal de St. Petersburg to day says: "The Ameer of Afghanistan entered Russian territory, not in consequence of the success of the British, but in order to invoke the mediation of Russia. The Ameer will receive sympathetic hospitality, but the idea of mediation is an illusion, upon the clearing up of which will probably depend the continuation of his journey."

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Times in its leading editorial says: "We have every reason to believe that Yakoob Khan has already been officially informed of the terms on which we are prepared to make peace. Doubtless these are such as he can honorably accept."

A dispatch to the Times from Lahore states that there are stronger rumors that Yakoob Khan is quite disposed to make friendly arrangements.

Jan. 20.—A dispatch from Candahar reports that Generals Stewart and Biddulph are reconnoitering toward Khilati Ghizali, on the road to Cabul, and Girishk, on the road to Herat.

A dispatch from Lahore states that various unauthenticated rumors are current that Shere Ali is returning to Cabul.

CAPE TOWN, Dec 31.—The Zulu king has expressed a willingness to surrender some persons demanded by the British ultimatum, and pay a fine. He would also consider other demands if time were allowed. Sir Bartle Frere replied that the word of the English Government cannot be altered. The time for Cetywayes' reply expired on the 1st of January. The British troops are being massed.

JELLALABAD, Jan. 17.—The Khan of Kunor, supposed to be the most influential leader of the frontier tribes, has come into the British camp to pay his respects. It is generally believed that Yakoob Khan is disposed to treat for peace.

Inexhaustible beds of lignite have been found between Jaffa and the Dead Sea. This with the asphaltum, also abundant, will make the Holy Land a coal supplier for all Egypt and Syria, both of which having no wood, pay from $12 to $14 a ton for foreign coal.

BREVITIES.

In India there are now 7,551 miles of railroad in operation, of which 800 have double tracks.

In Brazil the ravages of small-pox are terrible. It is said that in Ceara it is impossible to make coffins to supply the demand, and the people dig ditches and tumble into them the unshrouded corpses, 8 or 10 at a time. As many as 500 or 600 die daily in the city of Ceara alone.

September 12, 1883, will be the two-hundredth anniversary of the delivery of Vienna from the Turks by John Sobieski. The municipality of the city has resolved to celebrate the occasion with special honor. The new Hotel de Ville is to be completed, and will be publicly inaugurated on that day.

The plague has appeared among the Cossacks of Astrakhan, Russia. During three days from Jan. 1–3, 143 persons died out of 195 attacked by it. The plague has now increased to a panic in Astrakhan and Saratow. The people die like dies and lie unburied in the street. General anxiety prevails throughout Russia.

The English company appointed for the revision of the authorized version of the Old Testament, have finished their fifty-second session. The first revision of the minor prophets was completed, and the revision of Esther was continued as far as the end of chapter ii. The company, since their first meeting on the 30th of June, 1870, have sat for 409 days, working six hours each day, and thus have revised the whole of the Old Testament for the first time, with the exception of part of Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song and Daniel. They have also been a second time through the Pentateuch. It is now positively announced that the New Testament will be finished in time to be issued in the spring of 1880, just five hundred years after John Wycliff completed the first version of the Scriptures in the English language.

Many people look upon the compass as an introduction of the fifteenth century, but it seems to have been well known in a primitive form in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. In one of the popular songs written in the time of King John, it is said that the sailors who go on long voyages to Friesland or to the East know their way by observing the tramontane, or polar star; but when the sky is covered with clouds, and they could no longer see the stars of heaven, they had a contrivance which was this: They took a needle of iron and put it through a piece of cork so that one end remained out; which they rubbed with loadstone, and then they placed it in a vessel of water, and whichever way the end of the needle pointed, there, without doubt, was the polar star. This formed a primitive but fairly perfect mariner's compass.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Aim high; but not so high as not to be able to hit anything.

What will it matter, by and by
Whether my path below was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light,
Under a gray or golden sky,
When I look back on it by and by?

When the million applaud you, seriously ask yourself what harm you have done; when they censure you, what good.

Prayer is the key which being turned by the hand of faith, unlocks all the treasures of the living God, for His children's use.

"Count that day lost whose low, descending sun Views from your hand no worthy action done."

The root of religion is the fear of God; the rule of religion is the law of God: the motive of religion is the love of God; the end of religion is to glorify God and enjoy him forever.

Home is not a name, nor a form, nor a routine. It is a spirit, a presence, a principle. Material and method will not and cannot make it. It must get its light and sweetness from those who inhabit it.

The cloud that hides the sunlight
Is no assurance is below,
For, reflected, upon its bosom
Shed hath set his covenant bow;
The night that gathers darkly
Around the mourner's path,
Its radiant constellations—
Its stars of promise—hath.

True honor results from the secret satisfaction of our own minds, and is decreed us both by religion and the suffrages of wise men—it is the shadow of wisdom and virtue, and it is inseparable from them.

The wise man makes equity and justice the basis of all his conduct. The right forms the rule of his behavior, deference and modesty mark his exterior, sincerity and fidelity serve him for accomplishments.

Ah! this is what I am wanting,
His lovely face to see,
And I'm not afraid to say it,
I know he is wanting me.
He gave his life a ransom
To make me all his own,
And he'll never forget his word to me,
His dearly purchased one.

Jesus My All.

E. D. NUTT.

Jesus, my Great High Priest,
My everlasting Head,
My Comforter, on Thee I feast,
For Thou art living Bread.

Dear Lord, to Thee I cling,
To Thee I look for aid;
To Thee I all my sorrows bring,
On Thee my hope is staid.

Thou art my Friend, replete,
Be Thou alone my guide;
Oh, make me pure, in Thee complete,
In Thee let me abide.

So let me ever live,
That when swift death shall come,
I may lie down in peace, and rest,
Till Thou, dear Lord shalt come.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Inclosed please find one dollar for THE RESTITUTION: money hard to get, is my excuse for not sending before. If some of the brethren qualified would intimate if it is the Messiah that confirms the covenant with many for one week, and finishing the part in the midst of the week, the Holy Ghost enabling the Disciples to finish the week with miracles following, Dan. ix. 27, it would oblige

Your brother in the Faith,
JOHN FOREMAN, SEN.

Denton, Texas.

Editor Restitution:—I see you have been again re-elected to edit our dear RESTITUTION. I am glad, yet I sympathize with you in the task; but be patient, the Lord will come soon and then we shall be rewarded for all our labors. I do hope the paper will be kept up until he comes. I am glad you have adopted a more safe principle to keep the paper out of debt. Let us have just as many papers as the money coming in will pay for, and I shall be satisfied. There are quite a number here that believe in the things advocated by THE RESTITUTION, but money is very hard to get here now; but the dear old RESTITUTION is an old friend; I cannot spare it as long as I can possibly get money to pay for it. I should have sent the enclosed sooner but my health is quite poor this cold weather. To-day I complete my sixty-eighth year. I feel as though I was verging near the foot of the hill. I have given myself and all that is mine into the hands of the Lord, and if I fall beneath the hand of the enemy I can say with Job, if I wait the grave shall be mine house until the Life-Giver comes. I am associated with Adventists here, and quite a number of others, because there is nowhere else we can go; and we think we can do them more good by being with them than by withdrawing. They held their annual conference here on the third, fourth and fifth of the present year. The hall was crowded. I thought what a good opportunity to present a little more gospel, but we did not get it; they have dropped definite time and do not preach quite so much fire, so I think there is some improvement. Oh, that the Lord would open their hearts and their eyes to accept of the remainder of the gospel, and throw away their error, is my heart's desire. Sister Jones, from Wisconsin, has been holding meetings evenings since the conference closed, and expects to stay another week. I think you would be surprised to see the number of people that turn out to hear in this backwoods country. I think if those of us that believe in the age to come were able to have some good brother come and stay a short time there might be good done, but I do not see any prospect at present. We must abide the will of the Lord.

Your sister in hope,
MARY BUSH.

Editor Restitution:—As deception and depravity are on the increase, I am more satisfied than ever that Bible truth and the religion of Christ must be supported by the few, while error and the popular religion of the day is supported by the many. This is sad to reflect upon, but the history of the past proves it true. "Many will say in the coming day, Lord, Lord, open to us; we have prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works. But the answer is, depart, I know you not, ye workers of iniquity." I was not as much elated as some by the calling of the late Prophetic Conference, neither was I very much astonished to know that Brother Magruder's paper, so truly Scriptural, was rejected. We cannot expect much from men that are willing to wear the titles, such as Rev., D. D., etc., forbidden by the Master. They may be compelled to acknowledge the truth by the strong logic of events. Even the centurion, and others with him, at a certain point of the crucifixion, was compelled to say, "Truly this was the Son of God." Now, I am willing to give all due credit to that conference. They have endorsed the Pre-Millennial advent of Christ, but a Rev. Editor of a Presbyterian paper published at Cincinnati, said they had no sympathy with Millerites or nominal Adventists. Now, it is well known that they who were called Millerites and Adventists, by way of reproach, are the very ones that made, and sent, the proclamation of Christ's pre-millennial advent into all the world; yes, to the very isles of the sea, so that the world and a cold, formal, lukewarm church, are without excuse if they are not ready for the predicted glorious event. That proclamation and its effect bears the marks of the divine impress. It was not gotten up by conference or convention, but by the Spirit of the LORD. Its effect upon the world produced great fear. Its effect upon the church produced the Philadelphian state. I testify to what I heard, saw, and felt, for I was a humble, earnest instrument in the movement. It will not be repeated, no more than the mission of John the Baptist, or the first advent. We are now in the tarrying time, the little while spoken of by Paul. Dear brethren, "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." "He that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame, and am sit down on my Father's throne." Amen, and amen.

Editor Restitution:—Brother Albert through me, wishes to renew his subscription. Inclosed find order for $3—$2 for his paper, and $1 for God's Plan of Salvation, which you will please forward to Brother E. M. Gibbs, Blue Ridge, Henderson county, N. C. I received a letter from him, not long ago, full of Christian determination for the truth's sake. May God help him to the end.

I leave for Kentucky in a day or two and will be absent some time. I hope to meet the brethren and be able to converse once more with them on the glorious theme of our Lord's return and kingdom. May you be able to continue your noble duty in the Master's cause.

Believe me sincerely your brother in Christ. W. I CROCKETT.

Editor Restitution:—Another year has just gone by, only to be remembered by events that happened during that period. Many of those are so well sealed in our minds that they will never be disremembered. God our Heavenly Father has still seen fit to extend the brittle thread of life to some of us, while, on the other hand, many have passed into death—the old, the middle-aged, and the young. Many that were far better by practice than we are, have paid the penalty of a violated law recorded in Genesis ii. 17. Why this is I will let some one else answer.

I see that THE RESTITUTION is placed in your care for another year. May you still endeavor to make it interesting to its many readers, north, south, east and west, indened with the glad tidings of the coming kingdom to be established on the new earth, with Christ the King. And may we be able to say in that day, as the apostle said, "I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, and not for me only but for all them that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 7, 28. So, if the above quotation be correct, the Christ is going to appear to us, and not we to him up in heaven. But many wonder why a man can harbor such an idea as this. Paul says, "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." Titus i. 2. "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." ii. 13. "Who gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time." So the time is not yet due for our Lord's return. His charge to the apostles was, "What I say unto you I say unto all, watch." We should always be ready to give a reason for our hope, and whether it is based on facts or imagination.

Our last conference at this place in October last was not as pleasant as it should have been. Brother Myers failed to be with us. Brethren Butts and Finn, of Missouri, Brethren Kinsey, Lawver and other preaching brethren were present.

With brotherly love to one and all,
ROBERT BAKER.

Mr. Edson L. Clark, in his new work on The Races of European Turkey, says that gypsies are really an offshoot from the Hindoos, being simply a wandering tribe from the valley of the Indus. Their language is a branch of the ancient Sanskrit, akin to the modern dialects of Northern India. A modern Hindoo would probably make himself understood to any tribe of gypsies in Europe.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Priceless Truth.

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. John viii. 31, 32.

Truth is as inestimable as the liberty it confers, and is as durable as the throne of its great Author. The spirit of truth, and the spirit of error, are as opposite to each other as light and darkness, as death and life. The one gives liberty, whilst the other gives bondage.

Truth sanctifies and makes free. In the last prayer of Jesus with his apostles, recorded in John xvii., the following language occurs: "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Verse 17. Jesus not only gives a brief answer to the question, "What is truth?" but he also recognizes its sanctifying power. To sanctify is, "in a general sense, to cleanse, purify, or make holy; to reprunde, set apart, or appoint to a holy use; to make holy; to make free from guilt; to—cure from violation." Webster's definition. Hence, if we are to be sanctified through the truth, error has no sanctifying power whatever, no matter how conscientiously it may be held or promulgated. We dare not base our theory of acceptance with God upon conscientiousness alone. A man may be honest and yet yet be wrong. The history of Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles, antecedent to his conversion, is a good illustration of the above statement. "He made havoc of the church, entering into every house and haling men and women, committed them to prison." Acts viii. 3. The apostle elsewhere says: "Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day." Acts xxiii. 1. Hence, Paul had a good conscience while persecuting the church. He verily thought that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. These things he did ignorantly in unbelief while he was a blasphemer and a persecutor.

Would this ignorance and unbelief, though coupled with sincerity, have saved him? Certainly not. There was yet a work for him to do. When his conscience was illuminated with the rays of divine truth, he saw the things that were formerly gain to him were loss to Christ. He immediately espoused the cause of Christ, which he had so recently opposed with such relentless hatred, and became the leading champion in its defense. Instead of blaspheming, he now prays, instead of breathing out threatenings and slaughter, he now speaks the words of truth and soberness.
